The gentlemen on this floor who have cast reflections on this committee have shown zeal without knowledge in their comments on its origin and action. They have misunderstood or misrepresented both. This committee originated in a great want equally felt in this House and in the great communities directly interested in the free navigation of this mighty inland artery. It was because it was found that the existing committees were not adequate to grapple with this question in its full extent, and to bestow upon it the time and labor requisite for a full understanding of the whole question, that the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River was created by this House, and its works can speak for it, short as has been the term of its existence. This is not, and never has been since the first session of the Forty-fifth Congress, a mere levee committee, nor the representative of mere local interests. Its scope has been broader and wider, embracing not alone the question of the levees or alluvial lands, but all questions connected with the improvement of the navigation of the river. Although its duties have never been technically defined in the rules themselves, yet the very title given to the committee defines the jurisdiction, duties, and powers intended to be conferred by this House upon it, the free exercise of which this House has repeatedly sanctioned by its action. Considering the great national importance of the matters confided to it, this committee has investigated thoroughly the whole subject, and after mature deliberation came to the unanimous conclusion that no piecemeal legislation, made up out of petty appropriations here and there, to conciliate local interests, no log-rolling job, would meet the wants and wishes of the great community who dwell on its banks or those of its tributaries, or the still greater multitude whose interests are directly connected with it.

In the course of their investigations they found that this stream had been long neglected and its importance never thoroughly understood, owing to the obstruction of the bar at its mouth, now happily removed. They also found that, although surveys had been made of isolated portions by Army engineers and the Coast Survey, no general system, plan, or theory of improvement had been agreed or acted upon; and it was to supply this great want and provide for a general system of improvement, including the permanent location and deepening of the channel, and protection of its banks against overflow, that the committee reported the bill, now a law, for surveying, examining, and reporting some definite plan to cover these objects. That commission has been and still is at work in maturing a plan and solving the great problem which has so long agitated the country and on which heretofore there has been such a diversity of opinion. When that report shall be submitted to this House, would it be fair or proper or just to this committee and to the House which clothed it with these powers and sanctioned its action, to cast a slur upon the committee, and stultify itself by depriving it of its powers, on the very threshold of its execution, by turning the matter over to another committee hitherto unconnected with it, except incidentally by its general jurisdiction over commerce, and necessarily uninformed on this special subject-matter. The whole opposition to giving its just jurisdiction to this committee seems based on the fact that certain local interests might be prejudiced, or combinations prevented, for securing benefits for certain localities through personal arrangements.

I am perfectly satisfied that it is the general sentiment throughout the country, as I believe it is on the floor of this House, and all the indications of public opinion, outside of a narrow and unstatesmanlike view of local interests, go to confirm it—that the creation and work of this committee have been eminently wise and useful, and that it should be encouraged and aided in perfecting the great work which has been so well begun. Large and influential conventions indorsing and approving its labors have been held at different points in the Mississippi Valley and elsewhere, and urgent calls have been made upon Congress to persevere on the path in which it has commenced its progress. While I cheerfully concede to the Committee on Commerce all the credit justly its due, for the ability which it has manifested in the performance of the duties assigned to it, I must yet insist that as regards this special subject they have never yet had the opportunity of devoting to it the time and investigation necessary to a full comprehension of it, and could not possibly, in the midst of their multifarious duties, bestow upon it the time and attention necessary to such a thorough understanding of so complex a question. For, should this question, which has been so thoroughly investigated by the committee to which it has been specially assigned, be relegated to another committee, to whom it will be a comparatively new question, the whole work will have to be gone over, and long and unnecessary delays created, of infinite detriment to great public interests, if not to the defeat and destruction of the end in view. Although it is true that in this matter I am representing the interests and the views of my own immediate constituents, yet, sir, I claim also to represent a far wider field and a much larger constituency as well. This is no narrow local interest which the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman represents and was created to guard and to foster. It is as wide and as deep as the great river which washes the shores of an empire in extent, production, and population, whose wants and wishes have found their true exponent in the committee appointed to meet and answer them, without touching or trenching on the rights of other members of this great family of States—separate like the billows, but one as the sea.

The voice of the people of the Mississippi Valley has come up here through their conventions like the roar of the waters of their great river, and that voice has been one of approval of the action of the House in creating a special guardian of their interests and those of the entire country, which are equally enlisted in the perfection of the work so happily begun. It is easier to destroy than to create, and the work of destruction advocated by those who are jealous of or misunderstand our work can, if successful, result only in mischief, not in good.

The chairman of the Committee on Commerce is a strong man, but there was once a man stronger than he, who pulled down a structure stronger than even ours. Yet he should take warning from the fate of Sampson, and seek to aid us in rebuilding, not task his strength in the work of pulling down that which even he might and would prove incompetent to rebuild.

Mr. Chairman, I leave the decision of this question in the hands of the House, confident that it will not lend itself to the child's play of pulling down one day its own work of the day before.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of internal improvements. I believe in developing the resources of this country, but I think I see in this proposition one of such magnitude as to require more careful consideration than we are likely to give it to-day. If it be what I believe it is, I think we should stand hesitating on the brink of the Mississippi before we plunge in. The Mississippi and its tributaries! How simple in expression, how comprehensive in effect. Stretching from the Alleghanies to the great Father of Waters on the one hand, and from the Rocky Mountains down the channel of the Missouri and its tributaries on the other! A stream which covers all the internal relations of this great country. Every great river which flows from the North to the South to be submitted to this committee which was organized for the purpose of establishing and carrying on the levees at the mouth of the Mississippi River!

Mr. Chairman, I believe in giving liberal appropriations for the improvement of that great delta, but I do not believe in making every improvement in every river in the North, in the East, or in the West dependent upon how much we are willing to vote for the levees of the Mississippi River. You who live on the Wabash, you who live on the Allegheny, you who live on the Monongahela, you who live on the Missouri, or the Ohio, or any other river which flows into that great stream, are your appropriations and your improvements to be dependent on the committee which is charged only and organized to be charged only with the duties of establishing and maintaining the levees at the mouth of the Mississippi River?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. ROBESON. I am through.

Mr. COX. I think, Mr. Chairman, that this debate is useful. It ought not to be suppressed all at once, especially after the magnificent remarks made by the gentleman from New Jersey. I am in favor of the proposition of my friend from Mississippi. Why?

A MEMBER. Of course you are.

Mr. COX. I am not speaking ironically. [Laughter.] I want to see commerce divided. I want to see a unity given to one subject, to wit, the Mississippi River and its tributaries. Why, my friend from Missouri, in offering his amendment a moment ago, told us that the Committee on Commerce was so busy, so engrossed, so overwhelmed with business, that they could not take care of a deflection in the Saint Charles River. I knew that it was in danger of catalepsy. [Laughter.] I knew that they should be relieved, but I was not prepared to believe that my friend from Mississippi was to be the great "medicine man" to afford relief so promptly. [Laughter.]

What is the Mississippi River? Three thousand six hundred miles, and with its tributaries, the Missouri, the Ohio, and others, spreading everywhere, ten thousand miles, all borne along by the great law of gravitation, bearing down our produce to the ocean. And I am not sure, sir, when I reflect how much of our soil is held in solution by this river, as well as by the Missouri, that this question of the levees of the river should not be referred to the Committee on Agriculture. [Laughter.] I think a reasonable proportion of this business should go to the Agricultural Committee.

We have sent abroad this year four hundred millions of bushels of wheat. Our commerce has done that. Why not turn over commerce to the Committee on Agriculture? It is our Navy that protects our commerce. Why not turn over our naval affairs to the Committee on Agriculture? Why not turn the militia over to the Committee on Agriculture; for how can you equip the militia except with cornstalks? All these things at least tend toward that great element in the industries of our country which gives 87½ per cent. of all the products which we send abroad. Agriculture is our paramount interest. Let us combine commerce, buildings and grounds—grounds—and all these other interests in one grand, magnificent committee at the head of which stands my distinguished friend from Ohio, General LE FEVRE. And then we will see unity in the administration of our affairs.

Mr. WHITE. It is your colleague, Mr. COVERT, who stands at the head of that committee.

Mr. COX. I was thinking of the investigating committee. My distinguished colleague, I know, is engaged in agriculture. He represents also another sort of industry on the coast connected with fishing.

But the Committee on Commerce has absorbed nearly everything. Why, sir, the gentleman from Louisiana, the other day, from the Committee on Commerce, actually reported a bill here about the telephone. The next thing we will hear about the Committee on Commerce they will be after the telescope, the megaphone, the transit of Venus—everything connected with scientific improvement—all will go to my distinguished friend from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.] [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Texas undertook to tell us something about the "dog under the wagon." I would like to see the watch-dog of the Treasury under every one of the wagons that are depleting the Treasury; the wagon that is taking from the Treasury the contents of its strong box; the wagon which, under the log-rolling system, in spite of all my friend says, without debate, without possibility of amendment, by a vote of two-thirds, in defiance of every legislative canon known to civilized governments, provides appropriations for all those little streams within the States, not like the Father of Waters and its tributaries, not like the great lakes or the harbors on the Atlantic coast, but all the contemptible little streams, the appropriations for which fill sixteen pages of the Statutes at Large and do no good except to help a few men in their congressional districts.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FRYE. I desire to offer a substitute so that there may be some other proposition for the Committee of the Whole to discuss.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to debate it now?

Mr. FRYE. I wish it to be read that gentlemen may have an opportunity of discussing it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fill the blank as follows:
"To the levees of the Mississippi River."
So that the clause will read, if the amendment be adopted:
"To the levees of the Mississippi River: to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River."

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to protest against the proposition of the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. CHALMERS.] I am aware I have spoken frequently, but I cannot permit this to pass without saying at least a word. I shall do it in one minute, and then shall give the rest of my time to the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL.]

This Mississippi business was started by referring the subject to a committee on the levees. And now it is understood everywhere in this House that the question to be decided is whether or not we will embark on a policy which involves an expenditure of $500,000,000. That is the question that is to be settled. We have an able commission investigating the subject, and we can wait for its report. The country desires to be fair and liberal in this matter. Let us get that report, and let us decide upon a broad and general policy. But we are not in a position to do so as yet. We have not the information now.

Before we have heard the first report from the commission we have here a rule establishing a permanent committee on improvements of the Mississippi River, and, moreover, adding to that river every one of its tributaries from the Alleghanies to the Rocky Mountains, and north to Lake Winnepeg. All is to be put under the care of one magnificent committee, and at the same time they are to have the power to report their own appropriations.

I say again the power to order the work to be done and the distribution of the money should be in different hands. If the pending proposition be adopted we are giving to this committee the grandest opportunity for log-rolling that was ever offered by the American Congress. It is proposed that we shall give them the power of appropriating for every Kiskiminetas all along the line when we have not yet decided on the levees. You have not dared to leave the river and harbor bill to the Committee of the Whole. The moment you do that it runs up to fifteen millions; and therefore, for very shame, the river and harbor bill has been taken from the Committee of the Whole and put through on Monday under a suspension of the rules. So with the magnificent bill that would come from this committee. Put it there if you dare; and when every little stream is put in, you cannot for shame pass such a bill except by a two-third vote.

Mr. CHALMERS. We are more than willing that an amendment to the rules should be made that no bill from this committee should pass under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. HAWLEY. That would not do any good. I yield now to the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. HASKELL. I have a word or two to say against this proposed amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi. Because I am strongly in favor of the improvement of that river I am sorry to seem for a moment to antagonize that which the friends of the improvement of the Mississippi River place before this House. I object to this amendment not because I am an enemy to that improvement, but because I am a friend of it. It is proposed to divide the Committee on Commerce into two committees—to create two independent committees, each one charged with the subject of improvements, enough, if carried out, to entirely absorb and profitably absorb all the surplus revenues of the Government.

There will surely be a conflict of interest between those two committees. Should the Committee on the Mississippi River and its Tributaries bring in here a bill appropriating the amount which in their judgment they may deem to be wise for the improvement of that river and its tributaries, the sum will be so large that when the Committee on Commerce shall report its regular bill the conservative members of the House will be obliged to defeat both of the bills. That will almost surely be the result.

One committee, and one only, ought to have charge of the whole subject of the improvement of the navigable waters of the United States. Is it fair to assume that the Committee on Commerce, presided over by a western man and composed of representative men from different portions of the Union, will be less favorable to a wise improvement of one of our important navigable streams than will be a certain other committee? Is it necessary that all these wise, economical, prudent schemes for the improvement of the business of this country shall be parceled out to separate committees? If that is done, then, as a matter of practical parliamentary legislative result, we will find ourselves here on this floor quarreling about questions of jurisdiction, quarreling as to the amounts which we have received each for his favorite scheme. And the bills for those purposes will be so overloaded that the whole business will break down in one crash. That will be the result of it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In view of the fact that there has been such unlimited discussion on the pending amendment, and that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] desires to be heard, I ask my friend from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] not to press at this time his motion that the committee rise.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There are others here who desire to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will resume the consideration of this matter when it next meets. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CARLISLE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the proposed revision of the rules reported from the Committee on Rules and had come to no resolution thereon.

A MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed a bill, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, of the following title:

A bill (S. No. 885) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses," approved March 3, 1879.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution to print 3,000 sets of the five volumes of the reports of the Fish Commissioner; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 157) for the relief of M. M. Herr.

FORESTRY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

In reply to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 3d instant, requesting the Commissioner of Agriculture to forward any facts or statistics in his office on the subject of forestry not heretofore published from his Department, the following report received from the Commissioner upon this subject is hereby transmitted.

R. B. HAYES.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 5, 1880.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move that the message, with the accompanying report, be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. CARLISLE. And printed.

The message, with the accompanying report, was accordingly referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

LOANS ON REAL ESTATE BY NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, authorized to report at any time, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. No. 1909) to authorize national banks to make loans upon mortgage of real estate; which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PEORIA, ILLINOIS.

Mr. BOYD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4245) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Peoria, in the State of Illinois; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

MESSENGER FOR COMMITTEES.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee of Accounts:

Resolved, That there be allowed for the Committees on Foreign Affairs and Census a messenger, who shall act as clerk to said committees when required.

TAKING THE CENSUS.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on the Census the bill of the Senate No. 885, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses," approved March 3, 1879.

There was no objection; and the bill was accordingly taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Census, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to obtain consent of the House to concur in certain Senate amendments to a bill of the House in relation to furnishing the Hall, &c.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I have no objection to that.

CONTINGENT FUNDS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill of the House No. 3497, returned from the Senate with amendments, to provide for a deficiency in the appropriation for furniture and repairs of the same for the House of Representatives for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880.

There was no objection; and the bill with the amendments was taken from the Speaker's table.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

After line 5 insert:

"That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to meet certain contingent expenses of the Senate, namely:

"For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, for the fiscal year 1880, $20,000.

"For furniture and repairs of the same for the fiscal year 1879, $12."

Amend the title so that it will read:

"An act to provide for deficiencies in the appropriations for contingent expenses of the Senate and House of Representatives."

Mr. BLOUNT. I have been directed by the Committee on Appropriations to move that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXPENDITURES IN THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a statement of the disbursements of the contingent funds of the several bureaus of that Department; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. DE LA MATYR asked unanimous consent to have withdrawn from the files of the House papers in the case of Daniel D. Ricketts; referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. RICHMOND asked unanimous consent to have withdrawn from the files of the House papers in the case of Robert M. Ely—no adverse report; referred to the Committee on War Claims.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SHELLEY, until Tuesday next, on account of important business;

To Mr. YOCUM, for two days, on account of important business; and

To Mr. HERNDON, until Tuesday next, on account of important business.

Mr. MILLS. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. THOMPSON,] that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

By Mr. AINSLIE: The petitions of C. L. Valentine and 48 citizens of Pierce City; of S. S. Fenn, Robert Watson, and 84 citizens of Mount Idaho, and of W. S. Williams, W. C. E Moore and 16 others, of the second congressional district of New Jersey; and of William B. Cook and 12 others, late soldiers of the Union Army, against the passage of Senate bill No. 496, known as the sixty-surgeon bill—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of David S. Pedrick and 20 other Union soldiers of New Jersey, for the passage of the Weaver bill, relating to the pay of soldiers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of Rees D. Thomas and 38 others, late soldiers in the Union Army, for the equalization of bounties—to the same committee.

By Mr. SPARKS: The petition of soldiers of Illinois, for the passage of the Weaver bill—to the same committee.

By Mr. STEPHENS: Memorial of James Crutchett, relating to the manufacture of gas—to the Committee on Manufactures.

By Mr. STONE: The petition of Jere Spaulding and 31 others, citizens of Kent County, Michigan, for the amendment of the patent laws so as to protect innocent users of patented articles—to the Committee on Patents.

Also, the petition of Jere Spaulding and 31 others, citizens of Kent County, Michigan, for laws to alleviate the oppressions of transportation monopolies—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. VAN VOORHIS: The petition of Thomas McBride, for an investigation of the manner in which he was deprived of certain land entered by him upon which is now located the city of Grantville, Utah Territory, and for relief—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

By Mr. WARNER: The petitions of B. F. McIntyre and 45 others, of Washington County, Ohio, and of H. C. Selby and 72 others, of Athens County, Ohio, for modification of the patent laws so as to make manufacturers and vendors of patented articles alone liable for infringements—to the Committee on Patents.

Also, the petitions of H. C. Selby, of Athens County, Ohio, and 66 others, and of W. A. Deval and 44 others, for Government regulation of interstate railroads—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CHARLES G. WILLIAMS: The petition of ex-soldiers of Sharon, Wisconsin, for the passage of the Weaver soldier bill—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WILLIS: The petition of O. M. Rood, to be refunded an amount paid for United States revenue-stamps placed upon instruments rendered useless by act of Congress—to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. WISE: Petitions from 321 soldiers of Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, for the passage of the Weaver soldier bill—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WRIGHT: The petition of Thomas O'Connell and 30 others, citizens of Atkinson Precinct, Nebraska, for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 269) known as the Wright supplement to the homestead act—to the Committee on Public Lands.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 6, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EQUESTRIAN PICTURE OF GENERAL WINFIELD SCOTT.

Mr. DICKEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4246) to provide for the purchase of Troye's equestrian picture of General Winfield Scott; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

STEAM-YACHT W. J. GORDON.

Mr. HUBBELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4247) to change the name of the steam pleasure-yacht W. J. Gordon to Salmo; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

INTERNATIONAL POLAR CONGRESS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to furnish this House, if not incompatible with the public interests, with any information he may have received of the proceedings of the international polar congress convened in Hamburg, Germany, October 1, 1879.

JOHN WILEY.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4248) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John Wiley; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CINCINNATI CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. CARLISLE. I am instructed by the select committee appointed to investigate the congressional elections at Cincinnati to ask that the testimony taken by the committee be printed for their use.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

PORT OF ENTRY IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. WASHBURN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4249) making Saint Vincent, in the State of Minnesota, a port of entry, in lieu of Pembina, in the Territory of Dakota; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SETTLERS ON RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. WASHBURN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4250) to extend the provisions of an act approved June 22, 1874, entitled "An act for the relief of settlers on railroad lands;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

HALVOR G. STORDOCK.

Mr. WASHBURN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4251) granting a pension to Halvor G. Stordock; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETER T. SAFFORD.

Mr. WASHBURN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4252) granting a pension to Peter T. Safford, of Saint Cloud, Stearns County, Minnesota; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JOHN N. MORRILL.

Mr. WASHBURN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4253) granting a pension to John N. Morrill, of Otsego, Wright County, Minnesota; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

LIGHT-HOUSE, ETC., BLOODY POINT BAR.

Mr. HENRY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4254) making an appropriation for the erection of a light-house and fog-bell on Bloody Point Bar, Kent Island; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SOPHIA A. MELSON.

Mr. HENRY also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4255) granting a pension to Sophia A. Melson; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IMPROVEMENTS OF THE LAKES.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Ohio, requesting the Senators and Representatives of that State to urge the completion of certain improvements along the lakes; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BRIDGE OVER DETROIT RIVER.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, also, by unanimous consent, presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Ohio, requesting the Senators and Representatives of that State to use their influence against the construction of a bridge over the Detroit River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

EDUCATION OF COLORED YOUTH.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, also, by unanimous consent, presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Ohio, requesting the Senators and Representatives of that State to use their influence to have extended to Wilberforce University and Albany Enterprise Academy the provisions of the bill proposing that the unclaimed pay and bounties of colored soldiers be invested by the Secretary of the Treasury as a trust fund for the education of colored youth; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. UPSON, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the following bills; and the same were referred to the Committee of Claims:

A bill (H. R. No. 3024) for the relief of the heirs of Peter Gallaher;

A bill (H. R. No. 3673) for the relief of C. M. Terrill, paymaster United States Army; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3025) for the relief of Edmund E. Schreiner.

GEORGE W. WATERS.

Mr. CALKINS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4256) granting a pension to George W. Waters, of Lake County, Indiana; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JANE STOUT.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4257) granting a pension to Jane Stout, of New Philadelphia, Schuylkill County, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BUILDING, WILMINGTON, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4258) to provide for the erection of a public building at Wilmington, North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

FINDING OF ARMY BOARD.

Mr. JORGENSEN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4259) to carry into effect the finding of the Army board convened under special order No. 228, Department of Washington, dated September 13, 1864, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. JORGENSEN. I move its reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CONGER. Let the bill be read, for the title does not tell what it is.

The SPEAKER. It is only for reference.

Mr. CONGER. I know that, but I wish to have it read.

The bill was read.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF CHIEF ENGINEER KING.

Mr. MORSE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring therein,) That there be printed 500 copies of the report of Chief Engineer J. W. King, United States Navy, on the war ships and navies of the world, for the use of the Navy Department.

MRS. ELLISON.

Mr. MARTIN, of North Carolina, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4260) for the relief of Mrs. Ellison, of North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

WILLIAM T. REVEL AND OTHERS.

Mr. COFFROTH, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 202) for the relief of William T. Revel, Joseph F. Knipe, Richard Granger, John J. Tytherleigh, Harry C. Acton, Charles W. Henry, Walter H. Robinson, and Perry S. Goodsell; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Accounts.

TIMOTHY QUINN.

On motion of Mr. SPARKS, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 3569) for the relief of Timothy Quinn, and the same was referred to the Committee of Claims.

MARY CALLAN.

Mr. SPARKS also, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the application to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of Mary Callan, on condition there has been no adverse report; and the order was accordingly made for the withdrawal of the papers.

LOUIS A. KENT.

Mr. SPARKS also, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 3450) for the relief of Lewis A. Kent; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. BROWER.

Mr. SPARKS also, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 3451) for the relief of George W. Brower; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HENRY B. EASTMAN.

Mr. SPARKS also, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4261) for the relief of Henry B. Eastman; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANNEL BETWEEN LAKE ONTARIO AND IRONDUQUOIT BAY.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4262) to remove the obstructions from the channel leading from Lake Ontario into Ironduquoit Bay; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES RYBACK.

Mr. GIBSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4263) for the relief of James Ryback; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

JUDITH BROWN.

Mr. RICHMOND, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4264) to authorize the payment of $66.09 to Judith Brown, one-seventh of the pension of Margaret Duncan; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

DANIEL LOWRY.

Mr. BAYNE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4265) for the relief of Daniel Lowry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LOUISVILLE AND PORTLAND CANAL.

Mr. WILLIS, by unanimous consent, was granted permission to print in the RECORD, as part of the debates, some remarks on the bill for completing the Louisville and Portland Canal. [See Appendix.]

REVENUE STEAMER ON COAST OF ALASKA.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending an appropriation of $30,000 to enable him to maintain a revenue steamer on the coast of Alaska; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SAMUEL CHASE BARNEY.

Mr. TALBOTT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4266) for the relief of Samuel Chase Barney; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

EVENING SESSION FOR PENSION CASES.

Mr. COFFROTH. I move, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent that when the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar pension bills pending there be passed over, and in lieu of their consideration to-day that Wednesday evening next, at seven and a half o'clock, be set apart for the consideration of pension bills upon the Private Calendar, in their order, as well as reports from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. CONGER. Is to-day objection day in the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. CONGER. Then I do not see we will gain anything by this motion.

The SPEAKER. It takes out of the Committee of the Whole of the House to-day all pension cases, and provides in accordance with the practice for many years that an evening be set apart to be devoted exclusively to the consideration of reports from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and for such cases as may be upon the Private Calendar.

Mr. CONGER. If this be objection day, we will gain at least something in the consideration of these pension cases.

The SPEAKER. There will be something gained in reference to the other bills upon the Calendar to which no objection shall be made. Then in reference to pension cases there will be a great deal gained by giving to those cases an entire evening.

Mr. CONGER. It seems to me pension bills are of the most immediate importance, and deserve the first consideration.

The SPEAKER. That is the reason why the Chair wants a special evening set apart for the consideration of these cases. To-day the Committee on Invalid Pensions can have only one hour in which to submit its reports, while if an evening be set apart for that purpose all the pension cases which that committee may be ready to report will be taken up for consideration and action, and the cases now upon the Private Calendar may also be taken up for consideration and action.

Mr. CONGER. We might pass fifteen or twenty of these pension cases to-day, but I do not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has made the request at the instance of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. BUCKNER. I object.

Mr. COFFROTH. Then I move by unanimous consent that, disconnected from the morning hour, Wednesday evening be set apart at half past seven o'clock for the consideration of pension bills pending in the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to be this, that Wednesday evening be set apart for the consideration of pension cases: first, those upon the Private Calendar, in the order in which they stand; and, secondly, such cases as may be reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. SAMFORD. I object.

Mr. COFFROTH. I move, then, to suspend the rules for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. This is a change of the rules, and can only be done by a suspension of the rules, which motion is in order only on Monday. The Chair, however, will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, on Monday, to submit that motion.

PUBLIC BUILDING, COLUMBUS, OHIO.

Mr. CONVERSE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4267) to authorize the construction of a fire-proof building at Columbus, Ohio; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. McLANE. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. CHALMERS and Mr. BLAND asked for a division.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 122, noes 24.

Mr. CHALMERS demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused, only nine voting in favor thereof.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. McLANE moved to reconsider the vote by which his motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROPOSED EVENING SESSION ON WEDNESDAY.

Mr. COFFROTH. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SAMFORD] withdraws his objection to having a session on Wednesday night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] objected.

Mr. BUCKNER. I object to having night sessions so early.

Mr. PRICE. Better wait till the weather gets warmer.

TEXAS BORDER RAIDS.

Mr. UPSON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 3774) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to ascertain and report to Congress the amount of money expended and indebtedness assumed by the State of Texas in repelling, suppressing, and guarding against invasions, raids, incursions, and hostilities by Indians and Mexicans in said State and upon its borders and in frontier defense, and moved that the bill and amendment and accompanying report be printed and recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN OWINS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at twenty minutes to one o'clock, and this being Friday reports from committees of a private nature are in order. The unfinished business coming over from the morning hour of Friday last is the bill (H. R. No. 3328) to remove the political disabilities of John Owins, of Portsmouth, Virginia. The pending question is on the passage of the bill, on which the yeas and nays had been demanded. The bill will be again read.

The bill was read. It removes all political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States from John Owins, of Portsmouth, Virginia.

Mr. CONGER. The point was made on the petition that it was not in conformity with the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution; that it did not bring the party asking a removal of his disabilities within the provisions of the constitutional amendment.

The SPEAKER. The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and the question was on the demand for the yeas and nays on its passage.

Mr. CONGER. Let the Clerk read the petition. The only point I desire to make is that if petitioners come here for amnesty under the fourteenth amendment they must bring themselves within the rule.

Mr. GOODE. If the gentleman from Michigan will pay attention to the language of the petition he will see that while it contains but four lines the word "respectful" occurs in it three times. It would be impossible for any citizen to make a more respectful application to this House than is contained in that petition.

Mr. CONGER. There is no doubt about the petition having the word "respectful" often enough; but it is a different question whether it is respectful to call a war of rebellion a having engaged in the service of the Confederate States. When the constitutional amendment specifies those who have been engaged in insurrection and rebellion, this party respectfully says he was engaged in the service of the Confederate States.

Mr. GOODE. I submit to the gentleman there is nothing in the fourteenth amendment that requires any petition. The fourteenth amendment to the Constitution disqualifies certain classes and provides that they may be relieved of their disabilities by a two-thirds vote of each House. I submit further to the gentleman, that while it has been the practice of Congress to require each person desiring the removal of his disabilities to make an application in respectful terms, heretofore no form of petition has ever been prescribed; and I undertake to say the gentleman cannot recall an instance in which a respectful application like this has ever been rejected. It does seem to me to be too late in the day, fifteen years after the termination of the war, to take a new departure like this, and require a man, before we will entertain his application at all, to come here and humble himself, as is required by the gentleman from Michigan, by writing the words "traitor" and "rebel" with his own hand upon his own brow; to get down, as it were, in the dust, and with his hand on his mouth and his mouth in the dust cry "unclean," before a great Government like this will consider his application at all. And certainly there is nothing in the present case to require such a new departure as that. The petitioner is now an old man, and was once an humble warrant officer in the Navy of the United States. He is a good citizen, and as such is ready and willing to discharge every duty incumbent upon him. He comes now and makes a respectful application for the removal of his political disabilities. Will you withhold amnesty until he humiliates himself before you? In my judgment no such abasement would be required by the great body of the American people, and I know it would not be required by the gallant soldiers of the Union army. With the generous and the brave the hour of triumph is the hour for magnanimity.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Virginia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT,] who reported the bill, is recognized.

Mr. CONGER. If I had any right to the floor I yielded it to the gentleman from Virginia and now resume the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan in due course.

Mr. CONGER. Very well.

Mr. KNOTT. It is perhaps due to gentlemen who object to the passage of this bill that I should state the facts in relation to the petitioner which have come to my knowledge since the bill was reported from the committee. The petitioner here is an old man who was appointed a warrant officer in the Navy in 1840. He is a poor, obscure, and comparatively unlettered man, and who never has had and probably never will have an office at the hands of the General Government or the government of his State. He being old desires that if he be under any disability by reason of his participation in the war between the States it shall be removed by the Government with the magnanimity with which it has heretofore entertained all such applications. Owing perhaps to his want of education, or more likely owing to the fact that he felt it impossible that a point could be made upon a respectful petition, he asked this favor as briefly as possible. These are all the facts within my knowledge touching the character of this petition. I believe, Mr. Speaker, debate is not in order as the House is dividing.

Mr. CONGER. Already we see from the prominence given to this matter by the two distinguished gentlemen who have spoken on it that there is a point of some importance involved in the form of this request. There are perhaps not two men in this House more clear in their ideas of constitutional law than the distinguished gentlemen who have just expressed their views, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GOODE] and the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary. Now, if I alone misunderstood this matter, why does one of these gentlemen say that it is asking too much of a man who fifteen years ago was engaged in treason and insurrection and rebellion against this Government to require him to come now and, with his hands before his eyes and his knees to the ground, beg to be pardoned for his treason and acknowledge himself a traitor? Has it come to this? Is there a statute of limitation on rebellion and treason to be applied when a man comes to invoke benefits of amnesty?

Why is this man here if it is not that he may say, in accordance with the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, that he was engaged in insurrection and rebellion against his Government, that he falls within the purview of the condemnation of that amendment, and asks "respectfully" three times, if you please, to be relieved from the penalty which the law laid upon him fifteen years ago, which the law imposed upon him seven years ago, and ten years ago, and thirteen years ago, and imposes upon him now? If the gentleman desires that this proceeding may go on with reference to the esthetic elements, with candyness, and a tender regard for those who have to admit that they have been traitors, but do not want to admit it after fifteen years, then let us have another amendment to the Constitution. Enough of that.

The gentlemen who of all others should know what is the crime condemned by the law, who of all others should know that the only way to avoid the political disabilities consequent upon the commission of that crime is through the provision of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, where that provision relates only to insurrection and rebellion against the United States, should also know as a pleader that the man must bring himself within the rule. He must come to this House and show that he was in some way engaged in insurrection and rebellion and that he asks to be relieved from the consequences of those acts.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GOODE] says it is sufficient to follow the custom, that no form of petition has been prescribed, that there is no reality in all this matter, that fifteen years have passed away, and that a man is standing upon trifles who brings up the old war. If that be so, why not let every man come in here and say that he was engaged "in the late unpleasantness;" why not let any man come in here and say at the same time he was so engaged that possibly he comes under the disability rule?

Sir, we have heard too often from men upon that side these rose-colored epithets and terms, this esthetic defense of insurrection and rebellion, which they seem to desire to have perpetuated on our printed record. There is a constant, insidious, continuous effort made by members of this House on the other side, from day to day, and from week to week, and from year to year, to incorporate into the literature of this House smooth-sounding terms in place of "rebellion," of "treason," and "insurrection," until if any one calls for the use of those terms that have always been considered proper heretofore, gentlemen rise in their places and rebuke those who call for the use of the old Anglo-Saxon words, for the use of the old American definitions.

It is that spirit which I myself desire to rebuke. It is that spirit prevalent in the country, in all the South, showing a desire by the very terms used in this House to encourage that which I will not submit to when a legal document is presented here and terms are used in it which have no foundation in fact. And, Mr. Speaker, those around me here, on this side of the House, have shown a disposition, I am sorry to say, to smooth over this matter. Every one of the gentlemen on this side, from the very fact that they are here, represent a constituency nineteen-twentieths of whom would spurn them from their places if the issue was made whether they were to give these rose-colored names to treason and traitors, to insurrection and to rebellion, and to all that long system of wrong and fraud and violence which has filled our land with graves and which has filled the homes of our constituents with mourning. Yet the other day, when the very petition itself was an insult to every soldier, even my friends around me here recorded their votes, and, so far as they could, the voice of their constituents, in favor of the declaration that to them it made no difference what delicate, nice-sounding terms were used here.

Thank God, I am not one of those who have that record. I trust my remarks will call the attention of the people of the North, of the soldiers of the North, to this tendency on this side of the House even to forget all the dismal, horrible past; to smooth it over here by our votes and by the interpolation of a new kind of literature in the proceedings of this House. Sir, if I stand alone here in opposing this kind of petitions, I will stand here, and as often as they come into this House, while I am a member of it, I give fair notice that I will raise the question upon them, and, so far as I may, will oppose their reception and any action whatever upon such petitions.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I desire to be heard.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COX.) The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. My point of order is that debate is not now in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not in order except by unanimous consent, the previous question having been ordered upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Then I object to further debate. The gentleman from Michigan has had his speech, and I now call for a vote.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the objection. I would like to be heard for a few moments. I am not going to do any harm by what I shall say.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I regard this as an unwise and unprofitable discussion, and I object to any further debate.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I notify the gentleman from New York and the House that upon the first opportunity to get the floor I shall reply to the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that on last Friday the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, and the yeas and nays were demanded on the passage of the bill.

Mr. KEIFER. I hope there will be no objection to hearing gentlemen on the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection has been made.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, (to Mr. KEIFER.) I will let you hear me after a while.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the objection will be withdrawn.

Mr. FINLEY. I object to debate.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being—ayes 32, noes 67.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, I believe the petition has been read a number of times, but I would like to hear it once more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota calls for the reading of the petition. Is there objection to the reading? [A pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FINLEY. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair the objection comes too late.

The petition was read, as follows:

PORTSMOUTH, VIRGINIA, January 14, 1880.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, Washington, D. C.:

I respectfully represent that on the 7th day of March, 1842, I entered the United States Navy as a warrant officer, (gunner,) and resigned on the 19th day of April, 1861, to enter the confederate service.

I now respectfully ask that my political disabilities be removed by your honorable body.

Respectfully,

JOHN OWINS.

The question was taken on the passage of the bill; and there were—yeas 170, nays 41, not voting 81; as follows:

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the bill was passed.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. WARNER. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If he were present, I should vote in the affirmative. I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. BLAND. I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. CLAFLIN. If he were present, I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. MULDROW. My colleague, Mr. HOOKER, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. PHILIPS. My colleague from Missouri, Mr. CLARK, is detained from the House on account of sickness.

Mr. FORNEY. My colleague, Mr. HERNDON, is paired with the gentleman from New Hampshire, Mr. BRIGGS.

Mr. ELLIS. My colleague, Mr. ELAM, who is absent by reason of illness, is paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. DICK.

Mr. HERBERT. My colleague, Mr. LEWIS, who is paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. HARRIS, would, if present, vote "ay."

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. CLYMER, and the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. ROBESON, are paired.

Mr. CALKINS. I am paired with the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. CLARK, who, if present, would vote "ay."

Mr. BRIGGS. I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. HERNDON.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. CROWLEY, on all political questions. If he were present, I should vote in the affirmative. I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. The gentleman from New York, Mr. BAILEY, is paired with his colleague, Mr. LOUNSBERY.

Mr. STONE. The gentleman from Alabama, Mr. SHELLEY, is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. STARIN.

Mr. FISHER. My colleague, Mr. DICK, is paired with the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. ELAM.

Mr. LORING. My colleague, Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, is paired with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. LEWIS.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

JOSEPH A. SEWELL.

Mr. KNOTT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 3832) to remove the political disabilities of Joseph A. Sewell.

The bill, which was read, provides (two-thirds of each House concurring therein) that all political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States on Joseph A. Sewell be removed.

The petition accompanying the bill was read, as follows:

GLOUCESTER COUNTY, VIRGINIA, January 21, 1880.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The petition of Joseph A. Sewell, a citizen and resident of the Commonwealth of Virginia, respectfully represents that, by reason of the provisions of the third section of article 14 of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States and of the act of Congress commonly called the "amnesty act," he is under disabilities; that he is and has been since the close of the war of the rebellion a peaceable and quiet citizen of the United States, and willingly submits to and obeys the Constitution of the United States as amended and the laws of Congress in all respects.

Therefore your petitioner prays that his disabilities under the Constitution and the said act of Congress mentioned, incurred by reason of his participation in the rebellion against the United States, may be removed by an act to be passed by your honorable bodies.

And, as in duty bound, he will ever pray, &c.

JOSEPH A. SEWELL.

Mr. KNOTT demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof.

GIBBES & CO., CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. REED, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably a bill (S. No. 185) for the relief of Gibbes & Co., of Charleston, South Carolina.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Messrs. Gibbes & Co., of Charleston, South Carolina, the sum of $4,566.92, the same being a balance due said Gibbes & Co. on account of money deposited by them with the Secretary of the Treasury.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 185) for the relief of Gibbes & Co., having carefully examined the facts, and finding the report adopted by the committee at the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress and second session of the Forty-fifth Congress fully sustained, adopt the same, as follows:

"The facts in relation to this claim, furnished, at the request of your committee, in a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, dated July 10, 1876, are as follows:

"Late in the year 1865 certain cottons in Augusta, Georgia, were seized or detained by Treasury agents as confederate or blockade cottons. They were claimed by Gibbes & Co., of Charleston, as being in part their property, and in part the property of certain English firms, of whom they were the agents. Upon evidence produced by the claimants, the Secretary of the Treasury, on the 27th of February, 1866, directed that the cottons be restored to them upon their payment to the United States of all costs, charges, and expenses paid or incurred by Treasury agents in connection with the cottons restored.

"The amount so paid as charges was principally due to Savary & Co., who were engaged in putting in order Government cottons and in transporting and shipping the same. The amount of their bill for expenses, &c., on the Gibbes & Co. cotton, $44,217.48, was deposited by Gibbes & Co., and went into the hands of the United States Treasurer. Afterward it was ascertained by Gibbes & Co. that there had been delivered to them by mistake one hundred and sixty bales of cotton which did not belong to them, and which they accordingly returned. In the bill rendered by Savary & Co. there was charged the sum of $7,733.04 as expended by them on this lot of one hundred and sixty bales. This sum Gibbes & Co. claimed should be returned to them by the United States. To this demand Savary & Co. interposed a further bill of expenses, not included in their first bill, which they claimed they had incurred on the Gibbes & Co. cottons. This second bill amounted to $4,576.92. Gibbes & Co. allege that the charges made by Savary & Co. were generally excessive, but consented to receive at that time from the United States the difference between their bill of $7,733.04 and the bill of Savary & Co., $4,576.92, namely, $3,156.12. Afterward Savary & Co. applied to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment of their bill of $4,576.92. Upon a close examination of all their accounts, it was found that their charges which had been paid to them in connection with Government cottons and cottons seized, but released by the Secretary, were excessive to an amount greater than their claim of $4,576.92 against the United States. The payment of this claim was therefore refused.

"The balance (namely, $4,576.92) of the bill of $7,733.04 paid by Gibbes & Co., as expenses on cotton returned to the United States, has never been paid to them. Justice would seem to require the payment of this balance.

"In answer to inquiries made by your committee of the Secretary of the Treasury as to whether this claim, if properly presented, would not have been cognizable by the Department without the intervention of Congress, the Secretary, under date of July 13, 1876, replies that prior to the 30th day of March, 1868, the question to whom the sum of money now claimed by Gibbes & Co. was due, whether to them or to Savary & Co., had not been decided. On that day was passed the joint resolution of Congress requiring all moneys derived from captured and abandoned property to be covered into the Treasury. The money in question was included in that fund, and was accordingly covered into the Treasury. Since that time no appropriation has been made by Congress out of which the claim of Gibbes & Co. could properly have been paid."

A bill for the relief of Gibbes & Co. passed the Senate April 25, 1878, but failed to pass the House of Representatives.

Claimants are clearly entitled to the relief asked, and we therefore report back the bill and recommend its passage.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. REED moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, made adverse reports in the following cases; which were laid on the table, and the adverse reports ordered to be printed:

The petition of James A. Bowling, of Haywood County, Tennessee;

The petition of Needham Branch, of Haywood County, Tennessee;

The petition of A. G. Bankhead, of Memphis, Tennessee;

The petition of Abbie P. Anderson, of Shelby County, Tennessee;

The petition of J. W. Causey, of Alcorn County, Mississippi;

The petition of John J. Hill, of Humboldt, Gibson County, Tennessee;

The petition of Emma G. Abbott, of Memphis, Tennessee;

The petition of William L. Cleaman, of Newton County, Mississippi;

The petition of Volney S. Alston, of Ripley, Lauderdale County, Tennessee; and

The petition of Richard L. Andrews, of Hardeman County, Tennessee.

Mr. BRIGHT. I submit that all bills reported back from a committee go upon the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. These are adverse reports from the Committee on War Claims, and the petitions have been laid upon the table and the reports ordered to be printed under the rule of the House.

Mr. BRIGHT. But they should go to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not unless a motion is made and carried to that effect. If any gentleman wishes to have the cases referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar he can make a motion to that effect, but no such motion was made in either of the cases which were laid upon the table and the reports ordered to be printed.

MILEAGE OF WITNESSES AND JURORS IN COLORADO.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 3470, a bill (H. R. No. 4268) in relation to mileage of jurors and witnesses in the State of Colorado; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, provides that jurors and witnesses in the district and circuit courts of the United States in and for the State of Colorado shall be entitled to receive fifteen cents for each mile actually traveled in coming to or returning from said courts.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, under the general law witnesses and jurors only receive five cents a mile, while in Colorado the actual expense of travel is fifteen cents per mile. The Committee on the Judiciary have only increased the mileage of jurors and witnesses in this bill to what is required for actual expense of travel.

The Representative upon this floor from that State has informed the committee that it is impossible to get witnesses to attend the courts, and that the district attorney has been compelled to advance money out of his own pocket and to get free passes over the railroads in order to have the business of the country attended to in the courts in Colorado. I hope, therefore, there will be no objection to the passage of this bill.

Mr. CONGER. Does not that state of facts exist in other Territories?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I do not know; but I do know that it does exist in Colorado.

Mr. CONGER. This is a partial return to the old and proper rule of mileage and per diem, this return Territory by Territory and State by State, and I am glad of it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. That may be considered hereafter, but I now demand the previous question.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Will the gentleman let me move an amendment to include the Territory of Montana?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I cannot yield for that purpose.

Mr. REAGAN. Before the gentleman demands the previous question I should like to state that there is one feature of the bill, as it has been explained, allowing jurors and witnesses to receive their actual expenses——

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. It does not do that.

Mr. REAGAN. I understood the gentleman to say the bill provided for giving fifteen cents a mile or the actual expense.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I stated that from information derived from the Senators and Representative of the State of Colorado the actual expense of traveling in that State by public conveyance was fifteen cents a mile, and that witnesses could not attend the courts receiving only five cents a mile when their actual expense was fifteen cents.

Mr. REAGAN. What does the committee propose to allow?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Fifteen cents a mile.

Mr. HOUSE. This has reference alone, I will state, to the mileage of jurors and witnesses in Colorado and nothing else. Our information is, it costs fifteen cents a mile to travel in that State.

Mr. REAGAN. Is there any other place in the Union where it costs fifteen cents a mile to travel?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. We have not examined in reference to the whole Union.

Mr. REAGAN. I want to move to make it ten cents a mile.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I do not yield for that amendment, but insist upon my demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question recurred on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 107, nays 12.

So the motion was agreed to.

The bill was accordingly ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 89, noes 19.

Mr. REAGAN demanded the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were ayes 9, not a sufficient number.

Mr. REAGAN. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The morning hour has expired; but the previous question having been seconded and the main question ordered upon the passage of the bill, the expiration of the morning hour does not throw this bill over until the next morning hour, but under the rules it must be disposed of in one way or the other at this time. The yeas and nays have not been ordered, and the bill is passed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. Has not the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has.

Mr. BRIGHT. Then I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, this being objection day.

Mr. COBB. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee to yield to me to make a report from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BRIGHT. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

REFORM SCHOOL OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. COBB, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) making appropriations for the Reform School of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That to enable the commissioners of the District of Columbia to carry into effect the act approved March 3, 1879, which continues in force the thirteenth section of the "Act revising and amending the various acts establishing and relating to the Reform School of the District of Columbia," approved May 3, 1876, they be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the board of trustees of said Reform School of the District of Columbia the $2 per week for each boy committed thereto, as provided by said thirteenth section of act of May 3, 1876, aforesaid, and the necessary appropriation therefor is hereby made payable out of any moneys of the District of Columbia not otherwise appropriated for the present fiscal year.

Mr. COBB. I demand the previous question on the joint resolution.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO NORTH AMERICAN ETHNOLOGY.

Mr. KNOTT, by unanimous consent, submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was read, and under the law referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 5,000 copies each of volumes 4 and 5 of Contributions to North American Ethnology, uniform with the preceding volumes of the series, and with the necessary illustrations; 2,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 for the use of the Senate, and 2,000 for distribution by the Smithsonian Institution.

HAYDEN'S ATLAS OF COLORADO.

Mr. KNOTT also, by unanimous consent, submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was read, and under the law referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the Public Printer be directed to furnish 3,000 copies of the Atlas of Colorado, by F. V. Hayden; 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. BRIGHT. I now insist on my motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, Mr. FINLEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and this being the first Friday of the month is objection day.

ELLEN GILLESPIE.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. No. 1890) granting a pension to Ellen Gillespie; reported by Mr. COFFROTH from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a question of order. What has become of the five bills which preceded that one on the Calendar?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that bill No. 1890 is the point where the committee left off on last objection day.

The bill was read.

Mr. BUCKNER. Let the report be read.

The report was read.

The bill was objected to by Mr. BUCKNER.

HERMAN BALDWIN.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2861) granting an increase of pension to Herman Baldwin; reported by Mr. COFFROTH from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill was read.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The first bill on the Calendar, (H. R. No. 2798,) for the relief of L. Madison Day, reported by myself from the Committee of Claims, was objected to on last objection day. I rise to ascertain why the Clerk has commenced reading the bills at some distance below that bill. On last objection day there was one objection to it; it now requires to be objected to by five.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from South Carolina that under Rule 129 it is required that the calling of the Calendar shall commence where the call left off on the previous day. This is objection day, and the Clerk informed the Chair that on last objection day the call rested with bill No. 1890, and of course the Chair directed the Clerk to proceed with the reading at that point.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I ask the Chair whether bill No. 2798 will be the first bill in order on the next consideration day?

The CHAIRMAN. It will.

Mr. PRICE. I think not.

Mr. WARNER. Let the report accompanying the bill No. 2861 be read.

The report was read.

Mr. WARNER. From hearing the report read, I regard this as a meritorious case; but it gives rise to just the same inquiry that I made two weeks ago upon a similar state of facts. Why was the application not granted by the Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. COFFROTH. Why does the gentleman not get the Commissioner to grant the application?

Mr. WARNER. I object to converting this House into a court of appeal in cases of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. WARNER. I do not object in this case.

Mr. SPARKS. I object.

THOMAS H. VAUGHN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2860) granting a pension to Thomas H. Vaughn; reported by Mr. COFFROTH from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill was read.

Objected to by Mr. SPARKS.

JOHN L. WILLIAMS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3077) granting a pension to John L. Williams; reported by Mr. COFFROTH from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill was read.

Mr. SPARKS. Let the report be read.

The report was read.

Objected to by Mr. WARNER.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Our present course seems to impose labor on the Clerk and to occupy the time of the committee without any advantage whatever. I want to know whether or not it would be proper to move that the committee rise with the view of making a motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of these bills, that such of them as may be entitled to pass may pass, and that all business shall not be stopped by this indiscriminate system of objection?

The CHAIRMAN. That would not be in order.

Mr. WARNER. I repeat that I object to converting this House every Friday into a court of appeal from the decisions of the Commissioner of Pensions.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

LEVI LUDAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1465) granting a pension to Levi Ludam; reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. COFFROTH.

The bill was read.

Mr. SPARKS called for the reading of the report.

The report was read.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill will be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. SPARKS. I object.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. It is simply a consumption of time, and delays action on these pension bills.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and the bill will accordingly be passed over.

ISAIAH W. BUNKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2864) granting an increase of pension to Isaiah W. Bunker; reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. COFFROTH.

The bill and the accompanying report were read.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, this bill will be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. SPARKS. I object.

Mr. BAYNE. I move that the committee rise, for we do not seem to be accomplishing any business.

Mr. COFFROTH. I hope that my colleague [Mr. BAYNE] will withdraw that motion. These bills will be objected to at some time, and we might as well get through with the objections to-day. There appears to be a small party of gentlemen here who are determined that no soldier shall obtain a pension. I want their names to go on the record.

Mr. SPARKS. That allegation against the gentlemen who make objection to these bills is out of place, unfounded, and untrue, so far as I am concerned. I want the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COFFROTH] distinctly to understand that although there may be some gentlemen here interested in these bills for pensions for men from their districts, I am opposed to the passage of special bills to the prejudice of hundreds of deserving men in my district.

Mr. COFFROTH. Actions speak louder than words. The gentleman from his own statements shows that he is influenced by envy because his pensioners are not attended to.

Mr. SPARKS. I will not appeal from the Commissioner of Pensions and come to you. Let that office attend to these matters.

Mr. COFFROTH. The gentleman has not been before the Committee on Pensions in regard to any of these bills.

The question was taken upon the motion that the Committee rise, and it was not agreed to.

DANIEL D. LONG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2467) granting a pension to Daniel D. Long; reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. COFFROTH.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Daniel D. Long, late private in Company D, Fifty-fourth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, at the rate of $4 per month, commencing from the 30th day of May, A. D. 1865, the date of his honorable discharge from the Army of the United States in the late war of the rebellion, on account of wounds received while in said military service and in line of duty.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2467) granting a pension to Daniel D. Long, late a private in Company D, Fifty-fourth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to make the following report:

Daniel D. Long was enrolled on the 4th day of September, A. D. 1861, in Company D, Fifty-fourth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was honorably discharged on the 30th of May, 1865.

At Sleepy Creek, West Virginia, on the 2d day of October, 1862, while on scout duty, he was loading his revolver at night, and it went off, and the ball passed through his right arm at the elbow-joint, severing the big sinew. There is no contest about the facts. His application for pension was rejected by the Commissioner because "the wound was not received in line of duty; infantry not armed with pistols."

The examining surgeon says his arm is weak, and recommends one-half pension.

In consideration of the long time this soldier was in the service, and the fact that he was accidentally wounded while on scout duty, either by a pistol or in any other way, which disables him from maintaining himself by manual labor, the committee are of the opinion that the bill should pass, and therefore they recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

PAUL WALKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2859) granting a pension to Paul Walker; reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. COFFROTH.

The bill was read.

Mr. SPARKS. Let the report be read.

The report was read.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the bill will be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. WARNER. If one-half that is stated in that report be true, the applicant should receive a pension, but he should obtain it from the Commissioner of Pensions, and not through this House. I object to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

MICHAEL LINGENFELTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1806) granting a pension to Michael Lingenfelter; reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. COFFROTH.

The bill and the report were read.

Mr. SPARKS, (in his seat.) This case is like all the others; I object to it.

Mr. BROWNE. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWNE. If my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] desires to make objection to any of these bills, let him rise in his place and make it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. SPARKS, (rising.) I object to this bill. If the gentleman has any idea that I am afraid——

Mr. HAWK. What is the ground of objection to these bills, after they have been considered by the Pension Committee and favorably reported to the House?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order; the gentleman has a right to object.

Mr. SPARKS. What is the question the gentleman asked?

Mr. HAWK. I ask what is the ground of objection to these bills? Have they not been duly considered by the proper committee of this House, and favorably reported upon, after a careful examination of all the evidence?

Mr. SPARKS. I presume that the Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered these cases; they certainly have reported them favorably. As all these reports show, they are proper cases for the action of the Commissioner of Pensions. It is simply an appeal from him to this House. I would say to my colleague [Mr. HAWK] that I have received dozens of letters to this effect: "My case has been pending for years before the Commissioner of Pensions. Cannot you get a special bill passed for my benefit? You can get it quicker that way." That is about the character of all these cases.

Mr. HAWK. I understand that these are cases which have been rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions because of certain irregularities or informalities in them, or because they cannot be made to conform in all respects with the requirements of the law.

Mr. SPARKS. Precisely; and if the law is not broad enough to cover these cases, then let us pass some general law which will cover them. In that way you will make it fair to all the pensioners.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Is debate in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Then I object to debate.

Mr. COFFROTH. I move that the committee now rise.

The question was taken by a viva voce vote, but before the result of the vote was declared, a division was called.

Mr. COFFROTH. If there is objection to the committee rising, I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. KLOTZ. That is right; let us fight it out on this line.

The motion that the committee rise was accordingly withdrawn.

HENRY H. FISHER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2468) granting a pension to Henry H. Fisher; reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. COFFROTH.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Henry H. Fisher, Company C, One hundred and thirty-third Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, at the rate of $6 per month, commencing on the 20th day of May, 1863, that being the time of his discharge from the Army of the United States in the late war of the rebellion on account of injury received and disease contracted while in said military service in line of duty.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2468) granting a pension to Henry H. Fisher, late a private in Company C, One hundred and thirty-third Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to present the following report:

Henry H. Fisher, the claimant, enlisted in Company C, One hundred and thirty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, on the 8th day of August, 1862, and was honorably discharged from the Army on the 20th of May, 1863. He applied for a pension on the 7th of May, 1878, alleging asthma and varicocele. It was rejected on the 5th of August, 1879, because there was "no record of asthma, and claimant unable to furnish medical evidence showing its existence in the service or at date of discharge. Claimant unable to furnish any testimony showing that varicocele originated in the service and in line of duty."

The claimant swears that from exposure and hardships on the march from Washington to Antietam, in October, 1862, he was taken sick and sent to the hospital at Antietam, then to Frederick, when the disease developed into asthma, and that varicocele was contracted in the latter part of August or first of September, near Fairfax Seminary, Virginia. While on detailed duty building breastworks, he was seized with a pain in his left private, and a few days afterward he discovered that the cord of his left private was growing larger, and some considerable time thereafter, whilst at the Philadelphia Hospital, he was told by Surgeon Woolsey that it was varicocele, and he gave him a truss to wear; that he has made every effort to find the whereabouts of Surgeon Woolsey, but has failed to find any trace of his whereabouts.

John C. Harman, first lieutenant of the company of which claimant was a private, testifies that at the time of claimant's enlistment he was "a man of sound constitution and good health and temperate habits. That on or about the 25th of September, 1862, at or near Antietam, Maryland, said Henry H. Fisher was disabled in the line of duty by hard marching and exposure from Washington, District of Columbia, to Antietam; he contracted a fever, which, I believe, terminated in asthma."

J. L. Melay, a private in the same company with claimant, testifies: "I have been well acquainted with Henry H. Fisher since 1857, and also up to the present date, (1879.) We worked together before the late war, and I believed him to be a man of sound constitution, to the best of my knowledge and belief, before he enlisted into the service in 1862; and since his return from service, we have worked together, immediately after his return, four or five years; and I knew him to be afflicted with asthma, which I have all reason to believe was contracted while in service. We were messmates while in service, till the said Henry H. Fisher became sick at Antietam."

The evidence of other witnesses make it clear that the claimant was a sound man when he went into the service, and that when he came out he was suffering from asthma and varicocele, and that he has been under treatment for the same ever since.

His family physician, Dr. Noble, before he went into and after he came out of the same, is dead. Since 1876 he has been treated by Dr. M. D. Stehley, and he testifies that "I know the applicant to be suffering from asthma with a tendency toward pulmonary phthisis."

Examining Surgeon Mullen says: "This man (Fisher) has asthma. In its relation to manual labor, I should think this would entitle him to one-half." "Of the varicocele, it is a bad case, (left side,) causing pain in the scrotum and loins, particularly on active exercise." Disability "one-fourth."

The committee are of the opinion that the claimant is entitled to a pension, and they recommend that the accompanying bill do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to laying aside this bill, to be reported favorably to the House?

Mr. WARNER. I will go as far as he who goes the farthest in correcting the system. But I must object in this case. It is an injustice to the meritorious soldier when we decide cases in this way.

Mr. HAWK. I do not desire to discuss this question; but I enter my protest against this technical proceeding. I am not undertaking to pass upon the merits of these cases——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. WARNER. I withdraw my objection in this case, as there seems to be a technical reason for action by Congress in this case.

Mr. HAWK. In behalf of the pensioners of the country, I protest against this sort of proceeding upon pension bills.

Mr. WARNER. I am ready to correct the system, so that those who deserve pensions can have them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] has withdrawn his objection. Is there further objection? The Chair hears none; and the bill will be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. BROWNE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it proper, when a bill has been read, for gentlemen who see fit to object or who decline to object to give any reason for either course?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order to accompany the objection with any remarks, as they are in the nature of debate.

Mr. BROWNE. Then let there be an end of the practice.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has endeavored to prevent debate by repeatedly stating that it was not in order.

Mr. WHITE. Is this bill objected to?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. WHITE. I think it ought to be objected to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is too late in raising an objection. The bill has been laid aside for favorable consideration by the House.

NOAH CATON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2854) granting a pension to Noah Caton; reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. COFFROTH.

The bill and report were read.

Objected to by Mr. SPARKS.

JACOB J. SMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2039) granting a pension to Jacob J. Smith; reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. COFFROTH.

The bill and report were read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to laying this bill aside to be reported favorably to the House?

Mr. WARNER. I object. I think the case should be referred to the Commissioner of Pensions.

JOSEPH SHOWMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2857) granting a pension to Joseph Showman; reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. COFFROTH.

The bill and report were read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to laying aside this bill to be reported favorably to the House?

Mr. WHITE. I object. This application was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions. I do not think we ought to review his action.

WILLIAM F. M'COY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2856) granting a pension to William F. McCoy; reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. COFFROTH.

The bill was read.

Mr. COFFROTH. As there seems to be objection on both sides to these pension bills, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. COX having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. FINLEY reported sundry bills with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES CLINTON.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, do not the bills which were before the House last Friday upon the report from the Committee of the Whole come up first?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bills to which the gentleman refers were reported on consideration day. But as they are reports from the Committee of the Whole undetermined, the Chair will decide that they can now be considered by the House. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

House bill No. 1542, for the relief of Charles Clinton, of New Orleans, late assistant treasurer at New Orleans, Louisiana.

Mr. PRICE. I make the point that this bill is not in the House but in the Committee of the Whole. In support of my position I refer to the RECORD. Upon the 16th of January this bill was under consideration, and after a discussion of considerable length by some half dozen or more gentlemen the question was taken upon laying the bill aside and reporting it favorably to the House. Upon that question the vote stood—ayes 62, noes 72. The bill was not laid aside to be reported to the House, and consequently it is in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair was not presiding at the time referred to, and he would prefer not to rule on this point.

Mr. GIBSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. This bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. It was there discussed; and, if I understood the motion correctly, a motion was made that it should be reported unfavorably to the House. Therefore, it is now before the House on that unfavorable report. When the bill was before the House last Friday I had the floor to make some remarks on the bill, when I yielded to a motion to adjourn. I now respectfully claim the floor to be heard upon this subject.

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman cannot have the floor until the point of order is decided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending question is on the point of order made by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE.]

Mr. PRICE. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman from Louisiana, but——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana can be heard on the point of order after the gentleman from Iowa has finished his statement.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, it is very well known that on certain Fridays one objection prevents a bill from being reported favorably to the House; consequently when the House comes to consider bills upon the Private Calendar a bill that has been objected to cannot be considered; it is still in Committee of the Whole. On another Friday five objections place the bill in the same situation precisely; so that it cannot be reported and is not reported to the House, but remains in the committee. On consideration day (and that is the case here) the question is, "Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House?" When that motion was pending upon this bill in Committee of the Whole, as the RECORD will prove, something like an hour or more of discussion was had on this very question, whether the bill should be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House. Upon that question—the only question submitted—the vote stood 62 ayes to 72 noes; so that the motion to lay the bill aside and report it favorably was defeated. No other motion was made. I appeal to the RECORD or the Journal upon this question. It is true that last Friday the gentleman from Louisiana took the floor, as he said, and I did not make the point then because it was not considered.

Mr. GIBSON. In reply to the honorable gentleman from Iowa I would state that in my judgment he misapprehends the question pending before the Committee of the Whole. It is not simply whether the bill shall be reported favorably to the House, but, as I understand it, that the Committee of the Whole reports its action to the House whether it be favorable or unfavorable. The rules require these bills shall be discussed in the Committee of the Whole, not passed favorably upon in the Committee of the Whole, but that they shall be discussed. This bill has been discussed; objection was made when it was first presented, and it went over under a single objection. It has, therefore, passed through the various stages of discussion laid down by our rules. The Committee of the Whole has made its report to the House, and it now remains to the House to decide whether it will approve the action of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORRISON. Whatever might have occurred in the Committee of the Whole, this bill was reported by the chairman of that committee, and he reported that the committee had taken adverse action on it.

Mr. SPARKS. I presume my colleague has stated the fact which he observed personally, but is that correct? This bill evidently still remains in the Committee of the Whole House. That committee never has ordered it to be reported to the House. If there was an informal report to that effect from the Committee of the Whole, it was never ordered by the Committee of the Whole and is a mistake. There was adverse action on the bill in the Committee of the Whole, and hence it was ordered not to be reported to the House.

Mr. MORRISON. But it was reported.

Mr. SPARKS. My colleague again asserts a proposition which I presume to be correct; but, as a matter of fact, the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar never ordered the bill to be brought into the House. By what are we bound in the House—by the action of the chairman or by the action of the Committee of the Whole House? I say this bill still remains in the Committee of the Whole House, and that the action of the chairman under mistake in reporting it to the House is void and of no effect. I do not think there can be any question about that at all. The question in committee was on reporting the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, and that was decided in the negative. It remains, therefore, in committee, and what has been done in the matter by bringing it into the House is a mistake and of no effect.

Mr. ACKLEN. Mr. Speaker, the action of the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar in making an unfavorable report or rather in giving an unfavorable vote on this bill does not preclude the House from reversing that action. When a matter has been reported back to the House the motion to adjourn would not cut off its consideration. On page 213 of the Manual it will be seen the question of consideration is not precluded by an affirmative vote on the motion to adjourn. The unfinished business pending at the time of adjournment is still subject to the question of consideration, the motion to adjourn precluding it on the previous day. The motion, therefore, to adjourn on last Friday does not prevent the House taking action to-day on this measure, and if the House shall in its judgment conclude to reverse the action of the Committee of the Whole, it is within the power of the House to do so.

Mr. PRICE. Certainly, if it is in the House; but it is not in the House, and cannot be here except by the action of the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the proceedings as published in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation?

The question being taken, it was decided in the negative—ayes 62, noes 72.

* * * * * * *

Mr. O'NEILL moved that the committee rise.

The motion of Mr. O'NEILL was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. KENNA reported that the Committee of the Whole, having had under consideration the Private Calendar, had directed him to report, with a recommendation that it be not passed, the bill (H. R. No. 1542) for the relief of Charles Clinton, of New Orleans, late assistant treasurer at New Orleans, Louisiana.

Mr. MORRISON. The point I make is that the House cannot know what has been done in committee except by the report of its chairman.

Mr. PRICE. That is true; and the report in the RECORD shows the motion to report favorably was defeated, and consequently the bill still remained in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPARKS. The RECORD simply shows that the chairman of the Committee of the Whole House made a mistake in reporting the bill to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to decide the question, but he would prefer, of course, that the Speaker who was in the chair at the time were here to decide it himself. It is a matter of delicacy on the part of the Chair, but as a decision is pressed he will decide the question.

It seems from the proceedings as published in the RECORD of that day that the Committee of the Whole simply refused to make a favorable report upon this bill. It did not order an adverse report to be made to the House. A mistake was made by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole, therefore, in reporting the bill to the House. In the opinion of the Chair, the bill remains in the Committee of the Whole House for action hereafter.

If any gentleman wishes to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair the Chair will entertain it.

Mr. MORRISON. I am entirely indifferent as to what disposition shall be made of this matter. I wish, however, to give notice of an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Let it go with the bill. The Chair will now entertain, out of abundant caution, a motion to recommit with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If the bill is not in the House the motion to recommit is not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is only entertained so that there may be no question in reference to the matter hereafter.

Mr. SPARKS. But I understand the Chair to decide that the bill is not in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes, the Chair decides that the bill is properly in the committee.

Mr. SPARKS. The bill is properly in the committee, and therefore is not properly in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the Chair would like to have the action of the House on the matter.

Mr. PRICE. Then I move it be recommitted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Out of abundant caution the Chair will entertain the motion to recommit with the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MORRISON. I ask that my amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That before such money shall be paid, the Secretary of the Treasury shall be satisfied, after inquiry and investigation into all the facts, that said sum of money was actually stolen, and that the loss of the same was not the result of any neglect or want of reasonable diligence on the part of such officer.

Mr. PRICE. Is that an amendment to the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois proposes that amendment to go with the bill when recommitted.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, has it not been the uniform practice (and we ought to be sure we are not departing from the precedents we have established) when a proposition is made to lay a bill aside to be reported favorably to the House, and the majority of the committee vote in the negative, to consider that as an adverse report? Is not the bill to be reported to the House adversely without further action on the part of the Committee of the Whole? Such has been my experience.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is mistaken in reference to the practice of the House.

Mr. MILLS. Such has been the practice of the committee as far as I have any knowledge of the subject.

Mr. REAGAN. If the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is to go on the bill I wish to reserve objection to it. This bill has been acted on and the time has passed for amendment in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By unanimous consent, the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois goes with the bill when recommitted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If the bill is in committee have we the right to recommit it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already stated that out of abundant caution and to make the record complete he has entertained the motion to recommit.

Mr. SPARKS. Will the Chair hear me a moment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. SPARKS. Suppose the result of the vote is that the bill shall not be recommitted; in what position does that place the Chair?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will decide that question when it comes up.

The bill, with the amendment proposed by Mr. MORRISON, was ordered to be recommitted.

Mr. PRICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON. What position will this bill occupy on the Calendar?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will resume its original place on the Calendar. It will lose nothing in that respect; but will be subject to debate and further amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. When a bill has been reported unfavorably and recommitted, does it not go to the foot of the Calendar?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill resumes its former place upon the Calendar by unanimous consent, and will there remain, together with the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MORRISON,] subject to debate and further amendment, as if no action had been taken upon it.

GEORGE EYSTER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar is the bill (H. R. No. 2796) for the relief of George Eyster. This bill was reported from the Committee of the Whole last Friday, with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. WHITE. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George Eyster, of Philadelphia, the sum of $882.50, the same being the amount stolen from said Eyster, while he was assistant treasurer of the United States, by a subordinate in his office, without the fault or negligence of said George Eyster.

The question being taken on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, there were—ayes 68, noes 28.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FINLEY. I suggest to the gentleman that it would be better to take the yeas and nays on the passage.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Very well; I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

So (further count not being called for) the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the passage of the bill.

Mr. FINLEY. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 29, more than one-fifth of the last vote.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 103, nays 64, not voting 125; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. WARNER. I am paired with my colleague from Ohio, Mr. BUTTERWORTH.

Mr. PHILIPS. My colleague from Missouri, Mr. CLARK, is detained from the House by sickness.

Mr. MULDROW. My colleague from Mississippi, Mr. HOOKER, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. FORNEY. My colleague from Alabama, Mr. HERNDON, is paired with Mr. BRIGGS, of New Hampshire. My colleague, Mr. LEWIS, is paired with Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts.

Mr. WASHBURN. I am paired with Mr. HERBERT, of Alabama.

Mr. STONE. Mr. SHELLEY, of Alabama, is paired with Mr. STARIN, of New York.

Mr. CALKINS. I am paired with Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey.

Mr. DUNN. I am paired with Mr. RYAN, of Kansas.

Mr. FISHER. My colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. DICK, is paired with Mr. ELAM, of Louisiana.

Mr. BRIGGS. I am paired with Mr. HERNDON, of Alabama.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. CARLISLE, of Kentucky, is paired with Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. CARLISLE, if present, would vote "ay."

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. My colleague, Mr. BUTTERWORTH, is paired with my colleague, Mr. WARNER.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. BAILEY, of New York, is paired with Mr. LOUNSBERY, of New York.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. O'NEILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REFUND OF TAXES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar is the bill (H. R. No. 2797) for the relief of certain citizens of Lynchburgh, Virginia, and refunding to them taxes improperly collected from them on manufactured tobacco. This bill was reported from the Committee of the Whole last Friday with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. TUCKER. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the main question.

Mr. REED. I call for a division on that question. I should like, if the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] would permit me, to have a little discussion upon this bill.

Mr. TUCKER. The discussion upon the bill was very full last Friday, in Committee of the Whole, and the gentleman himself, I believe, closed the discussion.

Mr. REED. When I made the few remarks I did upon the bill, the other day, they were founded entirely upon the statement of the gentleman from Virginia. Since that time I have investigated the matter, and should like, even through the medium of a question to the gentleman from Virginia, to have the facts brought before the House.

Mr. EVINS. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the vote upon ordering the main question upon the engrossment and third reading of the pending bill, upon which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has demanded a division.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 73, noes 25.

Mr. REED. No quorum has voted.

Mr. CONGER. I think we had better have a larger vote than that when we are voting money out of the Treasury in this way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum having voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. FINLEY. I move that the House now adjourn.

The question was taken upon the motion to adjourn; and upon a division there were—ayes 75, noes 44.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. COFFROTH called for the yeas and nays.

Many MEMBERS. No, no.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and

The SPEAKER pro tempore said: Upon ordering the yeas and nays not one gentleman votes in the affirmative. [Laughter.]

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BLAKE, for five days, on account of important business.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced as above stated.

Accordingly (at three o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday next.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

By Mr. ANDERSON: The petition of honorably discharged soldiers and citizens of Davis County, Kansas, against the passage of Senate bill No. 496—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of ex-soldiers of Lincoln County, Kansas, for the passage of a law to equalize bounties—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of ex-soldiers of Jewell County, Kansas, for payment of difference between gold and greenbacks in which they were paid for their services—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Kansas Horticultural Society, that the military reservations of Forts Hays and Harker be set apart as experimental stations in the interest of agriculture and horticulture—to the same committee.

Also, the petitions of citizens of Pottawatomie and Jewell Counties, Kansas, for such amendment of the patent laws as will make the manufacturers or vendors of patented articles alone responsible for infringements—to the Committee on Patents.

Also, the petitions of citizens of Pottawatomie and Jewell Counties, Kansas, for the enactment of such laws as will prevent fluctuation and unjust discrimination in railroad freight charges—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BLAKE: The petition of Hon. Thomas B. Peddie, the Newark Board of Trade, and citizens of New Jersey, for the construction of a ship-canal between Newark and New York Bays—to the same committee.

By Mr. BROWNE: The petition of 38 ex-Union soldiers of Wayne County, Indiana, for the passage of the Weaver soldier bill—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, February 9, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 170) concerning an international fishery exhibition to be held in Berlin, Germany, in April, 1880, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

SUPPLEMENT TO REVISED STATUTES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 19) to provide for the publication and distribution of a supplement to the Revised Statutes, and requesting a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. WALLACE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was ordered to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Messrs. WALLACE, KERNAN, and DAVIS of Illinois were appointed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 21st ultimo, a report of the Chief of Ordnance, showing the number and weight and the value per pound of condemned cannon which have been donated by acts of Congress since January, 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of First Lieutenant Thomas H. Bradley, Twenty-first Infantry, examiner of State claims, giving the views of the War Department upon the legislation proposed in the bill (S. No. 1028) in relation to the claims of States against the United States; which, on motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from Captain G. J. Lydecker, Corps of Engineers, of the result of a survey of the outlet to Wolf Lake, Indiana, made in accordance with the provisions of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers and a report from Major C. R. Suter, Corps of Engineers, of a survey made in compliance with the provisions of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879, of the Arkansas River in the vicinity of Pine Bluffs, together with the plan and estimates of the cost of the improvements of the river in that locality; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers and reports of Major W. P. Craighill, Corps of Engineers, of examinations and surveys made in accordance with the provisions of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879, of the Shenandoah River, Virginia and West Virginia; of Trade Haven Creek, Maryland; of Choptank River, Maryland, and of Secretary's Creek, Maryland; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, with a report from Colonel J. N. Macomb, Corps of Engineers, of an examination made of the north bank of the Susquehanna River, from the southern boundary of the State of New York to Nanticoke Dam, Luzerne County, Pennsylvania, in compliance with the provisions of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the requirements of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879, a report of Lieutenant G. H. Mendell, Corps of Engineers, upon the examination and survey of Petaluma Creek, California; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, with a report from Captain C. B. Phillips, Corps of Engineers, of surveys and examinations made in accordance with the provisions of the river and harbor act of June 18, 1878, of inland water routes from the harbor of Norfolk, Virginia, to the Atlantic Ocean, south of Cape Hatteras; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, and reports from Colonel John Newton, Corps of Engineers, of surveys made in accordance with the provisions of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879, of a ship-canal across Bergen Neck, in Hudson County, New Jersey; Cheesequakes Creek, New Jersey; South River, New Jersey, between Raritan and Old Bridge, and Newtown Creek, to the mouth of East River, New York; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, at the request of the president of the National Board of Health, estimates of the expenditures of that board from January 1, 1880, to June 30, 1881; which was referred to the select committee to investigate and report the best means of preventing the introduction and spread of epidemic diseases, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 4th instant, a statement of the reasons why the Treasury Department issued an order to the collectors of customs of the United States directing that, whenever a written request to that effect shall be filed by shippers or consignees, there shall be withheld from publication, for a period not exceeding ninety days, statistics relating to the importation or shipment of any particular merchandise imported or shipped by them; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions of the Legislature of Louisiana, which will be read.

The resolutions were read, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, STATE OF LOUISIANA,
New Orleans, February —, 1880.

DEAR SIR: I am directed by the House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana to transmit to you the following resolution, passed by both houses of the General Assembly, with the request that you communicate the same to the Senate of the United States.

Respectfully,

PETER J. TREZEVANT,
Clerk of House of Representatives of State of Louisiana.

To Hon. W. A. WHEELER,
Vice-President of the United States and Presiding Officer of the United States Senate.

CONCURRENT RESOLUTION.

Whereas the assembly by which WILLIAM PITT KELLOGG claims to have been elected to the Senate of the United States in the month of January, A. D. 1877, was not the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, but an unlawful and irregular assemblage which had assumed to call itself a legislature in part execution of a conspiracy devised by the said WILLIAM PITT KELLOGG and others, together with certain of the persons constituting said assemblage, against the people, to secure for the said KELLOGG a seat in the said United States Senate, and to obtain by fraud and perjury and other unlawful means the places of political trust and power in this State, in the hope of holding the same by force expected to be furnished by the Government of the United States; and

Whereas the pretended credentials of said WILLIAM PITT KELLOGG were signed by one S. B. Packard, representing himself to be the governor of this State, but who in fact was never such governor, but for a short time claimed the title to said office in further execution of said conspiracy against the people; and

Whereas said unlawful assemblage so claiming to be the Legislature, after a brief period of hostility to the then existing lawfully constituted authorities of said State, finally disbanded and surrendered to said lawfully constituted authorities, leaving in force and existence no act of any kind whatever performed by them or either of them in their assumed political capacity, except the said pretended election of the said WILLIAM PITT KELLOGG as a Senator in the United States Senate from this State; and

Whereas at the time of the said pretended election of the said WILLIAM PITT KELLOGG by said combination there was in existence a lawful government of Louisiana, which continued in authority with a duly elected governor and duly elected and organized Legislature, performing the political functions conferred upon them respectively by the constitution of the said State; and

Whereas the said duly elected and duly organized Legislature of the State of Louisiana under said government, after having continued to ballot for a United States Senator on each successive day from the 9th day of January, 1877, until the 24th day of April, in said year, did, in pursuance of the requirements of law, and in accordance with all the forms thereby prescribed, on the said last-mentioned day, to wit, the 24th day of April, 1877, elect Henry M. Spofford to represent the said State in the United States Senate for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th of March, 1877; and

Whereas the credentials of the said Spofford were duly executed by Francis T. Nicholls, the then lawful governor of said State; and

Whereas it is manifest that the Constitution of the United States in providing that each State should be represented by two Senators, "to be chosen by the Legislature thereof," designed and intended that such choice should be made by that Legislature which might be recognized by the people of the State as a lawfully constituted and co-ordinate branch of the duly constituted and recognized government of the State: Therefore,

SEC. 1. Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana, That the State of Louisiana protests against the wrong and injustice done to the people and said State by the recognition of said WILLIAM PITT KELLOGG as a United States Senator from said State, and respectfully but most earnestly requests the Senate of the United States, in the name of law and justice, to declare that the said KELLOGG never was duly elected as the representative of the State of Louisiana in the Senate of the United States.

SEC. 2. Be it further resolved, &c., That the State of Louisiana protests against being deprived of the equal representation in the Senate of the United States guaranteed to each State by the Constitution of the United States, and respectfully but most earnestly requests that Henry M. Spofford, the duly elected Senator from said State for the term of six years from the 4th of March, 1877, may be admitted to a seat in that honorable body.

SEC. 3. Be it further resolved, &c., That a copy of these preamble and resolutions be forwarded by the clerk of the house of representatives of the State of Louisiana to the honorable President of the Senate of the United States, and to the Hon. B. F. JONAS, Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. JONAS. I present resolutions of the Legislature of Louisiana the same as those which have just been read. I move their reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the petition of W. B. A. Durfee and others, citizens of Coshocton County, Ohio, praying for the enactment of a law to prevent fluctuations in freights and unjust discrimination in transportation charges; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HAMLIN. I present the petition of R. S. Prescott, president of the Board of Trade of Bangor, Maine, signed also by G. W. Merrill, first vice-president; J. D. Warren, secretary; M. Schwartz, J. W. Coombs, Thomas White, Silas D. Jones, and H. B. Williams, of the board of managers of said board of trade, who respectfully but earnestly ask for the early passage of the bill commonly known as the Reagan bill, for the regulation of interstate commerce and to prohibit unjust discriminations by common carriers. The petitioners also pray that such further and supplemental legislation be enacted as will protect the constitutional rights of American citizens. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAUNDERS presented the petition of J. B. Miller and 400 others, citizens of Niobrara, Knox County, Nebraska, praying for the passage of the bill (S. No. 773) making appropriations for a military wagon-road from Niobrara, in Knox County, Nebraska, via the military post recently located near the mouth of the Minnecadusa, to Fort Robinson, in said State; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented the memorial of Rebecca Reynolds, widow of William Reynolds, late rear-admiral in the United States Navy, praying to be allowed a pension at the rate of $50 per month; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of J. S. Gledhill and 123 others, citizens and residents of the town of Spring, Crawford County, Pennsylvania, praying for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States granting to women the right to vote; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Jacob Dundore, of Reading, Pennsylvania, praying remuneration for the loss of the barge T. Z. Zulick while chartered by the United States Government; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented the petition of H. K. Myers and 74 others, soldiers of the late war and citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of a law granting to soldiers and sailors equal rights with holders of Government bonds; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DAWES. I present the petition of a large number of commanders of vessels going out of the harbors of Boston and Nantucket, praying for a small appropriation for the improvement of the harbor of Nantucket. This petition is brief, but it sets forth in a very striking manner the great number of lives that have been lost and the great amount of property that has been destroyed by shipwrecks for the want of a small appropriation for the improvement of that harbor, and I should like to have it printed in the RECORD.

The petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned commanders of vessels respectfully represent that the number of vessels passing through Nantucket Sound, on the north side of the island of Nantucket, as noted from the Cross Rip light-ship, is upward of thirty thousand annually; that 75 per cent. of this number draw less than fourteen feet of water, and 50 per cent. draw less than eleven feet of water; that since the year 1800 five hundred and thirty vessels have been wrecked around this island, the estimated value of which, including cargoes, is upward of $5,000,000, the cargo of one vessel alone being valued at half a million dollars; that 73 per cent. of these disasters occurred upon the north side of the island; that upward of 60 per cent. of this number was a total loss; that the number of lives sacrified by these disasters exceeds two hundred; that the large amount of property and human life destroyed could have been measurably, if not absolutely, saved if Nantucket Harbor, which is on the north side of the island, and within nine miles of the track of vessels passing through the sound, had been open to vessels drawing fourteen feet of water; that the Nantucket Bar has always been an obstruction to the harbor entrance for vessels drawing more than eight and a half feet of water at high tide, and consequently that Nantucket Harbor has never been available as a harbor of refuge for the large number of vessels passing through the sound; that the mail steamer, with passengers, is frequently delayed from entering the harbor at low tide to the detriment of business interests; that there is no adequate harbor of refuge east of Block Island or Newport for vessels detained by the shoals, and none which can be made to afford equal advantages with Nantucket Harbor, provided the water over this sand bar can be deepened to a depth of fourteen feet by means of a jetty, as recommended by the recent report of General G. K. Warren, of the United States board of engineers; and that with a harbor at Nantucket capable of accommodating vessels drawing not more than fourteen feet of water commerce will not only be rendered more safe, but greatly expedited, and as northerly winds prevail during the severe storms Nantucket Harbor can be reached without difficulty. They therefore respectfully pray your honorable bodies to make an appropriation in accordance with the suggestions in General Warren's report for the permanent improvement of Nantucket Harbor.

Mr. DAWES. I present a like petition from the marine insurance companies and steamship lines of Philadelphia, praying for the improvement of the harbor of Nantucket for the preservation of their commerce; and also a similar petition of the officers of the Old Colony Railroad Company, making a prayer for the same purpose. I move the reference of these petitions to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY presented the petition of Mrs. Lucinda Harford and 254 others, citizens of Michigan, praying for the adoption of a sixteenth amendment to the Constitution, granting to women the right to vote; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Christopher F. Laubrick and 19 others, soldiers of the late war and citizens of Michigan, praying for the enactment of a law granting full bounty to all soldiers discharged for diseases contracted in the line of duty on a surgeon's certificate of disability; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, presented a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of an appropriation by Congress for the construction of a light-house at the entrance to Sturgeon Bay Canal at Sherwood's Point, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PADDOCK presented the memorial of A. H. Frost and others, soldiers of the late war and citizens of Jefferson County, Nebraska, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR presented additional papers in the case of Thomas Worthington; which were referred to the Committee on Claims, to accompany the bill (S. No. 268) for the relief of Thomas Worthington.

Mr. KIRKWOOD presented the petition of J. H. Frundy and 24 others, soldiers of the late war and citizens of Iowa City, Iowa, praying for the passage of a law allowing soldiers the difference between the value of greenbacks and gold at the time of payment for their services; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of John Pattee, of Iowa City, Iowa, praying for the passage of a law granting him compensation for services rendered as a lieutenant in the United States Army from May 17, 1866, to June 22, 1866; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KERNAN presented the petition of R. R. Plefford, John Wilkeson, and others, citizens of Buffalo, New York, praying the passage of a law to regulate interstate commerce and to prohibit unjust discriminations by common carriers; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Mrs. Cornelia F. White, of San Francisco, California, widow of General Frank J. White, praying that a pension may be granted her and her children; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, in favor of an appropriation for the improvement of the Allegheny River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented resolutions of the common council of Buffalo, New York, in favor of placing February 12, the birthday of the late President Lincoln, on the calendar of legal holidays; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SLATER presented the petition of H. M. Thatcher and others, citizens of Oregon and California, praying for the establishment of a post-route from Linkville, Oregon, to Scorpion Point, in California; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Astoria, Oregon, in favor of the passage of a law authorizing the Astoria and Winnemucca Railroad Company to construct bridges over Young's River and the Lewis and Clark Rivers; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GROOME. I present certain preambles and resolutions of the Board of Trade of Baltimore City, which are in substance a memorial to Congress urging an early repeal of the legal-tender power now given by law to the Treasury notes of the United States. As these resolutions are very brief, are perfectly respectful in tone, and state the deliberate opinion of a body of gentlemen of large business experience, who control the vast and rapidly growing commerce of one of the chief cities of our Union, I ask that they be read at the Secretary's desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be reported.

The Secretary read as follows:

BOARD OF TRADE ROOMS,
Baltimore, February 2, 1880.

At a meeting of the Board of Trade of Baltimore City, held above date, the annexed report of committee on banks and currency, in reference to the legal-tender act, was adopted.

ROBERT A. FISHER, President.
GEORGE U. PORTER, Secretary.

LEGAL-TENDER ACT.

Report of committee submitted through its chairman.

Whereas the country has recovered from its late depression and regained a financial soundness fully justifying the resumption of specie payment, it would seem the part of wise legislation to remove all acts inconsistent with the express terms of the Constitution, wherein it is declared that the only legal money of the country shall be gold and silver; and

Whereas the issue of United States notes with legal-tender obligation being deemed necessary by Congress to meet the exigencies of the particular period, but which period has now happily given place to our present prosperity, it is but proper that this "war legislation" should now be repealed; that by an act of Congress the money of the Constitution should alone remain as recognized by the Government, for while Treasury notes are a legal tender the permanency of resumption seems to be held in doubt even by the very power that enacted it: Therefore,

Resolved, That as the finances of the country are now on a gold and silver basis, and so recognized by the resumption act of Congress, and as gold and silver is the only money known to the Constitution, the Board of Trade of Baltimore earnestly but respectfully urge upon Congress the early repeal of the "legal-tender power now given by law to the Treasury notes of the United States," to the end that with returned prosperity confidence may be fully established, legitimate business encouraged, wild speculation forewarned, and the people feel that there is stability in our finances.

Resolved, That a copy of these preambles and resolutions be indorsed by the president and secretary, and presented to Congress through our Representatives at Washington.

Respectfully submitted.

JOSEPH H. RIEMAN, Chairman.
W. G. BOWDOIN.
HENRY C. SMITH.
J. WILCOX BROWN.
GEORGE J. APPOLD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. These resolutions will lie upon the table as the subject-matter has been reported to the Senate.

Mr. WITHERS. I present the petition of 181 citizens of Nottoway County, Virginia, among whom I recognize the names of many prominent and respectable citizens, praying that Congress may enact such laws as may prevent fluctuation in freights and unjust discrimination in transportation charges on railroads. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WALLACE presented the petition of William Simmons and others, soldiers of the late war and citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of a law for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of Charles Allen Shoemaker and others, citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of a law granting a pension to Robert Richards, of Bradford County, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL presented the memorial of Wesley Cotrell and others, citizens of Daviess County, Missouri, and soldiers in the war of the rebellion, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present petitions signed by citizens of the counties of Atchison, Linn, Jefferson, Callaway, Cass, Bates, Johnson, Howard, Burton, Clark, Cape Girardeau, Benton, Washington, Vernon, Mercer, Cooper, Barry, Pettis, Phelps, Andrew, and Schuyler, in the State of Missouri, numerously signed by the best citizens of those counties, to the number of 3,206, complaining that innocent users of patented articles are frequently threatened with prosecution as infringers, and that the existing patent laws are ineffectual in protecting such parties from the patentees or owners of patents or from the speculations of impostors. They therefore pray Congress to so amend the patent laws as to make the manufacturer or vendor of such articles alone responsible for the infringement, and further to so amend the patent laws as to protect from penalty any person manufacturing for his own use any article previously patented, provided such manufacturer was not cognizant of the existence of the letters-patent. These are separate petitions, and I move that they all be referred to the Committee on Patents.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PENDLETON presented the petition of John Jordan and 40 others, soldiers of the late war, and citizens of Chicago, Illinois; and the petition of the Soldiers and Sailors' Memorial Association, of Hamilton County, Ohio, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 2480) for the relief of the soldiers and sailors who served in the Army and Navy of the United States in the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, and to restore to them equal rights with the holders of Government bonds; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PENDLETON. I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of Ohio, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

Joint resolution requesting our Senators and Representatives in Congress to urge the completion of certain improvements along the lakes.

Whereas the State of Ohio is interested, in common with other States bordering upon the great lakes, in the early completion of certain improvements affecting their commerce now in progress; and

Whereas, owing to the delay in the completion of these works, especially the improvement of the channel between Lake Superior and Lake Huron, and of the Limekiln Crossing, near the mouth of the Detroit River, the interchange of our products with the Northwest is now subject to great and needless disability and expense; and

Whereas the consequences of this fall upon our whole people, in the single particular of the iron products of Lake Superior, to the extent of nearly $1,000,000 annually; and

Whereas, by adequate appropriations therefor, the completion of the lock canal at Sault Ste. Marie, and the improvement of the Saint Mary's River and the Lime Kiln Crossing, can be completed to sixteen feet of water during the year 1881: Therefore,

Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, That an urgent commercial necessity exists for the earliest possible completion of these improvements, and that we hereby request our Senators in Congress and our Representatives to use all proper means to secure this important result.

Resolved, That the governor of Ohio is hereby instructed to forward a copy of this joint resolution to each of the Senators and Representatives of Ohio in the Congress of the United States.

THOMAS A. COWGILL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
R. G. RICHARDS,
President pro tempore of the Senate.

Adopted January 30, 1880.

Mr. PENDLETON presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Ohio, remonstrating against an appropriation by Congress for the construction of a bridge across the Detroit River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CARPENTER presented a memorial of the common council of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, in favor of the construction of a harbor of refuge at Milwaukee, Wisconsin; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. THURMAN presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of Ohio, instructing her Senators and requesting her Representatives to use their influence to have the provisions of a bill now pending before Congress for the distribution of the unclaimed money due to colored soldiers in the late civil war expended so as to embrace the Wilberforce University and Albany Enterprise Academy in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. LOGAN presented resolutions of the Merchants' Exchange of Saint Louis, Missouri, in favor of the passage of a law to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WHYTE. I present the petition of James H. Morrison, praying to be reinstated in the United States Navy as passed assistant engineer, on the retired list.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. ANTHONY. To what committee is the petition to be referred?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is a wrong reference. I am surprised that so accomplished a presiding officer as the Vice-President has not learned the new practice of the Senate which sends all matters relating to the Navy to the Committee on the Judiciary! A bill was introduced a week or two ago to authorize the appointment of medical inspectors in the Navy to the office of chief of the bureau of medicine and surgery, and to remove the disability of the present incumbent, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair followed the suggestion of the Senator introducing the bill to which the Senator from Rhode Island refers.

Mr. ANTHONY. I cannot rebuke the ignorance of the Chair because I share in it. I think the bill should have gone to the Committee on Naval Affairs; but the Senator who introduced the bill asked its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary and it was referred to that committee. I submit that the reference of the petition just presented should be changed and the Committee on the Judiciary should take charge of the affairs of the Navy; there should not be a divided jurisdiction!

Mr. VOORHEES presented the memorial of F. M. Schoolcraft and others, citizens of Southern Indiana, and soldiers who served in the war of the rebellion, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of George L. Castle and others, citizens of Lowell, Lake County, Indiana, and soldiers in the war of the rebellion, praying that they be paid the difference between gold and greenbacks at the time they received their pay; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of E. A. Shepherd and others, citizens of Indiana, and soldiers in the war of the rebellion, praying that they be paid the difference between gold and greenbacks at the time they received their pay; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the petition of T. J. Southard & Son and others, citizens of Richmond, Maine, praying the speedy distribution of the Geneva award fund; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FERRY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 533) for the relief of Charles W. Abbot, a pay director, and W. W. Barry, a passed assistant paymaster in the United States Navy, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 231) for the relief of Ben. Holladay, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1051) granting an increase of pension to Stephen D. Smith, reported it with amendments and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1097) for the relief of Susan Fox, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 526) granting a pension to Esther E. Lieurance, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of A. A. Sims and others, praying that a pension be granted to Charlotte T. Alderman, widow of James Alderman, late of Company E, Twenty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteers, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1231) granting a pension to Charlotte T. Alderman.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. No. 369) for the relief of Alexander McDonald, to report that we have examined the subject and are of opinion that Congress has made all the provision for the claimant's relief to which he is entitled under the principles upon which the Government must be conducted. We therefore recommend that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And I should like to have the Senate agree to our report, if the indefinite postponement does not do that, so that we shall not be troubled with the case again, if we can help it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be regarded as agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the same Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. No. 414) for the relief of the heirs of Philip Francis Renault, to state that we have examined the subject and are of opinion that the party or his predecessor long ago received all the relief to which he was entitled. We therefore report adversely to the claim and recommend the indefinite postponement of the bill. I should like our report to be agreed to and the bill to be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

Mr. THURMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 392) to remove the political disabilities of John R. F. Tatnall, of Georgia, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 487) to provide for the appointment of an additional circuit judge in the eighth judicial circuit, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 4) proposing on amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 21) proposing an amendment to the Constitution in relation to appropriations, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say in regard to these joint resolutions as to authorizing the President to veto a part of an appropriation bill, that I do not agree to the report of the committee and think that some provision of this kind ought to be made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolutions will be postponed indefinitely, if there be no objection.

Mr. McPHERSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1188) granting arrears of pension to Emma M. Moore, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. JONAS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1049) to amend section 2447 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to the issue of patents for private land claims confirmed by act of Congress, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2004) to confirm the title of Charles Olivier Duclozel to certain lands in the State of Louisiana, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. FARLEY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 534) granting a pension to Caroline Treckell, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 370) granting a pension to Phœbe C. Doxsie, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Dr. Mary E. Walker, praying for an increase of pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Elizabeth Sutherland, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1232) granting a pension to Elizabeth Sutherland.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WITHERS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Frederick Weller, a soldier of the war of 1812, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1233) granting a pension to Frederick Weller.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Hugh Wilson, of Freeport, Illinois, praying to be granted a pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 691) for the relief of Jared Gardner, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 955) granting a pension to William S. Fultz, of Muscatine County, Iowa, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1185) granting a pension to Jesse F. Phares, to report adversely thereon. This is a bill for the relief of the person whose petition I reported adversely on a few days ago. The bill was afterward introduced, and is now reported back. The person for whose relief the bill was introduced was a scout, and is not, therefore, under the law, entitled to a pension, and the committee, for that reason, directed me to report adversely. I do not concur myself in the conclusion of the committee, and ask that the bill be placed upon the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I am also instructed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1186) granting a pension to John Snider, to report adversely thereon. This bill is identical in almost every particular with the one just reported, and I ask that it also be placed on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. CALL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 562) granting an increase of pension to Thornton Smith, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of citizens of Iowa, praying that a pension be granted to Samuel Moore, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 591) granting a pension to Nicholas H. Kelley, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1017) granting an increase of pension to Jerry Robinson, late commissary-sergeant First Regiment United States Colored Troops, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 639) granting a pension to John G. McDonald, late acting assistant surgeon of the Second Regiment Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery Volunteers, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 810) granting a pension to Anne P. Newlin, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 982) granting a pension to Spencer W. Tryon, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 801) for the relief of Martha E. Brown and Jesse W. W. Flenner, minor heir of First Lieutenant Joseph L. Flenner, deceased, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. GORDON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 495) to reinstate Thomas H. Lawrence as a third lieutenant in the United States revenue marine, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. GORDON. I am also instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 827) to facilitate the negotiation of bills of lading and other commercial instruments, and to punish fraud therein, to ask, in view of the important legal questions involved, that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The report was agreed to.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask leave to present the views of the minority of the Committee on Military Affairs upon the bill (S. No. 1139) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of the United States volunteers and colonel of the Army.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The views will be received and printed.

TREASURY ACCOUNTS.

Mr. WHYTE. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a letter of the Treasurer of the United States transmitting a copy of his accounts rendered to and settled with the First Comptroller for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and a letter from the Treasurer transmitting a copy of his account with the United States on account of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, to report that they have examined the documents and do not deem it necessary to have them printed. I move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

The motion was agreed to.

AMERICAN EPHEMERIS AND NAUTICAL ALMANAC.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 93) for printing the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac, to report it without amendment and recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It provides that there shall be printed annually at the Government Printing Office 1,500 copies of the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac and of the papers supplementary thereto, of which 100 shall be for the use of the Senate, 400 for the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for the public service, to be distributed by the Navy Department. Additional copies of the Ephemeris and of the Nautical Almanac extracted therefrom may be ordered by the Secretary of the Navy for sale; but all moneys received from such sale shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation for public printing.

Mr. COCKRELL. The joint resolution does not provide copies for distribution at all, I understand, but proposes to furnish the Senate with 100 copies and 400 for the use of the House?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his Secretaries, announced that the President had on the 4th instant approved and signed the act (S. No. 891) to locate and purchase a new site for the United States Naval Observatory.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VOORHEES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1234) amending an act entitled "An act granting a pension to William R. He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1249) to amend an act entitled "An act granting a pension to Sophia Brooke Taylor, widow of the late Major Francis Taylor;" which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CALL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1250) for the relief of W. J. Magill; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WILLIAMS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1251) for the relief of the Louisville and Jefferson County Agricultural and Mechanical Association of the State of Kentucky; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In connection with this bill I would state that there was a petition relating to the subject presented in the Forty-fifth Congress by my predecessor. I move that the papers on file be referred, with the bill, to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WALLACE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1252) to define the terms of office of certain officials of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1253) prohibiting the arrest of election officers on election day; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COKE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1254) for the relief of Henry Warren; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was Ordered, That the papers in the matter of the petition of Ellen Berrigan be withdrawn from the files.

On motion of Mr. WITHERS, it was Ordered, That John W. Benkley or the legal representatives of Mrs. S. A. Holland be permitted to withdraw the papers in connection with her application for relief, under the rules.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (S. No. 185) for the relief of Gibbes & Co., of Charleston, South Carolina.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3497) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriation for furniture, and repairs of the same, for the House of Representatives for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 3328) to remove the political disabilities of John Owins, of Portsmouth, Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 3832) to remove the political disabilities of Joseph A. Seawell, of Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 2796) for the relief of George Eyster;

A bill (H. R. No. 4268) in relation to mileage of jurors and witnesses in the State of Colorado; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) making appropriations for the Reform School of the District of Columbia.

EXTENSION OF MORNING HOUR.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. THURMAN. I rise, in pursuance of notice given, to move the consideration of the Geneva award bill; but I am willing to wait five minutes until the morning business is closed, if the Senate desires it.

Mr. TELLER. Let us get through with the morning business.

Mr. THURMAN. I move that the morning hour be extended for five minutes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to that suggestion.

PORTRAIT OF MARTHA WASHINGTON.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Library:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be instructed to inquire into the expediency and propriety of purchasing the full-length portrait of Martha Washington, by Andrews, for the East Room of the Executive Mansion.

DISTRICT STREET RAILROADS.

Mr. EDMUNDS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, directed to inform the Senate as soon as may be—

First. Whether on the 1st day of January, eighteen hundred and eighty, (1880,) any of the street railroad corporations in the District of Columbia were in arrear for taxes assessed against them, or for which they were liable, and if so, which of said corporations were so in arrear, and to what amount.

Second. Whether on said day any of said corporations were in arrear or indebted to the District of Columbia or to the United States in respect of any charges or assessments growing out of the paving or repaving, grading or repair of any of the streets or avenues in the cities of Washington or Georgetown, and if so, which of said corporations and to what amount.

NORTH AMERICAN ETHNOLOGY.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 5,000 copies each of volumes 4 and 5 Contributions to North American Ethnology, uniform with the preceding volumes of the series, and with the necessary illustrations; 2,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 for the use of the Senate, and 2,000 for distribution by the Smithsonian Institution.

HAYDEN'S ATLAS OF COLORADO.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the Public Printer be directed to furnish 3,000 copies of the Atlas of Colorado, by F. V. Hayden; 2,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

RESUMPTION AND FUNDING.

Mr. FERRY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 5,000 extra copies be printed of Executive Document No. 9, Forty-sixth Congress, being letter from Secretary of Treasury, transmitting letters and documents pertaining to resumption and funding; 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 3,000 copies for the use of the House.

GEOLOGICAL AND GEOGRAPHICAL SURVEY OF THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. WHYTE submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be printed at the Government Printing Office, for the use of the Department of the Interior, 1,500 copies each of volumes 4 and 12, and 1,200 copies each of volumes 3, 8, and 13, of the final reports of the Geological and Geographical Survey of the Territories, in quarto form, with necessary illustrations, uniform with the edition ordered by Congress.

EDWARD BRADEN AND J. W. ANGUS.

Mr. ROLLINS. I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return the bill (S. No. 56) for the relief of Edward Braden and J. W. Angus, which passed the Senate on Wednesday last, and a motion to reconsider which was afterward entered. The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs by the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] and amended by the Senate. I desire to have the bill returned to the Senate so that the motion to reconsider can be acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the request for the return of the bill will be transmitted to the House of Representatives.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 90) granting the right of way through the public lands to the Cheyenne, Black Hills and Montana Railroad and Telegraph Company; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4268) in relation to the mileage of jurors and witnesses in the State of Colorado; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. No. 3328) to remove the political disabilities of John Owins, of Portsmouth, Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 3832) to remove the political disabilities of Joseph A. Seawell, of Virginia; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4268) in relation to mileage of jurors and witnesses in the State of Colorado.

The bill (H. R. No. 2796) for the relief of George Eyster was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) making appropriations for the Reform School of the District of Columbia was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARLAND. On last Thursday when the bill (S. No. 605) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to deposit certain funds in the United States Treasury in lieu of investment was reached upon the Calendar, at my request the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] agreed that it should be passed over. I made the request then because I had not examined the report which had just then been laid upon my table. Since then I have examined the report and the bill, and I have no objection to it. Thanking the Senator from Ohio for passing it over at that time, I now move that the bill be taken up.

Mr. THURMAN. In pursuance of the notice that I gave, I wish to call up the bill (S. No. 1194) for reviving and continuing the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, and for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award. I wish to say that after the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] shall have addressed the Senate on this bill I shall consent, if any one desires it, that the bill may go over until to-morrow in order that all amendments that may be offered may be printed. I will say to my friend from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] that if his bill will not give rise to any discussion or consume any time, I shall be willing, after this bill has been taken up, to lay it aside informally for a few minutes, in order that his bill may be considered; but I wish now to have Senate bill No. 1194 taken up, in order that the Senator from Illinois may address the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair reminds the Senator from Ohio that Senate bill No. 19 is the special order for this day and at this time.

Mr. THURMAN. Then I move to postpone the present and all other orders in order to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 1194.

Mr. McDONALD. Senate bill No. 19 was entered as a special order, with the understanding that it would be postponed to enable the Senator from Illinois to address the Senate to-day, if he desired to do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the special order is postponed.

Mr. GARLAND. It will take but a few moments to consider Senate bill No. 605. I will state to the Senator from Ohio that it is not really my bill but a bill which his colleague [Mr. PENDLETON] reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs. It will lead to no debate.

Mr. THURMAN. I have said that after Senate bill No. 1194 is taken up I shall agree to lay it aside informally to take up Senate bill No. 605; but if it gives rise to any debate I must call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1194) for reviving and continuing the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, and for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

INDIAN TRUST FUNDS.

Mr. GARLAND. I now move that the regular order be laid aside informally in order to take up the bill that I indicated a few moments ago.

Mr. THURMAN. I am willing that the pending bill may be laid aside informally, subject to a call for the regular order. If the bill of the Senator from Arkansas gives rise to any debate, I shall call for the regular order.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 605) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to deposit certain funds in the United States Treasury in lieu of investment, the question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. PENDLETON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to deposit in the Treasury of the United States any and all sums now held by him, or which may hereafter be received by him as Secretary of the Interior and trustee of various Indian tribes on account of the redemption of United States bonds, or other stocks and securities belonging to the Indian trust fund, and all sums received on account of sales of Indian trust lands, and the sales of stocks lately purchased for temporary investment, whenever he is of the opinion that the best interests of the Indians will be promoted by such deposits, in lieu of investments; and the United States shall pay interest semi-annually, from the date of deposit of any and all such sums in the United States Treasury, at the rate per centum stipulated by treaties or prescribed by law, and such payments shall be made in the usual manner, as such may become due, without further appropriation by Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL OBSERVATORY COMMISSION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the provisions of an act passed at the present session of Congress entitled "An act to locate and purchase a new site for the United States Naval Observatory," the Chair designates the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE,] a member of the Senate Naval Committee, as one of the commission provided by said act.

GENEVA AWARD FUND.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1194) for reviving and continuing the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, and for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award.

Mr. McDONALD. I desire to submit certain amendments to the pending bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be received and printed.

Mr. McDONALD. I submit also a substitute for the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed substitute will be printed. The bill will be reported at length.

Mr. WHYTE. Inasmuch as the bill is printed, and is quite a long bill, and as there have been various amendments offered and we shall have it read many times before it is finally voted upon, I suggest that the present reading of the bill be dispensed with, to enable the Senator from Illinois to proceed at once.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. President, of the $15,500,000 awarded "as the indemnity to be paid by Great Britain to the United States for the satisfaction of all the claims referred to the consideration of the tribunal" at Geneva, organized under the treaty of Washington, between the United States and Great Britain, of the 8th of May, 1871, there is an undistributed surplus of $9,553,800; and it was on the 31st day of March, 1877, covered into the Treasury of the United States. In order to determine what disposition should be made of it, it is proper to recur to the proceedings of that tribunal, the claims that were presented to it, its action upon them, and our subsequent legislation.

The asserted failure of Great Britain to discharge in a befitting manner her obligations as a neutral power during our disastrous civil war, was a subject of earnest and continued remonstrance by the United States. The British authorities did not, however, recognize the justice of this remonstrance, but insisted that they had faithfully exerted all the power given to them by Parliament, and that Her Majesty's government, having fulfilled all the duties required of it by the law of nations, was not liable for any damages claimed for losses and injuries sustained by reason of the alleged fitting out, arming, or equipping of the Alabama and other rebel cruisers, or the augmentation of force which they had received in Great Britain or any of her colonies.

After several abortive attempts to adjust the matter in controversy between the two powers, the joint high commission created by them met in this city and concluded a treaty. By its terms Her Britannic Majesty stipulated with the United States for the appointment of a tribunal of arbitration to meet at Geneva for the determination of the claims generically known as the "Alabama claims," and declared that the arbitrators in deciding the matters submitted should be governed by three rules which were embodied in the treaty, as applicable to the case, and by such principles of international law as were not inconsistent therewith.

Numerous claims against Great Britain made by unassured owners of destroyed property and by insurance companies who had paid as for a "total loss" had, with documentary evidence to establish them, been previously filed in the Department of State, and they furnished a conspicuous part of the grievances for which our Government demanded reparation. On the 30th of August, 1871, that Department gave public notice that those who had not already filed their claims should do so without delay, in order that they might be taken into account in presenting the aggregate claims to be brought before the tribunal. Claimants were at the same time informed that they must prepare for themselves the proof of their respective claims. Conformably to the third article of the treaty, the tribunal met and the United States presented its "case." It was an elaborate paper, in which the liability of Great Britain was strenuously asserted, and our claim for indemnity was comprised under two general heads:

First. Claims on behalf of the Government of the United States itself, to wit:

A. Claims for the destruction of vessels and property belonging to the Government.

B. The national expenditures in the pursuit of the cruisers.

C. The loss in the transfer of the American commercial marine to the British flag.

D. The prolongation of the war, and the addition of a large sum to the cost of the war and the suppression of the rebellion.

Second. Claims on behalf of individuals, namely:

A. Claims for the destruction of vessels and property belonging to individuals.

B. Claims for damages or injuries to persons growing out of the destructions of vessels.

C. The enhanced payments of insurance, or war premiums.

Her Majesty's government before the meeting of the tribunal maintained that the foregoing claims, so far as they were for indirect or consequential damages, did not fall within the treaty, and that the tribunal was not clothed with power to determine them. Her representative at Geneva asked for an adjournment to afford the two governments an opportunity to continue pending negotiations on this subject. The disagreement upon this preliminary question, as to the jurisdiction conferred on the tribunal over claims of this peculiar description, seemed for a time to threaten the defeat of the execution of a treaty which was designed to adjust all existing causes of difference between the two nations—causes which involved in imminent peril their friendly relations.

The arbitrators, however, declared that "after the most careful perusal of all that has been urged on the part of the Government of the United States in respect of these claims, they have arrived individually and collectively at the conclusion that these claims do not constitute, upon the principles of international law applicable to such cases, good foundation for an award of compensation or computation of damages between nations, and should, upon such principles, be wholly excluded from the consideration of the tribunal in making its award, even if there were no disageement between the two governments as to the competency of the tribunal to decide thereon."

This spontaneous declaration of the arbitrators upon this vital question was communicated to our Government. Our Secretary of State said:

This is the attainment of an end which the Government had in view in the putting forth of those claims. We had no desire for a pecuniary reward, but desired an expression by the tribunal as to the liability of a neutral for claims of this character.

The requisite instructions were communicated by telegram to our agent, who, pursuant thereto, declared at a subsequent meeting of the arbitrators "that the decision against the admissibility of claims for, first, the losses in the transfer of American commercial marine to the British flag; second, the enhanced payments of insurance, and, third, the prolongation of the war, is accepted by the President of the United States as determinative of their judgment upon the important questions of public law involved. The agent of the United States is authorized to say that consequently the above-mentioned claims will not be further insisted upon before the tribunal by the United States, and may be excluded from all consideration in any award that may be made."

Upon the record of the tribunal a formal entry was made that the several claims for indirect damages "are and from henceforth shall be wholly excluded from the consideration of the tribunal."

In submitting his report to the Department of State our agent remarked that "on the side of Great Britain the solution was a practical one. No damages were to be awarded for this class of claims. On our side the solution was reached in the manner appointed by the treaty, to wit, in the action of the court."

The published proceedings of the tribunal thus furnish conclusive proofs of its decision, made with the expressed acquiesence of this Government, that all claims were to be excluded from the consideration of the arbitrators except those for direct losses growing out of the destruction of vessels and their cargoes by the insurgent cruisers; and the eleventh article of the treaty provided that the result of those proceedings should be "a full, perfect, and final settlement" of all the claims.

Eighteen cruisers were named: The Alabama, Florida, Shenandoah, Tuscaloosa, Clarence, Tacony, Archer, Retribution, Georgia, Sumter, Nashville, Tallahassee, Chickamauga, Sallie, Jefferson Davis, Music, Boston, and V. H. Joy.

Article 7 of the treaty required the tribunal to "determine as to each vessel separately whether Great Britain has, by any act or omission, failed to fulfill any of the duties set forth in the foregoing three rules," (referring to the rules incorporated in the treaty,) "or recognized by the principles of international law not inconsistent with such rules, and to certify such fact as to each of such vessels."

The tribunal performed the duty thus enjoined upon it and decided that Great Britain has so failed in the cases of the Alabama, of the Florida, and of the Shenandoah from and after her entry into Hobson's Bay, and that she was responsible for the acts of those vessels accordingly; and that as to the Tuscaloosa, (tender to the Alabama,) the Clarance, Tacony, and Archer, (tenders to the Florida,) such tenders or auxiliary vessels, being properly regarded as accessories, must necessarily follow the lot of their principals and be submitted to the same decision which applies to them respectively; and that as to the other vessels Great Britain was not in fault.

This decision as to the cruisers for which Great Britain was not in fault, and for which no damages could therefore be awarded, was of course binding upon the United States and the individual claimants for the redress of injuries which they had sustained by reason of the destruction of their property by those cruisers. The agent of the United States then presented a detailed statement of claims for the destruction of vessels and property by the inculpated cruisers, setting forth "the cruiser which did the injury, the vessel destroyed, the several claimants for the vessel and for cargo, the amounts insured on each, and all the other facts necessary to enable the tribunal to reach a conclusion as to the amount of the injury committed by the cruiser." The proofs had been furnished in some instances by the owners of the property and in others by the insurance companies.

It was conceded by the agent of the British government that the insurance companies who paid the owners as for a "total loss" were "entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the latter upon the well-known principle that an underwriter who has paid as for a total loss acquires the rights of the assured in respect of the subject-matter of the insurance," but he insisted that in some instances both the underwriter and the owner were claimants for the same loss. The Government of the United States then presented bills of particulars of each vessel destroyed by the cruisers in question, with the amount claimed therefor and interest thereon, and asked that the aggregate of this amount and interest be the sum awarded. The British government objected to the allowance of interest, but submitted counter statements. The direct claims were then taken up and considered, and the court, after deciding that there was no ground for awarding the United States any sum for the cost of the pursuit of the confederate cruisers, and excluding all claims for prospective earnings and all claims for gross freights, so far as they exceeded net freights, and deeming it preferable to adopt the form of the adjudication of the same in gross rather than to refer the allowance of each individual claim to a board of assessors as provided by the tenth article of the treaty, made an award of a specific sum, as indemnity to be paid by Great Britain for the satisfaction of all the claims referred to the consideration of the tribunal. This sum was deemed to furnish an adequate indemnity for direct losses arising from the actual destruction by the inculpated cruisers of specific property, and no distinction was made between the claim of the underwriter and that of the owner who had taken out no policy of insurance.

The amount awarded having been paid, Congress established a court of commissioners of Alabama claims by the act of June 3, 1874, in which this singular provision is found—

> No claim shall be admissible or allowed by said court or in behalf of any insurance company or insurer, either in its or his own right, or as assignee, or otherwise in the right of a person or party insured as aforesaid, unless said claimant shall show to the satisfaction of said court that during the late rebellion the sum of its or his losses, in respect to its or his war risks, exceeded the sum of its or his premiums or other gains upon or in respect to such war risks; and in case of any such allowance the same shall not be greater than such excess of loss.

That court concluded its labors. After paying to the non-assured owners of property destroyed by the inculpated cruisers the claims which were filed and allowed, the Government has, as before remarked, a surplus; and, in disposing of it, a question arises in determining which the honor and the sense of justice of the nation are involved. That question would seem to admit of but one solution. The money should be faithfully and exclusively applied to the satisfaction of the remaining claims of that class which was decided by the tribunal to be just and valid, and which, with the claims now paid, constituted the basis of the award.

It is said, however, that these are claims of insurance companies whose aggregate gains in taking "war risks" more than covered losses thereby sustained. If this objection has any force, such claims should not have been urged by our Government or recognized by the arbitrators. We, however, did insist upon their justice and validity, and having received the money awarded in satisfaction of them, how can we, without doing violence to our self-respect and forfeiting our good name among the nations, refuse to appropriate it to the specific uses for which we claimed and received it? Can A, as the representative and trustee of B, receive from C moneys on the claim of B and then withhold them from the latter, on the ground that the claim was unjust, although C makes no reclamation for them? No man having a just perception of right would hesitate in condemning so flagrant a breach of good faith and common honesty. The Government in all its relations is bound scrupulously to adhere to those rules of fair dealing which should control the transactions of men. The money should therefore be appropriated to the purposes for which it was awarded, or, if wrongfully recovered, should be returned.

There is nothing, however, in the objection. It might with as much justice be insisted that the non-assured owner should not be paid, whenever the profits of his commercial adventure during the war exceeded his losses. It is a cardinal principle of marine insurance law that, in the language of Mr. Webster, "an underwriter who has paid a loss on ship or merchandise to the owner is entitled to whatever may be recovered from the property. His right accrues by the very act of payment; and if the property or its proceeds be afterward recovered in whole or in part, whether the recovery be from the sea, from captors, or the justice of foreign States, such recovery is for the benefit of the underwriter." International tribunals in awarding indemnity make no distinction between such an underwriter and the non-assured owner. A striking instance is furnished in the adjudications of the mixed commission on American and British claims, which was organized September 26, 1871, under the twelfth article of the treaty in question. The British steamship Circassian was captured on the 4th of May, 1862, by the United States steamer Somerset, for an attempted violation of the blockade established pursuant to the President's proclamation of the 19th April, 1861. She and her cargo were condemned as lawful prize by a decree which was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States. Holding that the decree was unwarranted by the law of nations applicable to the facts of the case, the commission awarded damages to the mortgagee of the ship, to other parties for the value of the freight, and to various British insurance companies and individual underwriters for the amount insured on her cargo, on which a "total loss" had been paid.

The assumption that we have a discretionary control over this fund finds no support in the fact, which is cited to sustain it, that the tribunal awarded a sum in gross. The treaty provided that the damages might be so awarded, or that a board of assessors should be appointed to ascertain and determine what claims were valid and what amounts should be paid on account of the liability of Great Britain arising from her failure as to each vessel, according to the extent of such liability as decided by the arbitrators. The agent of the United States preferred the award of a sum in gross, in the mistaken belief, as subsequent events have proved, that by the other mode greater delays would inevitably occur, and that the sums due to the injured parties would be longer withheld. But it is obvious that both modes are substantially and practically the same, inasmuch as the assessors, in passing upon the validity of claims, would be bound by the decision of the tribunal at Geneva, affirming the non-liability of Great Britain for damages by reason either of enhanced premiums of insurance or of the destruction of American property by other than certain specified cruisers. All claims of either of these classes would therefore have been undoubtedly rejected, and those of the insurance companies which had paid as for a "total loss" on property destroyed by these specified cruisers would have been allowed. Although a separate finding would have fixed the amount in each case, the assessors would have awarded that the government of Great Britain pay to the Government of the United States a sum equal to the aggregate amount of the several claims. Such was the course pursued by the mixed commission on British and American claims, where an award was given on each claim; such was required by the plain terms of the treaty; and such seems to be the uniform practice applicable to such cases.

It is true that property was destroyed on the high seas by other confederate cruisers, and that an enhanced premium for insurance was exacted by reason of the peculiar hazards to which American commerce was exposed. It has been urged that the fund should be distributed to the parties who, by either of these ways, incurred loss or sustained damages. The obvious answer is that their right to the indemnity was submitted to the tribunal of our own selection, and its decision, adverse to them, is final and conclusive. The holders of the rejected claims have, therefore, no better right to participate in this fund than have those whose property was taken or destroyed during the Morgan raids, or the invasion of General Lee, or those in every condition—and their name is legion—who suffered in person or estate by reason of the lamentable struggle, wherein was involved the "unity of government which makes us one people."

Again, it is said that the United States presented the claims and obtained the award. The only mode in which a citizen can obtain redress for the wrongful act of a foreign power is by the instrumentality of his own government. To it he owes allegiance. From it he is entitled to protection. That protection would, however, be but a hollow mockery if the authorities of his own country, after seeking and obtaining from the offending nation pecuniary compensation for his injuries, should lock up the money in the treasury or appropriate it to other purposes. The United States did claim damages for the imputed wrongs which it had sustained, but not one dollar was awarded to it for the destruction of the property of the nation. This fact appears with unmistakable certainty by the record of the tribunal and the opinions which each of its members pronounced. Sir Alexander Cockburn declared that had the Confederate States succeeded in acquiring an independent nationality, Great Britain would have had a perfect right to insist upon being indemnified for a pecuniary loss incurred through this violation of her neutrality and law, but he added that, as the compensation was sought for losses suffered by individuals, Great Britain did not ask for a recoupment of the damages, although those States now form a part of the American Union; but he thought that the tribunal, in the exercise of its equitable and unfettered jurisdiction, should disallow interest. It was, however, allowed, but in the opinion that compensation was due only for individual losses his colleagues did not differ with him.

Great Britain, we are told, has no interest in the manner in which distribution shall be made. This is true. Neither had we any concern in the disposal of the fund awarded to her against the United States by the mixed commission under other articles of the treaty. By the action had under that instrument, all claims against each nation were absolutely extinguished, and if either defrauds the parties in whose behalf it asserted the right to redress, and to indemnify whom the money was paid, the other has no cause of complaint, but that affords no justification for a breach of duty which it owes to its own citizens or subjects. On Great Britain no unfulfilled obligation rests. The money she received from us has been long since paid to British subjects, while our duty in distributing the money she paid to us has not been performed.

Objections have been urged in some quarters against the claim of the underwriter, which it will be proper to notice. It has been said that the doctrine of subrogation does not apply, because the ships and cargo having been destroyed, nothing was left to which any right could attach; that the claim against a foreign government for the value of the destroyed vessels and cargoes is in no just sense a right, and does not constitute property; that even after that government has paid to us an indemnity commensurate with the value of the property, we are under no obligation to pay it over to the injured parties, and that in England a petition of right by a British subject would not, under such circumstances, lie against the Crown; that in such a case, the claim of the underwriter, in the most favorable view in which it can be regarded, reaches only the money adjudged and received by a specified owner under an award pursuant to a treaty, and can then only be enforced by appropriate legal proceedings against the latter as his trustee. Campbell vs. Mullett, (2 Swanston, p. 551;) Tobin vs. The Queen, (6 Best & Smith, p. 257;) Baron de Bode's case, (8 Q. B., 208; 13 Q. B., 364; 3 H. L. C., 468;) and Rustomjee vs. The Queen, (1 Q. B. D., 487,) are cited in support of these positions.

In the first case, commissioners had been appointed under our treaty with Great Britain in 1794 to award compensation to American citizens for the unjust capture and condemnation of their vessels. A claim was made by a firm, one of whose members was a Frenchman and the others were American citizens. His claim was rejected upon the ground that he was an alien enemy of Great Britain, and did not, therefore, come within the purview of the treaty. Indemnity was granted to the other owners only for their shares of the joint property. In a suit brought against the American partners by the Frenchman, the master of the Rolls decided adversely to him upon the ground that the idemnity awarded was not partnership assets, and that he had no title thereto, inasmuch as his claim had been rejected and the other partners received no more than the value of their share of the joint property. The judge further advanced the doctrine that whatever had been awarded by the commission was not on the ground of right or private property, but of hardship and injustice, and that under the circumstances the inducements for one nation to give to the citizens of another indemnity were matters of conciliation but not of strict legal right, and that the case was not one of property recovered in a court of law as a matter of right. This doctrine was expressly disapproved by the Supreme Court of the United States in Comegys et al. vs. Vasse, (1 Peters, 193,) and it has not been sanctioned by any subsequent adjudication.

In De Bode's case, an indemnity fund had been received from a foreign government. In his petition the supplicant claimed under an act of Parliament providing for the distribution of the fund to those whose names were duly entered, and declaring that the residue should be at the absolute disposal of the commissioners of the treasury. His name was not so entered, and the court, holding that the act of Parliament was conclusive, decided that the claim to the surplus could not be maintained. Such would be the ruling in this country; a party claiming under an act of Congress must bring his case within its provisions. Such being the conceded law, it behooves us so to legislate in regard to the fund in question that the just rights of the parties may be effectually secured.

Tobin vs. The Queen, was to recover the value of a vessel destroyed on the coast of Africa by an officer of the British navy, who seized it in the belief that it was engaged in the slave trade, but who failed to have it condemned by the proper court.

Feather vs. The Queen, was brought by the holder of letters-patent for an invention to recover compensation for the use in Her Majesty's service of the invention for which the letters had been granted. The court decided in these cases that the petition would not lie either for a wrongful act done by a servant of the Crown in the supposed performance of his duty, or to recover unliquidated damages for a trespass. These cases maintain the settled doctrine in England that a petition of right may be resorted to: first, for the trial of the right of the subject against that of the Crown to property, or an interest in property seized by the Crown, and if he succeeds the judgment entitles him to recover possession of the specified property, or the value thereof, if it has been converted to the use of the Crown; second, where the claim arises out of a contract, as for goods supplied to the public service. This doctrine has no bearing on any question arising in this discussion.

Rustomjee vs. The Queen is cited to sustain the position that Congress can rightfully exercise an absolute and unrestrained discretion in this matter, and a single passage from the opinion of the learned chief-justice is regarded as conclusive authority that the parties in whose behalf we received the money have no just cause of complaint if it be withheld from them. Nothing in that case justifies such a conclusion.

English subjects in Hong-Kong, in China, were authorized to trade only with licensed Chinese merchants, constituting a body or corporation, named a cohong, all of whose members were jointly liable for the indebtedness of any one of them contracted in trading with foreign merchants on his failure to pay it. Such liability was enforced by the viceroy of the Emperor, who issued an edict directing the cohong to investigate the claim of such creditor, and if found due to pay it. Rustomjee alleged in the petition of right which he filed in the queen's bench that a Chinese merchant, a member of the cohong, who was indebted to him became insolvent, and that he forwarded his petition to the viceroy, who issued the proper edict to the cohong, but before an investigation was determined and his claim entered upon the proper fund book, war was declared between England and China, and he and other British merchants were expelled from the latter country. A treaty of peace was concluded, August 29, 1842, by an article of which the Emperor of China agreed "to pay to the British government $3,000,000 on accounts of debts due to British subjects by some of the said Hong-Kong merchants, or cohong, who have become insolvent, and who owe very large sums of money to subjects of Her Britannic Majesty." The money was paid pursuant to the treaty. Rustomjee alleged that he had made various applications to the representative of the British government at Canton and to the officers of the treasury, and that he had never received payment of his debt, or any part thereof. He, therefore, prayed that Her Majesty would be pleased to direct the payment of the said sum to him. The case was decided in 1876, but it does not appear from the report what provision had been made by Parliament, or otherwise, for the ascertainment and payment of the amount due to the several claimants. The court on demurrer held that a petition of right would not lie by a British merchant to obtain payment of a sum of money alleged to be due to him from one of the Chinese merchants. Chief-Justice Cockburn said:

> The effect of such a treaty is, in my opinion, simply this, that it places the fund at the disposition of Her Majesty, for Her Majesty, at her discretion, to cause such distribution of it to be made as shall make good the claims which her subjects have against the foreigner from whose government the money is received.
> In such a case a petition of right will not lie. The notion that the Queen of this country in receiving a sum of money in order to do justice to some of her subjects, to whom injustice would otherwise be done, becomes the agent of those subjects seems to me really too wild a notion to require a single word of observation beyond that of emphatically condemning it. In like manner to say that the sovereign becomes the trustee for subjects on whose behalf money has been received by the Crown appears to be equally untenable. It comes simply to this, that Her Majesty, in order to enable her to see that injustice is not done to her subjects, stipulates for the payment into her hands of a sum of money. The distribution of that must be left to Her Majesty's discretion. No petition of right has ever been held to be applicable to such a case. To my mind it is utterly inconsistent with all the constitutional theories of the prerogative of the Crown to suppose that Her Majesty can be coerced by a petition of right into doing that justice which, I am quite sure, it will require no petition of right to obtain, if the facts and the merits of the case were such as to induce the government to believe that the claim was a just one. At all events, I think the petition of right will not lie, and that that is perfectly clear upon all the principles which have ever been applied to petitions of right, and all the precedents which have hitherto existed in courts of law.

Blackburn, J., said:

> I do not think that it can possibly be said that when the Queen has, as a high act of state, made a treaty and received money in consequence of an act of state, the mode of distributing it is any way enforceable by a court of law or subject to the findings of juries. I think there is a moral claim that it be given to the right person, which must be investigated in the manner in which Her Majesty is pleased to direct, and the ministers who direct it would probably be responsible in Parliament if they did it unjustly. I do not suppose for one moment that they have done so, but I am quite clear in this, that you cannot in a court of law direct an investigation and conduct it in the court of queen's bench with the aid of a Middlesex jury. I think it must be done by the officers of state, subject to responsibility, in such a way as may be just and proper. I have no doubt they have done so, but whether or not they have done so is a question which must be ascertained in Parliament, and not here.

Lush, J., said:

No doubt a duty arose as soon as the money was received to distribute that money among the persons toward whose losses it was paid by the Emperor of China; but then the distribution, when made, would be, not the act of an agent, accounting to a principal, but the act of the sovereign in dispensing justice to her subjects. For any omission of that duty the sovereign cannot be held responsible. The responsibility would rest with the advisers of the Crown, and they are responsible to Parliament and to Parliament alone.

These opinions show the true ground upon which the decision was put. Referring to the prerogatives of the Queen, the learned judges hold that the relations between her and her subjects exclude the idea that in negotiating a treaty and receiving the indemnity for which it provides she can be regarded as their trustee or agent. Some of their views, however applicable to the political system which prevails in that country, would be out of place in this, where it is a fundamental maxim that the Government is a trust created by the people, to be exercised for their exclusive benefit. All the judges assume that a proper distribution of the fund to the British merchants thereunto rightfully entitled under the treaty, had been made by Her Majesty's ministry under its responsibility to Parliament for the due execution of that trust. No one intimated that it could be withheld from them and applied to defray the expenses of the war, or to meet the general wants of the treasury. On the contrary, the duty of the ministry, as the confidential advisers and servants of the Queen, to make that distribution is distinctly asserted. Now, the United States is not subject to a suit by a claimant for any part of the fund in question, and if the Secretary of State be directed, or a commission or other special tribunal be created, to distribute the fund, Congress would prescribe the mode of procedure and determine the extent of relief which should be awarded the parties in interest. A rejected claim could not be brought up for examination in a court of justice and there allowed. But neither this fact nor any principle affirmed in Rustomjee's case releases the Government from its moral obligation to make adequate provision for the ascertainment of the claims of those for whose benefit the fund was demanded and received—an obligation which is sacredly binding on the honor and conscience of the nation, although the performance of it cannot be coerced.

In Randall vs. Cochran (1 Vezey, 98) the principle is broadly asserted that the indemnity, however arising for the destruction of property, covered by the policy belongs to the underwriter after he has paid the owner in accordance with the contract. The King of England had granted letters of reprisal against the Spaniards for the benefit of his subjects in consideration of the losses by them sustained by reason of unjust captures. The commission appointed to distribute the produce of those reprisals among the sufferers permitted only the owners of the vessels to make claim, although they had been already satisfied by the underwriter. Lord Hardwicke in passing a decree that they should account to the underwriter for the sums received, said:

The person who originally sustained the loss was the owner, but after satisfaction made to him, the insurer. No doubt but from that time, as to the goods themselves, if restored in specie, or compensation made for them, the insured stood as a trustee to the insurer in proportion to what he paid, although the commissioners did right to avoid being entangled in accounts and in adjusting the proportion between them. Their commission was limited in time. They saw who was owner; nor was it material to whom he assigned his interest, as it was in effect after satisfaction made; that the assignment by abandonment is competent not only to pass the property or its proceeds if restored after an unjust capture, but also the compensation awarded by way of indemnity therefor.

In Comegys et. al. vs. Vasse, to which reference has been already made, the Supreme Court of the United States has laid down principles which determine the question before us. Vasse, prior to the year 1802, was an underwriter of various vessels and cargoes, the property of citizens of the United States, which were captured and carried into the ports of Spain and her dependencies, and there sold. Abandonments thereof were made by the owners to Vasse. He paid the losses, and subsequently became a bankrupt under the act of Congress April 4, 1800. His certificate of discharge was of the date of May 28, 1802.

The only provision by Spain to indemnify the aggrieved parties was made by the treaty of May 22, 1819, between that power and the United States. Commissioners were appointed to examine the validity of claims under the treaty. Vasse's assignees in bankruptcy presented a claim for what he had so paid. It was allowed. In 1824 they received from the Treasury the amount and this suit was brought by him to recover it from them.

The court among other principles declared the following: First, that the right to compensation for the injuries sustained by the owners, which under that treaty were to be the subjects of compensation, passed by abandonment to the underwriters upon property which had been seized. Second, that the right against the King of Spain for indemnity, whether remediable in his courts, or by his own extraordinary interposition, or grants upon private petition, or upon public negotiations, is a right attached to the ownership of the property and passes by cession to the account of the ultimate sufferer. Third, that it is not universally although it may be ordinarily the test of a right that it may be enforced in a court of justice. The claims due by a sovereign are not commonly capable of being so enforced; but it does not follow that the injured party has, upon principles of public law, lost all right to justice or all claim to remuneration. Fourth, that the treaty with Spain recognized an existing right in the aggrieved parties to compensation and did not in the most remote degree turn upon the notion of donation or gratuity. It was demanded by our Government as a matter of right, and, as such, was granted by Spain. Fifth, that the right of the underwriter to compensation from Spain held under abandonment made to and accepted by him for damages and injuries were capable of assignment and passed to his assignee in bankruptcy under the bankrupt act of 1800, which provided that "all the estate, real and personal, of every nature and description, to which the bankrupt might be entitled, either in law or equity," should pass to his assignee.

This case overrules the doctrine in Campbell vs. Mullett, supra, that the claim of the owner of property which was destroyed by the wrongful act of a foreign government is not a right and does not constitute property. It also refutes the position that the remedy of the underwriter, if his claim can be enforced at all, is only against the owner after an award has been made to the latter. The court declares explicitly that Vasse, as the underwriter and ultimate sufferer, had an immediate and exclusive right to indemnity on account of the insured vessels which were destroyed by Spain, although it was made effectual only by the instrumentality of negotiation by his government with that power, who never admitted its liability nor made provision for the wrong until twenty years after it had been committed. His right, therefore, passed to his assignees in bankruptcy, for if it did not accrue nor constitute a part of his estate until after the treaty was concluded he would have been entitled to the indemnity, as he obtained his certificate of discharge in 1802, and they had no claim to his subsequently acquired property.

The Supreme Court of the United States, at the last term, in Erwin vs. The United States, 7 Otto, 392, has reaffirmed the doctrine that the claim of a party against the Government for goods taken, although it cannot be enforced by suit, is a part of his personal estate. Erwin was the owner of cotton which was taken from his possession in Savannah in December, 1864, by the military forces of the United States. It was subsequently sold by the agent of the Treasury Department and the proceeds paid into the Treasury.

In December, 1868, he presented his petition in bankruptcy to the district court of Georgia, and was adjudged a bankrupt. An assignee was appointed. In 1873 Erwin brought suit in the Court of Claims to recover the proceeds, but the action, under a former decision of the court, was barred by the lapse of time, as more than two years had then transpired since the 20th day of August, 1866, the day on which the President by his proclamation had declared the rebellion suppressed in Texas, the last of the States in insurrection. This decision was unknown to Erwin when he brought suit. He petitioned Congress for relief, and a statute was passed in February, 1877, which authorized the Court of Claims to take jurisdiction of his claim under the "captured and abandoned property act," "which claims," says the statute, "were by the accident or mistake of the agent or attorney, and without fault or neglect on his part, as is claimed, not filed within the time limited by said act." The court, holding that the only effect of that statute was to remove the bar arising from the lapse of time, decided adversely to him upon the ground that although his claim to the proceeds was outlawed at the time of the adjudication in bankruptcy, it still passed to his assignee, and that claims for compensation for goods which once belonged to him, and of the possession of which he had been deprived by the action of the Government, constituted personal estate equally with the property out of which they grow, although the validity of such claims may be denied and their value depend upon the uncertainties of litigation or the doubtful result of an appeal to the Legislature. Mr. Justice Field uses this striking language:

Demands against the Government, if based upon considerations which would be valid between individuals, such as services rendered or goods taken, are property, although there be no court to investigate and pass upon their validity, and their recognition and payment may depend upon the caprice or favor of the Legislature.

And he cites with marked approbation Comegys et al. vs. Vasse.

The same doctrine is again affirmed in Phelps vs. McDonald, 9 Otto, 298. McDonald, a British subject residing in this country, was, on his petition, declared a bankrupt December 10, 1868. His estate was in the ordinary form conveyed to an assignee in bankruptcy February 12, 1869, and his final discharge granted on the 17th of the following month. Our military forces had, during the early part of 1865, burned his cotton in Arkansas and Louisiana. His claim against the United States for damages thereby sustained passed to the assignee, although at the time of his discharge we had not admitted our liability to indemnify the owners of property so destroyed. The treaty in question made provision in regard to such claims of British subjects, and the commission for adjudicating them was not, as before stated, organized until September, 1871, more than a year and a half after the assignment in bankruptcy. Had the claim not been property it would not have vested in the assignee and he would not have been entitled to the money awarded by the commission.

It thus appears to be settled by the highest judicial authority in this country that the claim of a party for goods taken by this or a foreign government, although it can only be made available by legislative enactment or negotiation in his behalf, is a right and interest attached to and growing out of the goods, and constitutes a part of his personal estate, and is capable of assignment in the absence of any statute prohibiting it. "The law," to use the language of Mr. Justice Story, "gives to the act of abandonment to underwriters, when accepted, all the effects which the most accurately drawn assignment could accomplish, the underwriter then standing in the place of the assured and becoming legally entitled to all that can be recovered."

I have extended these remarks to an undue length. In the anxious desire to reach a just conclusion I carefully considered the arguments and the decided cases cited in support of them which the several parties representing conflicting claims to the fund have from time to time presented to the Judiciary Committee. So far as I am aware, no citizen of the State which I have the honor in part to represent on this floor is a claimant or is interested in any contemplated legislation on this subject, save to the extent that exact justice shall be done and the honor of the nation maintained inviolate. My mind has, therefore, been free from those disturbing influences by which I might have been unconsciously misled had my constituents a pecuniary interest in the distribution of the fund.

I submit my conclusions, and they will control my vote, on the questions to which they relate:

1. The United States, for itself and those it represented, submitted, pursuant to treaty stipulations, to a tribunal of arbitration the determination of the claims generically known as the "Alabama claims."

2. That tribunal, with the declared acquiescence of our Government, decided that all claims should be, and they were thereafter, excluded from the consideration of the arbitrators, except those for direct losses growing out of the destruction of vessels or cargoes by insurgent cruisers.

3. The claims of the underwriters to indemnity for such losses, if the vessels or the cargoes were covered by policies of insurance and the owners had been paid as for a "total loss," were insisted on by our Government and recognized by the tribunal, and they constituted a basis of the award. No distinction was made between the claims of the underwriter and those of the unassured owner.

4. Indemnity was awarded only where the vessels or the cargoes were destroyed by certain specified cruisers in regard to which Great Britain was by the arbitrators declared to be in fault.

5. The United States and all individual claimants are bound by the award, and it was under the treaty "a full, perfect, and final settlement of all the claims."

6. The United States should distribute the fund to those entitled thereto, and to indemnify whom it was awarded. As the claims on behalf of the parties who had sustained damages by the acts of the "exculpated" cruisers, or by the payment of enhanced premiums of insurance, were rejected, and nothing was awarded in that behalf, such parties have no just claim to any part of the fund.

7. The claim of the owner of the destroyed vessels or cargoes to damages therefor is property, and as such susceptible of a valid transfer, although provision for its adjudication and payment be the result of negotiations thereafter entered into between the government whereof he is a citizen and that which did the wrong. His assignee in such case is alone entitled to the indemnity.

8. The claim of the underwriter who has paid the owner of the destroyed property as for a "total loss" is as valid in law and conscience as would be that of the owner had he taken out no policy of insurance upon such property.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I only wish at this time to express my admiration for the very exhaustive and ingenious argument——

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Ingenious! I do not know why you say "ingenious."

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no other word beginning with i that will describe it, Mr. President. I say I only rise now to express my admiration at the ingenious argument of my learned and honorable friend from Illinois in favor of the insurance companies and to state that I am glad to be able to occupy precisely the position he does in respect of feeling no prejudice about this affair. No citizen of the State of Vermont that I have ever heard of has the slightest interest in this question except the same interest that his constituents, the citizens of Illinois have; and that is that absolute justice and truth shall prevail.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I did not suppose the people of Vermont were personally interested.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Therefore, Mr. President, to borrow a word from my honorable friend, so far as I am capable of understanding it, I think I may approach the consideration of the subject just as free as himself from whatever bias or untoward influence, or whatever the phrase was that he adopted, may be supposed to affect the minds of all the other Senators. We two, at least, Mr. President, must be taken to be absolutely impartial.

Occupying that attitude I wish to say two or three things just now. In the first place, I wish to say that I hope every Senator will carefully examine this question upon all its sides and in all its aspects before he jumps or comes to any conclusion at all.

Second, I wish to say that the Congress of the United States five or six years ago, being as I suppose just as impartial as this Congress is, did hear all sides of this question, did carefully consider it and debate it, and did decide that the insurance companies had no case whatever beyond the extent for which Congress then provided, and that the then President of the United States, as I must assume, concurred in that opinion by signing a bill which contained a provision excluding insurance companies from profiting out of their speculations growing out of a state of war beyond the extent to which they had been losers in the particular cases referred to. This opens a serious question, supposing this matter to be one of doubt or difficulty or about which there is a difference of opinion, as there is, how often Congress after Congress is to be called upon to retry and redecide questions that once after great deliberation it has already passed upon. That is worth thinking of in respect to carrying on the Government of this country.

In the next place, I wish to say just now and here that my learned and honorable friend I think has fallen into a large mistake, when he has stated to us that any claims were presented, to use his language, on behalf of any private claimant whatever. I have examined often the treaty of Washington and the presentation of the case of the United States and have failed to find any word or letter out of which any such deduction can be raised; and while my honorable and learned friend was speaking I sent again for and obtained the treaty and the case of the United States that presented in writing our positions, and on a reperusal I fail to find any clause or word that imports, or implies, or says anything of the kind. They were claims presented by the United States and on behalf of the United States, and nobody else. They were claims for acts of public hostility on the part of Great Britain against the Government of the United States in making herself the ally for the time being, and in the cases named, of the confederacy, so called, with whom we were at war; and a confederacy it was truly called in respect of the public law that relates to the operations of nations and of wars.

That being so, Mr. President, the decisions that my learned and honorable friend has read, and the argument that he has adduced in respect of trusts on the part of governments, whether they be the governments of kings or of republics, it will be found, when Senators look at the matter carefully, have not the slightest application, or if they have any application, they have a tendency to show that these claims of these insurance companies are unfounded, instead of well-founded, because in every instance to which he has referred the claims of the citizens or the subjects of the governments who appealed for redress were claims for illegal acts of the military or other authorities of the other government, and for which the injured party would have had a private right of suit against the wrong-doer, and they were not claims in any instance for the destruction of the property of the citizens or the subjects by any hostile act of belligerency. They were trespasses; they were illegal seizures for which the party was entitled to redress, and nobody else was entitled to redress. But in a case of public belligerency, I supposed everybody agreed that the injury inflicted upon the citizen or the subject was not a private injury to him at all in the sense of either public or private law, but was an injury to the government of which he is one member and constituent, inflicted in his person, but in respect of which he has no right of complaint against anybody; and which, therefore, if it be followed by an indemnity demanded by his government, leaves the money that is received for it in the summation, the aggregate, of all the injuries that are done, as they must be done, to individuals if at all, except as respects public vessels and property, which I may lay aside now. The disposition of it depends on what in good conscience and real justice and the hardships of the case the sovereign power thinks it right to do. And that was exactly the principle that the high court of appeals of Great Britain, since Congress had already decided this question, and with its chief-justice, the British commissioner at the tribunal at Geneva presiding, adopted in a case running on all fours with that of these insurance companies, that the subjects of Her Majesty had no private claim, and that there could exist no private trust against Her Majesty's government in respect of the money, although it was true that in the list of claims that footed up the $3,000,000 that China was to pay was the loss inflicted on this individual subject, and, therefore, though his loss was a part of the money that Her Majesty's government received, and which China paid, his right was entirely destroyed as it respected any claim upon China or upon the private company with whom he had dealt, and for whose default China was responsible in every respect. Even in that case the whole court say that it is their unanimous opinion that money received under circumstances of that character has no quality of a trust or private right; but it depends upon the general judgment of the legislature or the governing power, whether in the particular case some indemnity or benefit growing out of the circumstances ought to be conferred. In that respect, these insurance companies have a right to be heard, if they have not been heard once; they have a right to convince us, if they can, of what? Being organized for the purpose of taking speculative chances upon the perils of the sea and the perils of war, in this case a war by their government going on, they proceeded to carry on business the very profit and success of which depended upon a state of war, because the moment the war ceased they could not get any war premiums. They proceeded to speculate. It was a perfectly proper speculation. I am not speaking of it in the sense of its being immoral at all, but it was a business that only could exist because a state of war existed. They entered into the business; they made profit by it; and then, when the United States, as in this case, enforced against the ally of the belligerent with whom we were contending a claim for the injuries that she had committed against us in the persons of our citizens, and recovered a general sum for indemnity for those injuries, is there any conscience or justice in these corporations who have thus speculated, and fairly speculated, out of the very existence of that public war and that public distress, saying that they shall have their profits doubled or trebled for their private benefit? That is the question which the Senate will be called upon to decide, if we are going into it over again when we have decided it once; and no other question.

That is all, Mr. President, that I wish to say at this present time, because I understand something else is desired to come up. When the bill comes up again, I hope Senators will have examined it in the light of the suggestions I have made in connection with the observations of my honorable friend from Illinois.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, it was not my purpose to say a word on this bill to-day; and I would not rise now but for the observations made by the Senator from Vermont. Even with that provocation, I shall not undertake anything like an argument on this bill at this time, but shall simply enter a protest against his statement and against a position of law which he has advanced, and upon which he has greatly relied heretofore.

He affirms, if I understood him, that the United States never presented any claim as the claim of a citizen of the United States, when the truth is that there was scarcely one single claim before the tribunal at Geneva that was not presented by this Government expressly as a claim of a citizen of the United States—scarcely one. For years before that tribunal sat, long before the treaty was negotiated, this Government from time to time forwarded to our minister at London claims of our citizens upon the British government to be presented to that government for allowance. And then, when the treaty was negotiated, the Secretary of State gave notice to all American citizens having claims against Great Britain to do what? To send them to the Department of State with the proofs, that they might be presented before the tribunal at Geneva as their claims, the claims of the citizens against Great Britain. And yet the Senator from Vermont says that he finds nothing from which he can infer that these were individual claims of citizens, when our Government treated them from first to last as the individual claims of citizens, and when our case was stated before that tribunal the claims that were to be submitted to it were divided into two classes: certain claims in behalf of the Government, claims for the expense of the prolongation of the war, claims for the cost of pursuing the rebel cruisers, claims for the destruction of certain vessels of the United States, a few revenue cruisers and the like; and then came the great bulk and burden of our claims under another head, the claims of these citizens of the United States.

Well, sir, the claims on behalf of the Government, with the exception of those for the destruction of a few revenue cruisers, were all disallowed, and the whole award was made on the basis of the claims of individual citizens of the United States.

That is not all. President Grant, before the negotiation of this treaty, sent a message to the Congress of the United States, recommending that the Government of the United States pay these claims of its individual citizens upon the government of Great Britain, in order that the Government of the United States might have the authority to present them as national claims. That was the recommendation of the President, and possibly no one thing tended more to bring about the treaty of Washington than that recommendation to Congress made by President Grant before that treaty was negotiated. And yet my friend says that there was no presentation of individual claims.

I confess, Mr. President, I cannot help feeling an astonishment at such an assumption as that. I know my friend must believe it, or he would not say it. I know him too well to think that he would say anything that he did not believe; but that, with the familiarity he has with this subject, and in the faces of men who are equally familiar with it, he should make such a statement as that, does really fill me with astonishment.

But, sir, it is hardly more astonishing than his legal proposition, which we have heard before, that these claims are not to be allowed because we were at war with Great Britain, because Great Britain was an ally of the confederacy and therefore a belligerent. In the face of a treaty which holds Great Britain responsible for her omissions to discharge her duties as a neutral; in the face of an award that holds her liable because she omitted to discharge her duties as a neutral; in the face of the fact that during the whole of the civil war trade and intercourse went on between the United States and Great Britain as if they were the most friendly nations on the surface of the earth, when if they had been at war every contract made between an English subject and an American citizen would have been null and void; in the face of these facts and the plain language of the treaty and the plain language of the award, the Senator from Vermont says that we were at war with Great Britain, that she was an ally of the confederacy, that she was therefore a belligerent, and hence that no American citizen had any right whatever to claim for any loss inflicted by that belligerent upon him.

Well, Mr. President, I am not going to argue that over again; it is an old story that we have gone over again and again, but undoubtedly we shall have to consider it once more.

All that I wanted to do in rising was to enter my protest against the statement of the Senator from Vermont that this award was not made on the basis of private claims, claims of private men, citizens of the United States, upon Great Britain and enforced by their Government because they could be enforced in no other way. Your very statute-book prohibits a citizen of the United States from making any negotiation whatever with a foreign government to secure indemnity for a loss that that government has inflicted upon him. He can only speak through his Government, but his claim is no less a private claim because his Government for great public reasons of state says "I, the Government, will represent you in enforcing, or prosecuting, or seeking redress for the injuries that you have sustained."

And, then, Mr. President, think of the other proposition that, without our knowing it at all, during four long, weary years, with our minister at the Court of St. James, and the British minister here in Washington, and millions and hundreds and thousands of millions of trade going on between the two countries; all that time we were at war with Great Britain; that she was a belligerent; and that whatever she did could give no American citizen a right to claim damages! That is one of those propositions which I never shall get through this dull and heavy brain.

Mr. President, I have nothing more to say now. In the course of the debate that will arise on this bill, undoubtedly, I shall have something to say, and it will be my duty to say it; but I do not want to take up the time of the Senate now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Ohio had paid more careful attention to what I said about these claims, I think he would not have been quite so emphatic in expressing his astonishment. What I said was in reply to the Senator from Illinois, who had stated that these claims were presented in the American case to the tribunal at Geneva, on behalf of citizens of the United States. I repeat that what I said was in reply to that, and it was that I could not find either in the treaty or in the case presented any word or sentence or line from which any such inference could be drawn. That I say again.

My honorable friend from Ohio has said that I ought to have known that individual citizens complained, and that the complaints of those individual citizens were forwarded by our Government from time to time long before this treaty to the Government of Great Britain; that is true. The honorable Senator says that after the treaty was made public notice was given by the State Department to all citizens to send in statements of their injuries; that is true. My honorable friend says that the President of the United States, General Grant, sent a message to Congress suggesting that the United States should buy up or obtain in some way—I have forgotten how—all these claims of citizens for injuries; so he did. But the President of the United States is not the Government of the United States, and Congress did not act upon his recommendation, I should say for the reason that Congress understood the principles of public law and of public justice more completely than that officer of his Department, whoever it was, who suggested that. But I will say for the then President of the United States, that notwithstanding his having sent such a message he approved (after he had read, no doubt, the very learned and able and complete argument of my friend from Ohio in favor of the insurance companies) a law which said that no insurance company should receive any part of this money beyond the losses which it had really sustained in the speculative business that it was engaged in, which the war alone gave any existence to. Therefore, I must assume that the argument borrowed from the message of President Grant would be pretty much overthrown by his own action afterward, on seeing the whole bearing of the subject, in approving of the rejection of the present claim of these insurance companies that my honorable friend supports.

Here is the treaty. My honorable friend, I believe, does not contend that there is any reference to individual claims. There is a reference, as there is in all cases of injuries between nations at war, to the fact that citizens of one nation have suffered which is one thing; but there is no reference in the treaty that I can find to any individual claim as an individual claim upon the government of the other. Now I come to the case which will be found in the documents that are before us:

The claims as stated by the American commissioners may be classified as follows:

1. The claims for direct losses growing out of the destruction of vessels and their cargoes by the insurgent cruisers.
2. The national expenditures in the pursuit of those cruisers.
3. The loss in the transfer of the American commercial marine to the British flag.
4. The enhanced payments of insurance.
5. The prolongation of the war and the addition of a large sum to the cost of the war and the suppression of the rebellion.

So far as these various losses and expenditures grew out of the acts committed by the several cruisers, the United States are entitled to ask compensation and remuneration therefor before this tribunal.

The claims for direct losses growing out of the destruction of vessels and their cargoes may be further subdivided into, 1, claims for destruction of vessels and property of the Government of the United States; 2, claims for the destruction of vessels and property under the flag of the United States; 3, claims for damages or injuries to persons, growing out of the destruction of each class of vessels.

That states it all. There I am sure every Senator, including my honorable friend from Ohio, will see that nothing is put forward on behalf of any private person; but it is simply a summation of the public right that the Government of the United States as a sovereign has against the other government for injuries to the United States in the various respects referred to, and just as it would have been if we had had an open war in all respects with Great Britain during all this time, when everybody would agree that the destruction of our commercial marine by the cruisers of Great Britain would not create a private claim or a private right on behalf of any citizen of the United States.

Then my honorable friend says he is astonished that I should say that Great Britain was an ally of the confederacy, and that therefore there was in that respect, and so far as the cruisers that came out of British ports were concerned, a state of war, while he says we were all the time having the most friendly relations with Great Britain, and if it were otherwise all contracts would be void. Let me reply to that, in the briefest possible space, because I do not intend to go into this debate only to put in a caveat against the observations of my friend from Illinois. I have never yet learned, probably it is on account of my want of diligence and industry, that where a war was going on between two powers, as there was between the United States and the confederates—I am now speaking of it in the public, not in the municipal sense, bear in mind—and a third party, a third sovereign, comes in and interferes in any degree, or where it does not interfere, that third party must occupy any but one of two positions; it must either be neutral, which in general Great Britain professed that she was, and we swallowed it sufficiently to say we believed it, or it must be otherwise than neutral. If you are speaking of a state of war between a belligerent and a third power, I should like to know what attitude that third power occupies in just so far as that third power is not neutral. The very statement of the term gives the answer to it; and that is, that just so far as the third power is not neutral, she is belligerent either directly or as an aiding party to the other belligerent, an ally. The moment she gets over the line, just so far as she gets over the line she ceases to be neutral and becomes a belligerent. Therefore I say that if the proprietors of any one of these ships had brought a suit against the British cruiser, as I call it, the Alabama, that made war upon our commerce, in the courts of Great Britain or the courts of the United States, that suitor would have failed in either court upon the ground that the officer in command of that ship and his sailors committed no wrong upon him whatever. It was an act of war, for which the offending party was not personally responsible, and in respect of which the injured party had not a particle of personal right. That is all I wish to say now.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President——

Mr. McDONALD. I would ask——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I do not rise to occupy the floor for any length of time, but simply to protest in the name of my constituents, and in the name of common justice, at the very threshold of this discussion, against the passage of this bill. In reading it over, hastily, to be sure, but reading it over a second time, I am at a loss to understand the basis of justice or the basis of consistency on which this bill rests.

If the honorable Senator from Ohio maintains that the class of claims which this Government may fairly recognize was settled in the terms of the Geneva award, then he violates that principle in the fourth section of this bill. He proposes to recognize in this bill a class of claims which were thrown out at Geneva, and he goes in the assertion of that power just as far as the bill of the honorable Senator from Indiana, which does justice to all parties concerned. The assertion of the power of congressional discretion in that which was reserved at Geneva, is just as much exercised here as in the bill of the honorable Senator from Indiana. The exculpated cruisers are in this bill. They are put second to the insurance companies, and the inhibition which was placed on the insurance companies not to receive anything from this fund except when they could prove a loss is proposed to be repealed, and so proposed, I presume, on that great doctrine of Scripture: "Unto him that hath shall be given, and from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he seemeth to have."

The men who suffered by reason of the piratical cruisers are to have no hearing in this bill. The men who were enriched with profits from the misfortunes of their countrymen are to be invited, under the bill which the honorable Senator from Ohio defends, to come up here and go into the Treasury to their arm-pits, in order that gains already large may be made extravagantly so by an increase from the Treasury of the United States, an increase which under existing law cannot be made—an increase which can only reach them through the repeal of a statute which was put upon the books of the United States after elaborate discussion and after the most mature consideration.

I shall have something to say on this bill when it is up for final action. At present I merely rose to enter my protest against it.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, the position of the Senator from Vermont, to which I have now listened for the first time, though I have read it several times, it having been asserted by him heretofore, seems to me to prove a little too much. If it be correct that this fund stands in the attitude assigned to it by him, then decency and propriety require of the United States at once to return it to Great Britain, for we have no more claim upon it in our Treasury than we should have now to the crown of the Queen if we could actually get hold of it and deposit it in the Treasury. Outside of the fact that the Geneva tribunal ruled out all the claims for fanciful damages, if I may so express myself, as to the bruised honor and wounded pride of the nation, we know as a matter of history that the United States, in the very inception of this matter, started the inquiry, for the purpose of supplying a remedy to her injured citizens. The very first letter addressed by Mr. Seward, then Secretary of State, in October, 1862, was forwarding a claim of one of the insurance companies, invoking action upon it, and reciting the damages done for which compensation was claimed.

If shelter is sought behind the belligerent rights that were pretended to be accorded by the United States to the confederacy, the argument fails there, because, as I shall attempt to show when I address the Senate at length upon this proposition, those belligerent rights, when fully analyzed, were not belligerent rights in any sense of the word, but the National Government exercised them when it saw proper, and when it did not see proper it withdrew them.

But let the question stand as it may, whether this is a national fund now held by the United States in her own right or in right of these injured private parties, I will attempt to show that the rule of justice and the rule of law require that she should distribute it to the parties indicated in this bill. And so far as comfort is to be derived from the somewhat historic case of Rustomjee it can be shown from that case, based upon institutions and principles under another government not recognized here, and in fact expelled and kicked out, that it is the duty of this Congress to hasten itself to the task of distributing this fund to these injured private parties; and whether we like it or dislike it, whether they put their hands in the Treasury up to their thumb or up to their armpits, if it is the law that they should have it that is all we have to measure it by.

So far from having any one in my State, as indicated by the two Senators, interested in this fund, I have not the pleasure or the misfortune to know more than one person who claims to be interested in this fund. But if it is the due of these insurance companies and it can be shown by every author who has ever written on the subject from Emerigon to Flanders, if it is their right, then they must have it, and it is not for Congress to set up a reformed rule of morals, of justice, or of right in this proceeding.

The point I shall make and attempt to demonstrate before the Senate when the general discussion arises, is that in the very inception this was a fund for the payment of private losses and private injuries, and if it is not that the Government had better return it, and that quickly, too, to the government of Great Britain. I refer to the very inception of the inquiry in the letter of the Secretary of State as far back as October, 1862.

Mr. President, that shall be the course I shall take on this subject when the general discussion comes before the Senate. As it seems to be in order to have a little skirmish in advance, I suggest this as the point on which I shall address the Senate hereafter.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, this bill will not be injured, I think, by denunciation in advance; it will not be injured in the minds of sensible and just men by calling the claimants that are provided for in it corporations; it will not be injured in the minds of people who understand the bill by the pretense that these corporations have made exorbitant profits out of the war and are seeking to double their profits by means of this bill, because there is no foundation for any such statement.

What is it that the law provided in regard to these corporations? That they should not recover beyond their losses upon a full exhibit of all their business during the war. If that was a correct principle for them, why was it not a correct principle for the men who took out no insurance at all, and who, in familiar language, are said to have insured themselves? Pray, where can any man draw a line of distinction? A man saw fit to sail his vessel without insurance; he made nine successful trips, perhaps, and lost his vessel on the tenth. He saved all insurance by insuring himself; he made immense profits by the war prices which he obtained for the articles he brought into this country, and by the war freights which were paid to him; but nobody pretended that he was to exhibit a balance-sheet and recover only what he lost on his whole business.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the honorable Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. THURMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLAINE. I think he inadvertently misstates the bill. The law as it stands does not require the insurance company to show a loss upon their whole business, but that upon this particular matter of the war risks they met with loss.

Mr. THURMAN. I understand that.

Mr. BLAINE. But the honorable Senator, I think, stated that an insurance company had to show its whole business, that there was an offset all around on everything. The law is that in these particular cases of war risks they shall show that they made a loss, and if they made a gain they shall not receive anything. There is a very wide distinction, the honorable Senator will observe.

Mr. THURMAN. Not at all. I was speaking about the war risks, and if I expressed myself clearly the Senator need not have interrupted me. I thought every Senator understood me. I was not talking about a subject that was not before the Senate. Every man who sailed his ship without insurance was incurring war risks or was insuring himself against war risks, and on the same principle that requires insurance companies to exhibit a balance-sheet of their profit and loss, every man who was his own insurer should exhibit a like balance-sheet; but nothing of that kind was done. And so, as to the war-premium people, in whom I fancy my friend from Maine takes great interest, why are they not required to exhibit a balance-sheet of their profit and loss on the war risks they ran in the traffic which they pursued? They paid the war premium nine times perhaps, and nine times made a war profit; they may have made it all the time. On every single risk they took, on every single venture, every single cargo, notwithstanding the war-premium, they may have made a war profit. But nobody talks about making them exhibit a balance-sheet of their war risks and their war profits and their war premiums, and striking a difference and finding out exactly what they made or exactly what they lost and indemnifying them accordingly.

No, Mr. President, there is no sophistry and no declamation that can conceal the real merit of this case. Here were certain claims that belonged, as everybody admits, to the insurance companies. Our Government put them in as claims belonging to the insurance companies; the British government admitted that they belonged to the insurance companies. Every writer on war says that the insurance companies were subrogated to these claims, and they belonged to them just as much as the house of any man in this Senate belongs to him. Upon the foundation of this property in the insurance companies the Geneva tribunal made an award; and no sophistry can hide the injustice of taking that money received in payment for that property and giving it to somebody else, or covering it into the Treasury of the United States, there to remain.

Sir, it is all "sticking in the bark" to talk about trusteeship or right to prosecute a suit, or this being but an insurance company, or the like. Here is the simple, fixed fact: For the property owned by these insurance companies the Geneva tribunal awarded so much money. Now there are men whose sense of justice will enable them to say that having obtained that money thus belonging to these insurance companies, as much as we obtained money from property that was not insured, but was destroyed, we can, in respect to the property that was not destroyed, pay the loser, but in regard to the property that was insured we shall take the money that was paid for it and keep it ourselves, or give it to somebody else. That is all of it. I do not care whether you call the United States trustee or not trustee. I know this, that if for the property which belongs to my friend who sits on my left, I get the value, it is law, and it is morals, and it is my duty to pay that money over to him. That is what I know, and until so plain a principle of justice as that can be overthrown, there is but really one side to this question.

But, sir, there is another thing that I invite the attention of the Senators to, and that is that a large majority of these claims are held by mutual insurance companies, and the mutual insurance companies were just as much self-insurers as was the owner of a single ship who sailed it at his own risk and had no communication with anybody else. They are just as much individuals sailing their own ships as are A, B, C, D, and E F, between whom no communication whatever exists, who were sailing their ships.

Mr. President, in the consideration of a great question like this, that involves such principles of justice, that involves the national honor, I do hope that we shall not hear much declamation about great and overgrown insurance companies. When the time comes in this country that the Government of the United States shall say to a claimant upon it for justice, "We won't pay you because you are rich, though you have a good claim, though all law, all justice, all morals require that the money that was obtained for your property, and which is in our hands, should be paid to you, but you are rich, we won't pay you, we will take the money and give it to somebody else or keep it ourselves," the end of our Government will not be far off. Sir, there was a time when all States in the Union required the judges to swear that they would administer justice without respect to the rich or the poor, do equal justice. That was the oath in my own State which we all had to take before we took our seats on the bench, and that is the judicial oath almost everywhere. But it seems that when the Senate is to decide a question of this kind, instead of saying we will do justice without respect to persons, equal justice to the rich and the poor, we are to inquire, not what the law is, not what justice is, but what is the length of the claimant's purse. I cannot do it.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, one single moment. If the honorable Senator from Ohio thinks that is a fair statement of the position, of course he is entitled to his opinion. The proposition offered has nothing whatever to do with whether an insurance company is rich or poor, whether an individual is rich or poor, but the point is whether either can show a loss. If you are as rich as Croesus and can show a loss we will make it up to you; if you are as poor as poverty and cannot show a loss you have no status in this court. That is or should be the voice of the Senate. It is a question of who was loser, not whether the man is rich or poor to-day. You may bring an insurance company here that may show that it actually met a loss, and it may be the richest one in the whole country, and yet justice will be freely accorded. I beg to assure the honorable Senator from Ohio that all sense of justice has not died out in the Senate of the United States, even though the judicial oath may have been changed in some States. The question will never be asked here whether the insurance company was rich or whether it was poor. The question will be asked, when they come to this bar and claim a share of the money awarded at Geneva, "Did you suffer a loss? Are you here for reimbursement or for gratuity? If you can prove your loss, we will endeavor to reimburse you. If you are here to get money as a mere matter of profit for which you can show no loss, I hope the Senate of the United States will say as it did before, 'You are not a proper claimant, and you may go about your business.'"

Mr. McDONALD. I now ask that the special order be taken up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is not any special order, I think.

Mr. THURMAN. The special order was postponed on my motion, but I am perfectly willing, as it was the understanding of the Senator from Indiana that it should be considered to-day, that the pending bill may be laid aside informally and that we go on with the special order. I hope by unanimous consent the pending bill may be laid aside informally in order that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of the special order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not informally, because I do not know whether it ought to come up next, to the exclusion of all other business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The understanding of the Senate was that the special order should be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not know that the bill of the Senator from Indiana was a special order. I am not objecting to that. I was objecting to the request of the Senator from Ohio that the bill we have been discussing be laid aside informally.

Mr. THURMAN. Allow me to state the status of the Calendar this morning. The bill of the Senator from Indiana had been made the special order——

Mr. McDONALD. But it was the understanding that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] should be heard on the bill which has been pending.

Mr. THURMAN. The understanding was that the special order should be laid aside in order to enable the Senator from Illinois to address the Senate on the subject of the Geneva award.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That was the understanding.

Mr. THURMAN. In order to enable the Senator from Illinois to address the Senate, the special order was not laid aside informally, but I moved to postpone the present and all former orders and to take up the Geneva award bill. That was done. I am perfectly willing to set my friend's bill back just where it was when my motion was put and carried. I suggest that the pending bill be laid aside, and that we take up the bill which was made the special order for to-day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To that I object.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator from Vermont does not like that. I am perfectly willing that the Senator from Indiana should move to take up his bill.

MILITARY WARRANT LAND LOCATIONS.

Mr. McDONALD. I move that the bill (S. No. 19) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and certify the amount of land located with military warrants in the States described therein, and for other purposes, be taken up for present consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. With the consent of my friend from Indiana I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask to make a report from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will withdraw the motion for that purpose.

GEOLOGICAL AND GEOGRAPHICAL SURVEY OF THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. WHYTE. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back the following concurrent resolution and recommend its passage; and I ask for its present consideration:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be printed at the Government Printing Office, for the use of the Department of the Interior, 1,500 copies each of volumes 4 and 12, and 1,200 copies each of volumes 3, 8, and 13 of the final reports of the Geological and Geographical Survey of the Territories, in quarto form, with necessary illustrations, uniform with the edition ordered by Congress.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear some explanation of the resolution, why these volumes are to be printed only for the use of the Interior Department, when there are hundreds of applications for them constantly coming to Senators.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I renew the motion for an executive session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at three o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 9, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of Friday last was read and approved.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

Mr. KEIFER asked and obtained unanimous consent for the admission of Hon. Thomas Cowgill, speaker of the house of representatives of Ohio, and Hon. John F. Gervey, of Ohio, to the floor of the House for this day.

Mr. ELLIS asked and obtained unanimous consent for admission to the floor of the House for to-day of Major B. M. Harrod, State engineer of Louisiana.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour will begin at twenty minutes past twelve o'clock. This being Monday the first business in order during the morning hour is the call of States and Territories for the introduction on leave of bills and joint resolutions for reference to their appropriate committees. During this call memorials and resolutions of State and territorial Legislatures are in order, and also resolutions calling for executive information, for reference to appropriate committees.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills, &c., be continued until all the States have been called, even though it carry it beyond the morning hour.

Mr. FINLEY. I object.

Mr. DICKEY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4398) granting a pension to John M. Scott, late private Company D, Sixtieth Ohio Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ARMY CHAPLAINS.

Mr. McCOOK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4399) to regulate the appointment, assignment, and duties of chaplains in the Army, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JULIA AND IMOGENE HARRIS.

Mr. O'NEILL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4400) for the relief of Julia and Imogene Harris; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

UNSTAMPED DOCUMENTS OR PAPERS.

Mr. WHITE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4401) to provide for the stamping of unstamped documents or papers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. GRIFFIN.

Mr. WHITE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4402) for the relief of George W. Griffin, late second lieutenant Company H, Sixty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOMESTEADS.

Mr. WHITE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4403) to amend section 2305 of the Revised Statutes, which allows certificates in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps to be deducted from the time required to perfect title to a homestead; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

I. R. COGHAN.

Mr. WHITE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4404) granting a pension to I. R. Coghan; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

REORGANIZATION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. WHITE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4405) to reduce and reorganize the Army of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

J. S. PAYNE.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4406) to authorize the President to appoint Captain J. S. Payne, Fifth United States Cavalry, a major in the Adjutant-General's Office; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

OSAGE INDIAN TRUST AND DIMINISHED RESERVE LANDS.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4407) to graduate the price and dispose of the residue of the Osage Indian trust and diminished-reserve lands lying east of the sixth principal meridian, in Kansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ACTING ASSISTANT SURGEONS.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4408) in relation to acting assistant surgeons of the Army of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

S. F. F. MERCER.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4409) granting a pension to S. F. F. Mercer, late surgeon Forty-ninth Veteran Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL CONVENTION OF 1880.

Mr. BLISS introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 209) granting the use of the National Museum building, now in process of erection in Washington, District of Columbia, to the democratic national convention of 1880; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4410) amending sections 3244 and 3295 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair repeats that he has been up to this time notified by four members of the House that they are respectively authorized by committees of which they are members to move a suspension of the rules for the passage of certain resolutions and bills. Among these members is the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] whom the Chair now recognizes, and who states that he is acting under instructions from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. The bill which I propose to put on its passage under a suspension of the rules has been unanimously agreed to by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WEAVER. I rise to a point of order. It occurs to me that the rule which the Chair seems to have adopted in reference to recognitions for motions to suspend the rules would forever preclude any individual member from obtaining the floor for the purpose of moving such a suspension.

The SPEAKER. That is not a point of order.

Mr. WEAVER. It seems to me that Rule 145 extends no such special privilege to gentlemen representing committees in preference to individual members. Hence I would like to have a distinct ruling or intimation from the Chair as to whether his present ruling is in accordance with the uniform custom of the House. I know that the Chair desires to be fair; and for that reason I make this point of order as to whether a gentleman representing a committee is entitled under the rules to any preference over any other member who may wish to move a suspension of the rules on Monday.

The SPEAKER. The right of recognition is with the Chair, under the rules and under the practice. During the last and the present session the Chair has laid down for himself as a rule which would govern him in all cases, that where a member claiming the floor for a motion to suspend the rules states that he does so under instructions from a committee, the Chair will recognize him in preference to any individual member. The Chair thinks it not only just but in the direction of promoting legislation that a committee in their collective capacity should have the right of recognition in preference to an individual member.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I made a point upon this subject the other day, which I hope the Chair will take into consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has taken the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] spoken heretofore into consideration this morning, and has recognized a gentleman of the minority of the House.

Mr. WEAVER. There is another minority here, still smaller. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Whenever the gentleman from Iowa claims the floor as the representative of a committee the Chair will give him the preference

Mr. GILLETTE. I wish to inquire how the "party of the center" in this House can make a report from a committee?

The SPEAKER. There is no such committee known to the rules composed of a "party of the center."

Mr. GILLETTE. I would like to make one further inquiry: Have not these committees the privilege of reporting on any other day of the week, while no member can introduce resolutions or bills on any day except Monday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has generally been informed that these recognitions are sought with the unanimous consent of the committees concerned. The Chair has no doubt of the thorough propriety and equity of his position. He will, however, cause to be read in support of his position an extract from the Journal of April 9, 1879.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GARFIELD, from the Committee on the Rules, submitted the following report; which was read, considered, and, under the operation of the previous question, agreed to, to wit:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the resolution of the House in reference to a modification of Rules 59 and 113, or of the practice which has arisen under them, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to present the following report:

The rules under consideration are as follows:

"59. When two or more members happen to rise at once, the Speaker shall name the member who is first to speak.—April 7, 1789.

"113. The rules of proceedings in the House shall be observed in a Committee of the Whole House, so far as they may be applicable, except the rule limiting the times of speaking—April 7, 1789; but no member shall speak twice to any question until every member choosing to speak shall have spoken.—December 18, 1805."

With the exception of the last clause of Rule 113, which was adopted in 1805, these rules have remained unchanged for ninety years. In the nature of the case discretion must be lodged with the presiding officer, and no fixed and arbitrary order of recognition can be wisely provided for in advance; and the committee are of opinion that these rules should not be changed.

The practice of making a list of those who desire to speak on measures before the House or Committee of the Whole is a proper one to enable the presiding officer to know and remember the wishes of members. As to the order of recognition, he should not be bound to follow the list, but should be free to exercise a wise and just discretion in the interest of full and fair debate.

The committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

The SPEAKER. This report, which was adopted by the House without a division, sustains the Chair thoroughly in the exercise of the discretion by which he recognizes a gentleman representing a committee in preference to an individual member.

Mr. FINLEY. I understand the Chair to say that he only recognizes gentlemen acting under instructions of committees where the committee is unanimous.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated that, so far as the recognitions heretofore were concerned during the present session, the gentleman recognized was in each case acting under the unanimous instruction of his committee. But the Chair does not say that he will feel bound to apply such a rule. There might be cases in which the majority of a committee, under the practice adopted by the Chair, would be entitled to recognition, although there might be in the committee a dissenting minority. In the remarks referred to by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINLEY] the Chair was simply enforcing his position by stating that almost all, if not all, the recognitions thus far during the present session for motions to suspend the rules had been in favor of gentlemen who acted under the unanimous instruction of their respective committees; and the Chair is advised that the gentleman from Kansas now on the floor is acting in obedience to the unanimous voice of his committee.

Mr. FINLEY. The difficulty is that under this practice individual members will be altogether precluded from recognition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the proposition of an individual member should never come in conflict with the collective voice of a committee. The gentleman from Kansas will indicate his motion.

LAND DISTRICT IN KANSAS.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the Clerk, a bill (H. R. No. 4411) to establish an additional land district in the State of Kansas. This bill has been prepared by the Committee on Public Lands as a substitute for House bill No. 3190.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the following-described territory in the State of Kansas, to wit: commencing at the southeast corner of township 35 south, range 27 west of the sixth principal meridian, on the south boundary of the State of Kansas; thence west on said southern boundary to the western boundary of said State; thence north on said western boundary to the third standard parallel south; thence east along said parallel to the northeast corner of township 16 south, range 27 west; and thence south to the place of beginning, in the State of Kansas, shall constitute an additional land district, to be called the southwestern land district, the location for the office of which shall be designated by the President of the United States, and shall by him from time to time be changed as the public interest may seem to require.

SEC. 2. That the President be, and he hereby is, authorized, whenever the public interests shall require, to appoint, in accordance with existing laws authorizing appointment to office, a register and a receiver for the district hereby created, who shall each be required to reside at the site of the office for said district, have the same powers, responsibilities, and emoluments, and be subject to the same acts and penalties which are, or may be, prescribed by law in relation to other land offices of the United States.

SEC. 3. That all sales and locations made at the offices of the districts in which the lands embraced in this district have hitherto been included, situated wholly within the limits of this district, which shall be valid and right in other respects up to the day on which the new office shall go into operation, be, and the same are hereby, confirmed.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, to suspend the rules and pass the bill, it was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

On motion of Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, State Senator Lee, of Illinois, was allowed to come upon the floor.

PRACTICE AND SUITS FOR INFRINGEMENTS OF PATENTS.

Mr. THOMAS. I have been directed unanimously by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws to move to suspend the rules and discharge that committee from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 4412) as a substitute for House bill 3767, to regulate practice in suits brought to recover damages for infringement of patents, and that the bill be passed.

The bill, which was read, provides that hereafter in any suit brought in any court having jurisdiction in patent cases for an alleged use or infringement of any patented article, device, process, invention, or discovery, where it shall appear that the defendant in such suit purchased the same in good faith for his own personal use from the manufacturer thereof, or from a person or firm engaged in the open sale or practical application thereof, and applied the same for and to his own use and not for sale, if the plaintiff shall recover a judgment for $5 or less as damages the court shall adjudge that he pay all costs of suit; and if the plaintiff shall not recover the sum of $20 or over the court shall adjudge him to pay all his own costs, unless it shall also appear that the defendant at the time of such purchase or practical application had knowledge or actual notice of the existence of such patent; provided that nothing contained herein shall apply to articles manufactured outside of the United States.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 101, noes 25.

Mr. ROBINSON. No quorum has voted.

Mr. BAKER. We might as well have the yeas and nays.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Yes, let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 196, nays 28, not voting 68; as follows:

Mr. PAGE. My colleague, Mr. BERRY, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. HARMER. Mr. DICK is paired with Mr. ELAM.

On motion of Mr. DUNNELL, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

ESTABLISHMENT OF TITLES IN HOT SPRINGS.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to move that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 4244) for the establishment of titles in Hot Springs, and for other purposes, and that the bill be passed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior, within ten days after the passage of this act, to transmit to the United States land office at Little Rock, Arkansas, the final report of the commissioners appointed under an act approved March 3, 1877, entitled "An act in relation to the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas," together with the survey and map made by said commissioners, and accompanying their said report, which report and map show the award of titles to lands made by the commissioners under the provisions of said act; and shall instruct the United States land officers at Little Rock to allow the lots and lands awarded to individuals or associations on the Hot Springs reservation to be entered as hereinafter provided, and shall cause patents of the usual form used in the sale of public lands to be issued therefor except in cases hereinafter to be specified; and it shall be the duty of the land officers at Little Rock to give thirty days' notice in the Little Rock and Hot Springs newspapers of the time when said lands will be subject to entry under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. That any persons, their heirs or legal representatives, in whose favor said commissioners, or the court to which appeals may be taken under the provisions of this act, shall have finally adjudicated, shall have the sole right to enter and pay for the amount of land the commissioners may have adjudged them to be entitled to purchase, at any time within twelve months next after the expiration of the thirty days' notice by the land officers required in the preceding section to be given, by paying on every separate certificate of award covering a lot of one acre, or of any fraction of an acre, the sum of $10; and on every separate certificate covering more than one acre but not over two acres, the sum of $20; and on every separate certificate covering more than two acres but not over three acres, the sum of $30; and so on at this rate, paying an additional $10 on every additional acre or fraction of an acre covered by any certificate.

SEC. 3. That a revision may be had in equity of the adjudications and award, of the right of entry of lots made by the commissioners, the correctness of which may be questioned on account of fraud, gross error, or mistake, and to that end jurisdiction is conferred upon the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Arkansas, and said court shall be deemed as open at all times for the exercise of the jurisdiction hereby conferred. Any and all persons feeling themselves aggrieved by any award or decision made by the commissioners for the causes aforesaid may apply to the judge of said court for an order suspending the entry or sale of the lot or lots to which they feel themselves entitled, not awarded them, and not included in the permanent reservation, at any time within twenty days after the first publication of the notice of the opening of the land office as aforesaid, by preparing their bill of complaint upon which the application is to be made, and delivering a copy thereof to and serving notice upon the adverse party of the intended application, five days prior to the date of such application, or in default of such delivery of a copy and notice, shall satisfy the court of their inability to do so. If, upon consideration of the bill and affidavit supporting it, in conjunction with the answer, should any be filed, and affidavits supporting it, or, in default of answer, upon the bill alone, the judge shall be of opinion that a case for equitable intervention on the grounds of fraud, gross error, or mistake as aforesaid is primarily made, he shall make an order suspending the entry or sale of the lot or lots involved in the suit, and cause a copy thereof to be delivered to the land officers at Little Rock, Arkansas, prior to the opening of their office for entries as herein provided, which order shall be obeyed until countermanded by the court or Secretary of the Interior. Parties not served with a copy of bill and notice as aforesaid shall be brought before the court by the usual process, when an order of suspension has been made as above provided, and may file their answer, with affidavits supporting it, and if, upon consideration thereof, together with the bill, the court is of opinion that a case for equitable intervention is not primarily made, the order suspending the entry shall be vacated, the cause dismissed, and the land officers served with a copy of the order vacating the suspension, after which entries or sales may be made as though such suspension had never been ordered.

SEC. 4. That all cases presented as aforesaid, in which a suspension of entries shall be ordered, as above provided, the court shall proceed to ascertain, try, and determine the better right as between the contestants, and to that end may admit exemplifications of the maps and plats of the land office at Little Rock, Arkansas, and the testimony taken before the commissioners; and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to make, or cause to be made, such exemplifications, and to transmit the testimony so taken as aforesaid upon the proper demand of the court; and the court shall admit any other and further testimony before it essential to the proper determination of such causes, and may at all times make such rules as may be needful to secure costs and bring such causes to a speedy hearing and determination.

SEC. 5. Upon the determination of such causes the court shall certify its decision in each case to the Secretary of the Interior, and thereupon he shall issue the necessary instructions to the land officers at Little Rock, Arkansas, to permit entries in conformity with the decision of the court, as provided by the second section of this act, at any time within twelve months next after the date of such instructions.

SEC. 6. That all claimants who failed in whole or in part to get an award for the lands they claimed, shall, although said lands may not have been awarded to others, and provided the same be not included in the permanent reservation, have the same right of revision, subject to the same conditions as prescribed in section 3 of this act; and if the judgment of the court be in their favor, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to instruct the land officers at Little Rock to allow entries of said lands, in accordance with the judgment of the court, upon payment being made according to the rate established in section 2 of this act, at any time within twelve months after the date of the decision of the court in the case: Provided, That this shall not apply to lots or lands set apart for school or church purposes.

SEC. 7. That those divisions of the Hot Springs reservation, known as the mountainous districts, not divided by streets on the map made by the commissioners, but known and defined on the map and in the report of the commissioners as North Mountain, West Mountain, and Sugar Loaf Mountain, be, and the same are hereby, forever reserved from sale, and dedicated to public use as parks, to be known, with Hot Springs Mountain, as the permanent reservation.

SEC. 8. That whenever the town of Hot Springs shall procure elsewhere a suitable burying-ground and shall cause the bodies now buried in the cemetery lot, within the limits of said town, to be decently removed and reinterred, the title to said cemetery lot shall vest in the corporation of said town, to be held and used forever as a town or city park, and not otherwise.

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to designate as many as six lots from the unawarded grounds on the Hot Springs reservation for the use of the common schools of the corporation of the town of Hot Springs, as sites for school-houses, and the lots when so designated are hereby dedicated to the use of common schools, and shall be used, controlled, and managed by the common-school officials of the district in which they may be located for such purposes only.

SEC. 10. That the streets, courts, and alleys, and other thoroughfares of the town of Hot Springs, as surveyed, opened, or established by the commissioners and represented on the map of said town, and not included in the permanent reservation be, and the same are hereby, ceded to the corporation of the town of Hot Springs.

SEC. 11. That that portion of the Hot Springs reservation laid off into lots and blocks and forming part of the town site, but not awarded to any claimants, and not otherwise disposed of or reserved by this act, shall be sold at public auction to the highest bidder, at not less than its appraised value, from time to time, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and after public notice in the usual way in the sale of public lands; and the money arising from said sales, as well as the money paid in under section 2 of this act, shall be held as a special fund for the improvement and care of the permanent reservation at Hot Springs and of the Hot Springs Creek adjacent to and between the permanent reservations, and for the maintenance of free baths for the invalid poor of the United States, as provided by acts of Congress.

SEC. 12. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. FORT. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that unanimous consent be granted for some explanation of this proposition.

Mr. WARNER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to refer the bill to the Judiciary Committee?

The SPEAKER. It is not; because the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas is to discharge the Committee on Public Lands and pass the bill. The Chair is advised also that this motion is made by the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. FINLEY. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that by unanimous consent the gentleman from Arkansas, who has charge of this bill on the part of the Committee on the Public Lands, may have opportunity to explain it.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. FINLEY. Five minutes.

Mr. FORT. Oh, no; longer than that.

The SPEAKER. How much?

Mr. FORT. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that a bill with twelve sections about disputed matters, of which the papers are full, ought to have more consideration than fifteen minutes.

Mr. FINLEY. It is only done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Arkansas a modification of his motion that the rules be suspended for the purpose of having the bill brought before the House for consideration.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think this bill should be fully considered.

Mr. DUNN. What was the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER?]

The SPEAKER. It was to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, but that motion could not be entertained.

Mr. FINLEY. I hope there will be no objection to granting unanimous consent to the gentleman from Arkansas for fifteen minutes in which to explain the proposition to the House.

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman from Arkansas modify his motion?

Mr. HUNTON. I hope the gentleman from Arkansas will change his motion so as to move to suspend the rules and discharge the committee from the further consideration of the bill, and to bring it before the House for consideration.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman modify his motion? He must have instruction from his committee to that effect.

Mr. DUNN. I would prefer having the vote on the original motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. After that vote is taken, if defeated, the Chair will have to recognize another committee, of course.

Mr. DUNN. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker, to modifying my motion that the rules be suspended and the committee discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be brought before the House for consideration.

The reason for moving to suspend the rules and pass the bill is, there are only thirty days remaining of the sixty days' extension, under the resolution heretofore passed, in which to consider and legislate on this subject.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOKER. Is it in order to move to refer this to the appropriate committee?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. HOOKER. Then I hope the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill will be voted down.

Mr. DUNN. I will modify the motion to discharge the committee and consider the bill in the House.

Mr. WEAVER. I presume the gentleman cannot submit that motion if his committee has not instructed him so to do. He stated in the first place that he was instructed by the committee to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill, and he cannot modify that motion without reference to the committee. I object to any modification of the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas will state precisely what were the instructions of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DUNN. I was instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to take any and all advantage possible under the rules so as to secure the passage of this bill at the earliest day. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides under those instructions the gentleman is fully entitled to modify his motion.

Mr. WEAVER. I ask for the reading of the instructions of the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now submit the motion as modified.

Mr. WEAVER. I demand the ruling on my point of order.

Mr. FINLEY. I ask the gentleman from Arkansas to modify his motion, so as to make the bill a special order for some particular day.

Mr. WEAVER. I demand a ruling on my point of order. The gentleman has not stated he was ordered by his committee to move a suspension of the rules with a view to bringing the bill before the House for consideration.

The SPEAKER. On the contrary, the gentleman stated he was instructed to make any motion to secure the passage of the bill.

Mr. WEAVER. I ask the gentleman to state specifically what were his instructions from the committee.

The SPEAKER. The greater would include the less.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Regular order!

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to make an inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBINSON. If two-thirds vote in favor of the consideration of the bill, will then only a majority vote be required to pass the bill?

The SPEAKER. That is all. The gentleman makes his motion under what he states to be the instructions of his committee—that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be brought before the House for action.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 88, noes 54.

Mr. DUNN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 153, nays 65, not voting 74; as follows:

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill was brought before the House for consideration.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. SCALES. Mr. BLAND, of Missouri, is paired with Mr. CLAFLIN, of Massachusetts.

Mr. HOOKER. I voted "no," considering this was an important bill which ought not to pass without discussion. I understand now the proposition is simply to consider it at this time. I therefore change my vote to "ay."

Mr. STONE. Mr. SHELLEY, of Alabama, is paired with Mr. STARIN, of New York.

Mr. BELFORD. I am paired with Mr. EWING, of Ohio.

Mr. FISHER. My colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. DICK, is paired with Mr. ELAM, of Louisiana.

Mr. FIELD. My colleague from Massachusetts, Mr. NORCROSS, is paired with Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. Two-thirds having voted in favor of suspending the rules, the bill is before the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order. This bill, I believe, makes an appropriation of money or disposes of some of the public lands. I make the point of order that it should be considered in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The motion was to suspend the rules and bring the bill before the House for consideration; and the rule under which the gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order was suspended with the rest.

Mr. SPRINGER. I submit that the motion simply discharges the committee and brings the bill before the House.

The SPEAKER. For present consideration in the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. And the bill being before the House I make the point that it should be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The suspension of the rules vacates the gentleman's point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Can the previous question now be moved and the bill passed?

The SPEAKER. A majority can pass the bill in the House. The Chair stated that in reply to an inquiry made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ROBINSON.]

Mr. WARNER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARNER. This bill being now before the House for consideration, will a motion be in order to refer it to the Committee on the Judiciary?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas who made the motion to suspend the rules is entitled to be recognized as in charge of the bill, and has one hour, at the end of which, or whenever he may arrange by agreement with gentlemen on the floor, he has the right to test the sense of the House by demanding the previous question. If the House votes down the demand for the previous question, then of course the bill will be open to amendment or open to any motion permissible under the rules. A motion to lay on the table would be in order at any time.

Mr. WEAVER. I move the previous question on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] who has charge of the bill.

Mr. DUNN. I desire to be heard upon the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to one hour.

Mr. DUNN. At the end of that time I will move the previous question on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests as a matter of fair play that the gentleman shall divide his time between the friends and opponents of the bill. He might take one half hour and allow half an hour to the other side.

Mr. DUNN. It is my desire to divide the time equally. It was my purpose in modifying the motion which I originally made to give an opportunity for a full understanding and discussion of all the provisions of this bill. I desire that the House shall understand it fully, and when all its provisions are understood I am satisfied it will commend itself to the House. I wish to inquire now before going further, if the gentlemen who oppose this bill desire more time than half an hour. I wish to give the fairest and fullest opportunity for the discussion of this bill consistent with the interests involved and the limited time allowed for legislation on this subject.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Will the gentleman permit me to offer an amendment and allow discussion upon it? I do not object to the bill but I think it should be amended in some particulars.

Mr. DUNN. I could not consent to that. It is the sense of my committee that the bill should not be left open for amendment.

Mr. DUNNELL. I hope the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] will proceed with his explanation of the bill, reserving at least one-half of the time for this side of the House, or rather for the opponents of the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would inquire what is the proposition as to the time for debate?

The SPEAKER. The bill, by a suspension of the rules, is now before the House for consideration.

Mr. GARFIELD. What is the proposition that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] makes in regard to the time for discussion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman gives notice that at the end of an hour he will test the sense of the House upon ordering the previous question; and states that he desires to give one-half of that hour to the opponents of the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. Well, at the end of the hour we will see whether we want to close the discussion. The bill may be all right, but we want to understand all about it before any bargain is made.

The SPEAKER. There is no bargain at all. The gentleman proposes, as the Chair suggested, that the time for discussion, before calling the previous question, be divided between the friends and the opponents of the bill; which the Chair thinks is fair.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is all fair; but I do not think now is the proper time to fix a limit for debate upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. If at the end of the hour the House shall desire more time for discussion the demand for the previous question can be voted down.

Mr. GARFIELD. If this is a fair bill, and the committee in charge of it can show it to be such, we may get through the discussion before the end of the hour.

Mr. DUNN. I do not think any one will doubt the fairness of the provisions of this bill when they shall have been fully explained. When the decision of the Court of Claims was made in 1876, to the effect that this Hot Springs reservation belongs to the United States, it was found that there had settled upon that public reservation more than five thousand people. These settlers purchased their lands from persons who represented themselves to be owners of the land, and who, they had every reason to believe, were the owners of the land. They built their houses upon the lands they had so purchased, and it was not until this decision of the court in 1876 that very many of them were aware even of the existence of the reservation. That reservation had been made in 1832, and there was profound silence about it on the part of the Government and of its officials until 1870.

These persons who claimed to be the owners, and who sold to these settlers, were able, one of them, to exhibit a certificate of location under the New Madrid act; another was able to exhibit an actual certificate of entry granted by the Interior Department, but which was afterward canceled. These indications and muniments of title were exhibited to the people who drifted in there from time to time, and they were led to believe that they were evidences of good title on the part of those who claimed to own the lands, and did not hesitate to purchase, and erect improvements.

It has been the uniform practice of this Government to allow all settlers on public lands, all occupants of town sites, to enter their lands or their lots of ground at the minimum Government price. Salt Lake City, the city of Denver, and a number of other towns were located and built upon public land that was afterward entered at $1.25 an acre. Other towns, under the provisions of a law now in force, have been located upon land entered at $10 per lot, as is provided for by this bill.

These people on this reservation were found there, and they had all the rights that any other settlers on any other public lands of the Government ever had; that is, the right to purchase their town lots at the minimum rate provided by law.

When this decision was made the Government sent a receiver there to take possession of the town, and that receiver seized it and rented the houses of the people there to the settlers themselves for one year, and collected from them more than $40,000, which has been covered into the Treasury, with the exception of the amount necessary to pay the expense of that proceeding. Afterward the act of 1877 was passed, abolishing the receivership and providing for the Hot Springs commission, composed of three persons. The members of that commission were clothed by law with the power to lay off the town, to lay out streets, to widen streets, and to make new ones. They were also empowered to designate a permanent reservation, to hear testimony of these settlers and to determine as between claimants who should have the right to purchase the particular tracts of land in controversy.

These commissioners have heard testimony in nine hundred and fifty cases, and of this reservation of twenty-five hundred acres they have awarded seven hundred acres to six hundred and forty-seven claimants. They have valued, as they were directed under that law, the lands awarded to these several claimants. They have fixed a valuation upon the land of nearly one-fourth of a million of dollars. Where the statute provides that the settlers may enter their lots for $10 per lot, this commission have valued the lots at an average of $350 per lot.

This bill provides that these claimants shall have the right to enter their lots at $10 per lot of one acre or less; of two acres or more than one acre, at $20 per lot, and so on—an additional $10 for each additional acre or fractional part of an acre contained in the lot.

This is one of the prominent features of the bill, that it relieves from this assessment of $250,000 these people who bought their lands, paid full value for them, and have spent forty years of their lives there, have built houses and made other improvements, have planted trees, have had children born and reared there. The bill gives to these people the right to enter these lands as all other settlers upon Government reservations have had the right to do heretofore.

Another point: there comes from these people complaint that unfairness and injustice have been done in some cases in the award of the right of entry. This bill gives a right of appeal to those who can make a prima facie case for equitable intervention on account of fraud, gross error, or mistake. It does not give an appeal as a matter of course to anybody who may come and apply for it; the applicant must show a prima facie case for equitable intervention, or he cannot take an appeal.

The bill reserves about nine hundred and more acres as a permanent reservation, including the Hot Springs, the North Mountain, the Sugar Loaf Mountain, and the West Mountain. All these are permanent reservations for the future use of the Government, where it can erect a great sanitarium if it sees proper to do so.

These are the important points of the bill, and the only features which differed from the legislation heretofore had, and from the policy which has been adopted under the workings of the commission and from their recommendations.

Mr. HAWLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. It is represented here that all the parties interested are satisfied except half a dozen or so. Now, how many are dissatisfied?

Mr. DUNN. All are dissatisfied with the assessment made upon their property. It is thought there will not be more than fifteen or twenty appeals taken from the decision under the provisions of this act.

Mr. REED. Has there been a report by the commissioners as to their reasons for giving this enlarged valuation to the land?

Mr. DUNN. A report has been made, but no special reason has been given. The commissioners say that they have assessed the property at something less than its actual value.

Mr. REED. Is that report among the public documents of this session?

Mr. DUNN. It is. It is Senate Executive Document No. 21.

Mr. MCMAHON. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. I wish to know whether the grounds reserved for the Government—the nine hundred acres—immediately surround the springs whose medicinal qualities are world-wide?

Mr. DUNN. One portion of the reservation, under the act of 1877, embraces the Hot Springs Mountain, and includes all the hot water. The other reservations do not immediately surround that, but lie adjacent, and are reserved because they are mountainous, not well fitted for settlement, and being covered with fine forest trees may be especially suitable for park purposes.

Mr. MCMAHON. If the gentleman will yield to me a few moments——

Mr. DUNN. I yield to the gentleman for five minutes.

Mr. MCMAHON. I have made this inquiry of the gentleman because in my opinion the Government of the United States has more use for these springs than any individual or any other corporation can have. We have at present not less than eight thousand disabled soldiers in our public institutions, and this number is probably increasing from year to year as we recede in point of time from the war. More than one-half of the inmates of these institutions are compelled now to reside in comparatively northern climates—some of them in Maine, some in Wisconsin, and others, I may say the bulk of them, in my own State. I know that a great portion of these men might be largely benefited if the Government of the United States would only utilize the great property which it has at the Hot Springs, would beautify that spot as it can, and make it a resort for disabled Union soldiers, including the survivors of future wars in which our country may be involved. Of course I hope that we shall not have such wars; but still the possibility is before us. I would therefore like to have it understood, and would like the country to know, not only for the purpose of the present legislation but with reference to the future, that the Government is never to give up any claims whatever to the bulk of this land now in its possession, nor under any circumstances part with its exclusive rights in regard to these waters.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] who has charge of this bill to state to the House how far it differs from the recommendations of the commissioners in addition to the matter of price or valuation.

Mr. DUNN. It differs in no respect from any recommendation they made, so far as I am now advised. It follows the recommendations of the commission, but it grants the right of appeal, in the terms I have stated, from the decision of the commission to the Federal courts, and reduces the assessment.

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman will yield to me for a few minutes, I would like to state what I have understood.

Mr. DUNN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count these five minutes as a part of the thirty minutes allotted to the opponents of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I understand from the report of the commission, which I have read, that they have settled the long-standing disputed claims, so far as it was possible to do so, with due regard to equity and right. With this settlement there are of course many claimants dissatisfied. I understand the prices which they have fixed for the lands to claimants where claims have been allowed is a reasonable one, and satisfactory to the claimants, or was so at the time the awards were severally made to them. Since all that has been settled, and since the time when these claimants were glad to come in and pay to the Government the amount assessed on them or certified to their several claims, this bill has been prepared in the interest of those who desire to contest claims and who have not had their claims allowed. That is one party; and they have been joined by all those to whom these claims have been allowed, believing their claims are now safe and will be confirmed, and their titles will be made good. They come in now and desire to have their lands at prices mentioned in this bill—ten shillings an acre, or $5 an acre, or whatever it may be. I learn it is $10 per acre and under.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, and I speak, sir, from communication I have had with some of the commissioners, as if these men who had squatter claims which were of no legal validity whatever, made upon the public lands with due notice, paid for to other parties for the very sake of having some claim as an entering-wedge when it should be settled, do wrong to this House and the country to come in and urge a bill giving them their lands, to the exclusion of all other people of the United States, for a mere song. It does not seem to me right, and in that view of the case I see no reason why men who are perfectly willing to pay the amount which the commissioners assessed and estimated for their claims, having secured their rights against all the other claimants and against all the other people of the United States, as soon as they succeeded against the rights of the world, should come in and demand they should have their lands virtually for nothing. I suppose there are acres of this land which could be sold within ten days from this time, if the claim was confirmed, for ten, fifteen, or twenty thousand dollars an acre; and yet they come and ask this House to give away the rights of the Government without any real equity in them, for when we have allowed them to come in and take them at the prices proposed all the equities have been fulfilled.

It seems to me, sir, this House has no right to vote away $350,000 to the successful claimants and enable them to get for nothing their lots and their acres and more than acres, to get them for a small pittance and then turn around and hold the rest of the people of the United States to the necessity of paying five, ten, fifteen, or twenty thousand dollars an acre. That is legislating in the interest of those who have forced themselves upon the public domain to get possession of it to the exclusion of all others and then ask the Government and this House to vote away money they would be required to pay that they may exact from others enormous prices.

The lands around these springs, as I understand from looking at the maps and the report of the commission, are limited to a small tract which is capable of receiving the flow of the hot springs. Now, all that is sold. The Government has reserved those higher peaks, those hills or mountains as they are called, around these springs where there can be no flow of the hot water from the springs to make them available. All the rest, immediately away from the springs, has been given away to these claimants. And, in looking over the report, it seemed to me as if it were a mockery to the people of the United States that the Government should give away for a pittance all the available land upon which sanitary and hospital buildings could be erected where they could receive the direct flow of these valuable waters without resorting to the process of pumping, or of carrying the water in pipes to other places. It is given away to men who will batten and batten on the infirmities of the people.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has indicated to the Chair a desire to speak in opposition to this proposition. How much time does he want?

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. It is not my purpose to oppose the bill; but I have a few suggestions to make to the gentleman having it in charge.

Mr. DUNN. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. About ten minutes.

Mr. DUNN. I will yield to the gentleman that much time.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I am quite familiar with all the facts and circumstances connected with this bill, as well as the reasons which should influence its passage. I know the people of Hot Springs well. Many of them are my best and most intimate friends, and I think I know their wants, their wishes, and their rights. From this knowledge I am satisfied that this bill, or some one similar to it in the object and purpose sought to be attained, is eminently just and proper and ought to be passed by this House at as early a period as possible. If the preparation of this measure had been submitted to me I should, I think, have constructed it somewhat differently in several of its provisions; but in what I shall say I do not desire to be understood as opposing its passage, but merely as making some suggestions for the consideration of the House and the members of the committee which reported it, in the hope that it may be deemed proper to make the alterations and amendments which I shall point out.

I think it a matter of very grave doubt whether or not the bill in its present form will stand the test of legal criticism when considered in respect to the constitutional questions which it presents. I am of opinion from the hasty examination which I have been able to give the bill that it is in conflict with that principle of constitutional law which forbids legislation calculated to impair the obligations of contracts or vested rights. The act of Congress approved March 3, 1877, entitled "An act in relation to the Hot Springs reservation," recognized certain quasi-property rights which different classes of persons had acquired to property on the reservation by reason of occupancy and improvement of the same, and provided the method and manner by which those rights should be established and maintained. That law has been partially executed, and indeed almost entirely so, and in so far as the proposed bill will affect the executed part of the former law it will, I think, be pronounced by the courts unconstitutional and void. I am apprehensive, therefore, that the gentlemen who are urging the passage of this bill in its present form will in all probability defeat the very object which they have in view if they should succeed in making it a law.

This objection is, I think, of sufficient gravity to suggest a more careful consideration of the bill than can be given to it under a motion to suspend the rules for its passage. But there are other objections which are to my mind more formidable than this one. While an appeal is ostensibly allowed to a party feeling himself aggrieved, yet it is practically denied by the extraordinary conditions coupled with a pretended grant of the right, for, as it will be seen by an examination of one of the clauses of the bill to which I propose to call attention, it is made to depend upon the discretion of a single judge whether the appeal shall be granted at all or not. It gives to the district judge the right to determine from the appellant's bill of complaint or declaration whether or not he has good ground for appeal, and if he believes the grounds stated to be insufficient, whether through ignorance, mistake, or inadvertence the application for appeal is to be at once dismissed, and that, too, without notice or hearing, and this order is final. The application for appeal being under this provision of the bill addressed to the discretion of the court, of course no appeal from an order dismissing this application would be entertained by a superior court, for it is a well-settled principle of law that the exercise of a judicial discretion vested by law can be in no way controlled or restrained by an appellate court.

Logically and practically construed this provision of the bill may be said to give a right to a party to sue out his writ for the commencement of an action which the law says he may bring, and at the same time give the judge before whom it is returnable the right to dismiss it without allowing the plaintiff to be heard in support of his right of action. If this is so it will of course be seen that the right of appeal which is pretended to be given in this bill is a sham and a fraud, a shallow device to mislead and quiet the clamor being made by the victims of unjust judgments. The provision of the bill to which I allude is found on page 6, from line 25 to the close of the paragraph, which I now send to the Clerk's desk and request to be read.

The judge shall be of opinion that a case for equitable intervention on the grounds of fraud, gross error, or mistake as aforesaid is primarily made, he shall make an order suspending the entry or sale of the lot or lots involved in the suit, and cause a copy thereof to be delivered to the land officers at Little Rock, Arkansas, prior to the opening of their office for entries as herein provided, which order shall be obeyed until countermanded by the court or Secretary of the Interior. Parties not served with a copy of bill and notice as aforesaid shall be brought before the court by the usual process, when an order of suspension has been made as above provided, and may file their answer, with affidavits supporting it, and if, upon consideration thereof, together with the bill, the court is of opinion that a case for equitable intervention is not primarily made, the order suspending the entry shall be vacated, the cause dismissed, and the land officers served with a copy of the order vacating the suspension, after which entries or sales may be made as though such suspension had never been ordered.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. It will be observed, Mr. Speaker, that the language just read would clothe the judge of a United States district court before whom the appeal here provided for must be prosecuted, with a more enlarged judicial discretion than was ever conferred by statute law upon any single judge since the organization of our Government, and I undertake to say that no precedent can be found for it in the history of our entire judicial legislation. In the bill it is proposed to vest the aggrieved citizen with the right of appeal and at the same time empower the judge to say whether or not he shall have it. This involves a conflict of rights and powers and a contradiction in the spirit and meaning of a legislative act which smacks strongly of the farcical and absurd. Where is the good sense or necessity of giving a right to one man the exercise of which may be denied and absolutely prevented by the arbitrary will and discretion of another?

If it is true, as has been repeatedly and openly charged in newspaper publications and broadly intimated by gentlemen on the floor, that three men charged with the execution of an important public trust, and supposed to be learned in the law, were unable to comprehend the legal principles involved or to determine correctly the questions of fact presented, or were too weak to resist the temptation of greed and the agencies of corruption, it would seem to be an unsafe experiment to intrust one man with a revision of their action and allow him to be accessible to the same agencies, influences, and surroundings. If, in other words, three men made such wretched mistakes as are charged to the account of the Hot Springs commissioners, would it be wise or safe to intrust the duty in which they seem to have made so sad a failure to a single man with no restraint upon his judgment or discretion and no appeal from his decrees? If an aggrieved party were given the right in this bill to be heard at all before one man, even, it would not be so bad, but this is not given except under such qualifications and conditions as render it imperfect and ineffectual. Without the consent of the judge a party seeking an appeal could never set his foot in the court-room, could never approach the temple of justice, which, it has been said, should always be open for every one who has a cause of grievance.

The right of appeal, if given at all, should be absolute and unconditional, and should not depend upon the caprice or discretion of any single judge.

I have still another objection to this measure, as I find in it the want of another feature, the lack of another provision which I deem of more importance, more vital to the interest of aggrieved parties and the certain administration of justice than any others which it does or could contain. The right of trial by jury is, in the estimation of the Anglo-Saxon race, the dearest and most sacred of all the rights they have won in the struggles, wars, and revolutions of three thousand years. They have been taught to believe that their rights are never so secure as when guarded by the watchful vigilance of twelve of their peers, sitting in the jury-box, under restraints and obligations of law. And few citizens of this country are willing to submit their rights to the judgment of any other tribunal. But I see that this is not provided for in any of the sections of this bill, the framers seeming to have forgotten that there was any such institution known in this country as a right of trial by jury.

I cannot perceive in the facts and circumstances connected with the Hot Springs matter any reason why a trial by jury should be withheld from any of those who may seek to reverse the findings of the commission. Of course I do not know and cannot undertake to give the reasons which influenced the Committee on Public Lands to omit in this bill that vital and essential feature of trial by jury which, in my judgment, should be incorporated in every law by which the rights of citizens are to be fixed and determined; and I will not therefore undertake any criticism of their action in this particular further than to remark that I do not believe it will meet public expectations or the demands of justice. Judges, ex necessitate, must in most cases be vested with the sole power of expounding the law, but the jury is the safer source from which to receive the facts.

In the absence of any stronger reason than appears upon the face of the bill, or that has been made known to me from any other source, I must insist that there shall be an amendment providing for the calling of a jury in cases where either party demands it, before I can give the measure my support. I would respectfully point out to the committee and to the House another objection which I regard as well worthy of consideration and which would alone, independent of all others, shape my own action in this matter. I do not find in the bill any provision authorizing an appeal from whatever judgment the district judge may in his discretion see proper to pronounce, so that his decision, whether right or wrong, whether honestly or corruptly made, must be final, so far as anything to the contrary appears upon the face of this bill. It has been intimated to me within the last few minutes, by a gentleman near me, that an appeal would follow if asked for from the decree of the district judge under existing laws, without any specific direction to that effect in the present bill. It is possible that this view may be correct, but I think it a matter of sufficient doubt to be put at rest by an explicit declaration. If an appeal would lie under this law without being provided for, I do not see why one could not be prosecuted under the act of 1877, as that, I should think, would be as much subject to the provisions of the general law as this one, and if this suggestion is correct, the passage of this bill in so far as it is designed to secure an appeal is unnecessary. If the claimants to the Hot Springs reservation are to be given the right of appeal from one tribunal, I can perceive no good reason why it should not be extended to the court of last resort, provided the amount involved would give that right under existing general laws.

These suggestions, Mr. Speaker, hurriedly given, occur to me as proper to be considered in the discussion of a measure so important as this one. I hope I shall not be understood as opposing the passage of this measure when amended in the particulars I have mentioned. In all its other features, I believe, it is unobjectionable, and I shall give it my most hearty support. I feel great interest in the future of Hot Springs, and am anxious for such legislation as will secure as far as may be the rights and interest of all the people there, and that will make it, what it ought to be and what nature has fitted it to be, the foremost health resort in the world. It ought to be, and will be if rightly managed, the Baden-Baden of this country, and dispense blessings and benefits to the afflicted which can be secured nowhere else on earth. I hope, therefore, that this bill will be most carefully considered, and that the House may be thoroughly advised of its future effect and operations before it is finally acted upon. There are many other views upon this important subject which I should be glad to present if there was more time allowed me in which to do so, and should an opportunity be presented in the future I may, with the indulgence of the House, speak further upon it.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Tennessee permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Yes, sir.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. I would like to ask the gentleman if any of these lands were ever taxed by the State of Arkansas for State purposes?

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I am not able to answer the gentleman's question, although I presume some of the members from that State can give him the information he asks.

Mr. DUNN. In response to the gentleman from Iowa, I will state that they have not been taxed since the decision of the Court of Claims, but they were before, as I am informed.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I am in favor of the bill, Mr. Speaker, with the exception of the provisions to which I have referred.

Mr. REED. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question for information. I find in reading this report there were certificates for condemned buildings issued by the commission in 1879 to the amount of $74,696. By whom is that sum to be paid?

Mr. DUNN. By the Government, if paid at all. That matter is not included in this bill. It has been left out.

Mr. REED. I know nothing of this matter, but wish only to get information to guide myself in voting upon it. If the Government is to receive but $20,000 for this land, and has gone to work and laid out streets and made a city of it, and has gone to the expense of at least $74,000 and is to receive but $20,000, it seems to me there must be some mistake about this matter somewhere.

Mr. DUNN. The simple answer to that, Mr. Speaker, is that if the Government has taken wrongful and extraordinary proceeding to go and seize a town at great expense instead of allowing it to be entered quietly and inexpensively, why it is not the fault of this people, and they should not be taxed with the blunder on the part of the Government in doing toward that town what was never done to any other of the more than two hundred towns built up upon the public domain.

Mr. REED. But it seems that the Government allowed these people to prosecute their claims in the Court of Claims.

Mr. DUNN. To determine where the title was.

Mr. REED. And it was not till that was determined that this commission was established apparently at the request of the inhabitants. Certainly this ought to be at the expense of the people, not of the Government.

Mr. DUNN. It was not at the request of the inhabitants but against their protest. Those inhabitants ought to have been allowed to enter their lands. But the gentleman loses sight of one fact. I have already stated that nearly $40,000 of rents have already been covered into the Treasury.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. The Government has not expended money there.

Mr. DUNN. No, sir.

Mr. REED. Here is a list of claims amounting to $74,000 upon certificates issued in 1879; and I do not know how many there may be preceding 1879.

Mr. FINLEY. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Arkansas whether the claims, the list of which I find in the report of the commission covering some one hundred and ninety-four blocks of land, are included in the provisions of the bill.

Mr. DUNN. The claims for right of entry for which awards have been made are included in the provisions of the bill, and the right of appeal is given to some to whom awards have not been made.

Mr. FINLEY. Let me explain the point to which I wish to direct the attention of the gentleman. For instance, lot No. 10, block No. 126, is appraised by the commissioners at $1,700. Others were appraised at $1,000, and some at $1,200. The gentleman from Arkansas stated, as I understood, that the title to these lands was in those individuals, and that they had located the lands and built upon them.

Mr. DUNN. The title is not in the individuals, but in the Government.

Mr. FINLEY. My question is, does this include the value of the lands and of the improvements?

Mr. DUNN. These figures show what they thought to be the value of the lands without the improvements.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question.

Mr. DUNN. I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BAYNE. What amount of lands lies at the foot of those mountains available for use?

Mr. DUNN. There are more than nine hundred acres reserved in the permanent reservation.

Mr. BAYNE. I speak of the lands at the foot of the mountains.

Mr. DUNN. That question I cannot answer, for I am not familiar with the topography of the lands as laid out by the commission.

Mr. BAYNE. Then the gentleman is unable to say that the nine hundred acres are not reserved from wholly mountainous lands.

Mr. DUNN. Not at all. The commissioners have reserved, they say, ample grounds and facilities to enable the Government to erect all sanitary buildings and establishments which it may see fit to erect. The first work they did was to lay off a reservation for the Government ample for its uses and purposes; and they awarded no lands within that reservation to any one. And this bill specially reserves all that reservation from contest on appeal. It is specially excepted by the provisions of the bill.

Mr. WARNER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas one question. Has this ground ever been paid for before?

Mr. DUNN. To whom?

Mr. WARNER. To anybody.

Mr. DUNN. The occupants have paid for all the lands they occupy to persons claiming the ownership. The Government has never been paid for them, except in the case of the Gaines entry, which was afterward canceled.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. Have the occupants paid taxes?

Mr. DUNN. Yes, sir. The inhabitants have paid taxes, as I am informed; to what extent I do not know.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. For how many years?

Mr. DUNN. Ever since they have bought from the original owners or claimants of the lands.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Arkansas if I understand the effect of this bill correctly. As I understand it, it changes entirely the report of the commissioners appointed in pursuance of the act of 1877. The commissioners of the Hot Springs reservation, as I understand, reported that certain claimants were to have the lands on payment of from three to four hundred thousand dollars. Now, the practical effect of the passage of this bill, as I take it, will be in lieu of that amount reported by the commission to give up the lands for about $20,000.

Mr. DUNN. Yes; about $20,000.

Mr. WHITE. That is a large discrepancy, and I, for one, am not willing to vote for the passage of this bill until I know more about it. Therefore, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DUNN. Larger cities have been bought for less money than $20,000.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

Pending the motion to adjourn, by unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WILBER, for eight days, on account of important business; and

To Mr. HAZELTON, for ten days, on account of important business.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 19) to provide for the publication and distribution of a supplement to the Revised Statutes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WALLACE, Mr. KERNAN, and Mr. DAVIS of Illinois to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate requested the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. No. 56) for the relief of Edward Braden and J. W. Angus.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 605) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to deposit certain funds in the United States Treasury in lieu of investment.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the joint resolution (H. R. No. 93) for printing the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The question being taken on Mr. WHITE'S motion that the House do now adjourn, there were—ayes 94, noes 46.

Mr. HATCH. I call for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 16, not a sufficient number.

Mr. WEAVER. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered; only ten members voting therefor, not one-fifth of a quorum.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. FINLEY. I call for tellers on the motion to adjourn.

Tellers were not ordered; only eleven members voting therefor, not one-fifth of a quorum.

So the motion to adjourn was agreed to; and accordingly (at three o'clock and fifty-eight minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 10, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the mayor and common council of the city of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, in favor of the repeal of the compulsory legal-tender power now given by law to the Treasury notes of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I present the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York in favor of increased appropriations for the fortifications in the harbor of New York. This memorial states the comparatively defenseless position of that harbor and affirms as the judgment of the Chamber of Commerce that the fortification appropriation bill lately passed by the House of Representatives is entirely inadequate for the purpose which the chief of ordnance had in view in asking $950,000 for expenditure during the next fiscal year. The memorial states that this sum is intended to be sufficient only to defray the cost of at most thirty-five comparatively small rifled guns, and that at this rate of annual expenditure it would take half a century to provide an effectual armament merely for the harbor of New York should the whole of the funds appropriated be applied to that purpose.

Having indicated sufficiently to denote the importance of this memorial, I ask its reference to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggested that it go to the Committee on Military Affairs in the hope that that committee might bestow upon it some careful consideration and afterward make any report that committee might see fit to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from New York that that subject is involved in the fortification bill now lying on the table and which will be taken up within a day or two, the Senate Committee on Appropriations having proposed an additional appropriation for the purpose indicated.

Mr. CONKLING. And therefore it was that I thought it might be wise to ask the Committee on Military Affairs to look at this memorial, in the hope that some suggestion of theirs might have weight with the Committee on Appropriations and with the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CONKLING. I present the resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, in reference to consular reports, which resolution is to the effect, among other things, that Congress should, in addition to the present annual volume of commercial relations, which is a standard work of great value, make provision for the weekly or monthly publication of consular reports and their distribution, at least to the leading commercial bodies of the United States. I submit to the Chair where this resolution should go. I suppose to the Committee on Printing as the object is to secure additional publication.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of John L. Mason, of Brooklyn, New York, praying for an extension of his letters-patent for an improvement in a fruit-jar; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented the petition of the Ithaca Farmers' Club, of Ithaca, New York, and the petition of J. M. Richmond and others, citizens of Buffalo, New York, praying for the enactment of a law to regulate interstate commerce, and to prevent unjust discriminations by common carriers; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FARLEY. I present four petitions of citizens of San Francisco, California, who are claimants under the Geneva award, praying that Congress will pass a law for the distribution of the balance of that fund. As these petitions all relate to the same subject, in regard to which a bill has been reported, I move that the petitions lie upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAUNDERS presented the petition of C. G. Sawyer and others, citizens of Holt County, Nebraska, praying for the passage of the bill (S. No. 773) making appropriations for a military wagon-road from Niobrara, in Knox County, Nebraska, via the military post recently located near the mouth of the Minnecadusa, to Fort Robinson, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MAXEY presented the petition of A. Goldman and others, citizens of Victoria County, Texas, praying for an amendment of the patent laws so as to make the manufacturer and vendor alone responsible for infringements; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented the petition of R. C. Coleman and others, citizens of Texas, praying for the passage of a law regulating interstate commerce; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BUTLER presented the petition of John E. Swearingen, James C. Swearingen, and 18 others, citizens residing in the valley of the Savannah River, praying for an appropriation by Congress for the improvement of that river; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WITHERS presented the petition of Parker Bray and others, citizens of Massachusetts and soldiers of the late war, praying for an increase of their pensions; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALLISON presented the petition of Drake & Dayton and others, citizens of Iowa, praying for the enactment of a law to reduce the specific duty upon sheet-zinc from two and a quarter cents to one cent per pound; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Theophilus Fisk Mills, praying for an appropriation to compensate him for a plaster model of General John A. Rawlins; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. VANCE presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of New Berne, North Carolina, in favor of an additional appropriation by Congress for the improvement of Trent River, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WINDOM presented the petition of J. H. Williams and others, citizens of Winona County, Minnesota, praying for the passage of a law which will prevent fluctuations in freights and unjust discrim-inations in transportation charges; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of J. H. Williams and others, citizens of Winona County, Minnesota, praying for an amendment to the patent laws so as to make the manufacturer and vendor alone responsible for infringements; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented the petition of the Women's Christian Association of the District of Columbia, praying for an appropriation by Congress for the support of that institution; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of W. B. Reynolds & Co. and others, citizens of Boston, Massachusetts, praying for the passage of a law to protect interstate commerce and to prevent unjust discriminations by common carriers; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VOORHEES presented the petition of John R. Bossick and others, soldiers of the late war, praying for the passage of a law granting them the difference between the value of greenbacks and gold at the time of payment for their services; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PLUMB presented the petition of Edwin Gorton and others; the petition of J. F. Gillett and others; the petition of A. Seavay and others; the petition of Thomas E. Brown and others, all citizens of Harper County, Kansas, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 2326) for the relief of settlers upon the Osage trust and diminished reserved lands in Kansas and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented the petition of W. A. Phillips and others, soldiers of the late war, praying for the passage of the bill (S. No. 5) to provide for the payment of claims for horses used in the service of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. THURMAN presented the petition of James Barr and others, citizens of Latham, Ohio, and soldiers in the late war, praying for the passage of a bill for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, presented additional papers in support of the application of the board of education of the district of Harper's Ferry, West Virginia; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to accompany the bill (S. No. 583) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to convey, by deed, to the board of education of the district of Harper's Ferry, West Virginia, a lot of ground, (No. 2 in block B,) with the buildings thereon, for the use of the common schools thereof.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KERNAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 939) to amend the law relative to the seizure and forfeiture of vessels for breach of the revenue laws, to report it without amendment. I send to the desk with the bill a memorial addressed to the committee. At an early day I shall ask that the bill be taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. KERNAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the petition of John H. Fralich, praying for relief on account of a forged signature on a draft to his order upon which the money was drawn by another, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 474) for the relief of William McGovern, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 98) to provide for the settlement of accounts with certain railway companies, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BAYARD. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance to report back the bill (S. No. 601) authorizing an allowance for loss by leakage or casualty of spirits withdrawn from distillery warehouses for exportation, and ask to be discharged from its further consideration, the same subject having been acted upon in a House bill.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WITHERS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Christopher F. Lanbrick and 19 others, ex-Union soldiers and citizens of the State of Michigan, praying for the passage of a law granting full bounty to all soldiers discharged for diseases contracted in the line of duty on a surgeon's certificate of disability, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1085) to equalize homesteads, reported it with amendments.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred a letter from the Secretary of War transmitting reports of Captain William Mills and Lieutenant William J. Turner concerning work performed on the Mullan wagon-road, Montana Territory, reported a bill (S. No. 1256) to authorize the Secretary of War to improve and repair the Mullan wagon-road between Forts Missoula and Cœur d'Alene; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BOOTH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 490) in relation to certain fees allowed registers and receivers, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 316) for the relief of homestead settlers on the public lands, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GROOME, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 363) granting an increase of pension to James C. McCarty, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 181) restoring to the pension-roll the name of Mary Burr, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 957) granting a pension to Charles Reed, of Muscatine, Iowa, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BURNSIDE, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 133) to establish an educational fund, and apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to public education, and to provide for the more complete endowment and support of national colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 217) to introduce moral and social science into the public schools of the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WALLACE, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1229) to authorize and direct the Commissioner of Agriculture to attend in person or by deputy the international sheep and wool show to be held in the Centennial buildings, Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, in September, A. D. 1880, and to make a full and complete report of the same, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

Mr. BURNSIDE presented the views of a minority of the Committee on Military Affairs in the Fitz-John Porter case; which were received and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I also submit an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause of the bill of the majority of the committee and inserting what I send to the Chair.

The amendment was ordered to be printed.

INTERNATIONAL FISHERY EXHIBITION AT BERLIN.

Mr. EATON. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 170) concerning an international fishery exhibition to be held in Berlin, Germany, in April, 1880, to report it without amendment, and I should like to have it now considered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I would not ask to take this out of the ordinary run of business except for the reason that this exhibition is to be holden early in the month of April, and therefore no time is to be lost if the power proposed is to be given to the President. I hope there will be no objection to the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GARLAND asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1257) for the relief of J. H. Alexander; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JONAS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1258) making an appropriation to aid in the completion of the custom-house at New Orleans, Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GROOME asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1259) to provide for the erection of a monument to the memory of Major-General the Baron De Kalb; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. THURMAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1260) to facilitate the transaction of business in the Supreme Court of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EATON. I beg leave to introduce a bill for the relief of Cyrus C. Clarke, late paymaster in the Army, and ask its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary, as a legal question is involved.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1261) for the relief of Cyrus C. Clark, late paymaster in the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ALLISON (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1262) appropriating money to pay Fisk Mills for the plaster model of General Rawlins, from the face of the deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. McPHERSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1263) to regulate appointments and promotions in the Marine Corps; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. VOORHEES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1264) granting a pension to Dorcas Herring; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have been requested to introduce the following bill, and, although it asks an appropriation of money, I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Library, so as to have it considered there first.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1265) appropriating $10,000 for the purchase of Heine's collection of historical paintings on Japan; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Library.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. KERNAN, it was Ordered, That the petition of Charles L. Denman, late first lieutenant Regiment of Mounted Riflemen, United States Army, praying that he be restored to the Army and placed upon the retired list, with the accompanying papers, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of William Shirley be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Ordered, That the papers in the case of John Shirley be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REMAINS OF GENERAL SYKES.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill without previous notice, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1255) making appropriation for the removal of the remains of the late Major-General George Sykes, United States Army, from Fort Brown, Texas, to West Point, New York.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to have the remains of the late Major-General George Sykes, United States Army, transported from Fort Brown, Texas, to West Point, New York; and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated from any money now in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry this act into effect.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Is that bill reported this morning?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is simply introduced.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I have just introduced the bill. We have news of the death of General Sykes, a very distinguished officer of the Army, at Fort Brown, Texas. He has left nothing to enable his comrades and friends to transport his body from that point to West Point. It was his desire and is the desire of his friends that he should be buried at the cemetery at West Point. There is no more proper time to pass the bill than this moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McMILLAN. I hope the Senator from West Virginia will not interpose an objection.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The other morning we passed an order that we should go to the Calendar regularly and consider all unobjected bills. I knew not what this bill was until I heard the latter part of it read. I think now that all bills ought to go to the Calendar; it is far better to do so, in order that each Senator can see what is to be taken up; and as we are considering the Calendar every day that is the best course. But as Senators seem anxious about this, I make no special objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The objection is withdrawn.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I would not introduce the bill at this time but for the circumstances.

Mr. INGALLS. Has this bill been before a committee?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has simply been introduced, not referred.

Mr. INGALLS. The practice is a very dangerous one to pass bills without a reference, without any explanation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator object?

Mr. INGALLS. No, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not wish to make any objection or opposition to this bill; but the form of presenting it is so unusual that I venture to suggest that the Senator having it in charge, or some other Senator, should make a statement to go on the record which will show that it is an exceptional case, to the end that hereafter when other officers may die it may not be supposed that this is a precedent for the same action in all such cases. No doubt there are distinguishing circumstances.

Mr. BURNSIDE. We have the news this morning by telegraph of the death of General Sykes, and I have a long telegram from his brother officers stating their wish in reference to the disposition of his body. Of my own knowledge this officer, who was a gallant soldier, who served during the Mexican war and during the late war, accumulated nothing from which this transportation can be paid. It was his desire that his body should be buried at West Point, and at Fort Brown there are no facilities for keeping the body for any great length of time, and it will have to be interred there unless arrangements can be made at once to transport his body to its final resting place, which he desired to be at West Point. I think it is a debt we owe.

Mr. HEREFORD. I call for the reading of the bill. We do not know what it is, or what the Senator is saying, on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I introduced the bill this morning simply with a view to saving expense and time, not thinking that there would be any objection to the introduction or passage of it; but I am certainly not disposed to establish any bad precedent in the Senate, and if it is thought best that the bill should go to a committee, I will withdraw it. I introduced it as an expression of my own desire in the matter.

Several SENATORS. Refer it.

Mr. FERRY. I ask that the bill be reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be again read.

The bill was again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island withdraw the bill?

Mr. BURNSIDE. I am not disposed to withdraw the bill unless there is objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was read three times, and passed.

Mr. EATON subsequently said: I desire to give notice that I will either this afternoon or to-morrow morning move a reconsideration of the vote passing the bill introduced this morning by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. BURNSIDE.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator can enter the motion now, which will make it operative.

Mr. EATON. I enter the motion now.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 19) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and certify the amount of land located with military warrants in the States described therein, and for other purposes; which was ordered to be printed.

TITLES TO REAL ESTATE.

Mr. THURMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary is hereby instructed to inquire whether any, and, if any, what, legislation is necessary to enable owners of real estate in the District of Columbia to obtain decrees quieting their titles, and to report by bill or otherwise.

COMMITTEE ON INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, the motion entered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] some days ago to reconsider the vote by which the Senate ordered a special committee on the subject of interoceanic communication has not been disposed of. It has been before the Senate for some time. I think we ought to settle that question. I move, therefore, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the motion entered by the Senator from West Virginia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That would come under the head of "concurrent and other resolutions," which is now the order of business; and the question is, will the Senate reconsider the vote by which the resolution named by the Senator from Georgia was adopted?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the resolution read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of nine be appointed to take in consideration the subject of the construction of a canal to connect the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans; and that all papers, documents, and information relating to said subject be referred to said committee.

Be it further resolved, That said committee be authorized to confer and act concurrently with any similar committee of the House of Representatives; and that said committee be authorized to employ a clerk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This resolution was adopted by the Senate on the 29th day of January. The question is, will the Senate reconsider the vote by which it was agreed to?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The motion was entered by myself several days ago, as the Senator from Georgia has said. By the request of the Senator from Georgia, it has lain on the table. I think twice or three times I intimated to the Senator that whenever he desired I would move to take it up. I had no thought of any other thing but the Senator naming it to myself and I know it was a slip or he would have done so; but it is due to myself to say that twice I stated to the Senator that whenever he desired it I would call up the resolution, and the delay has not been on my part.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, it is due to myself to say that I have been ready to proceed with the consideration of the resolution at any time since it was offered, and, as the Senator himself knows, I agreed to a postponement at the earnest solicitation of other Senators, who desired time to look into the question. I thought enough time had been granted, and the promise I made to give the Senator notice had escaped me. I did not think it of any consequence the Senator or myself should move to consider the question, especially as the Senator assured me of his readiness to discuss it at any time.

Mr. President, I do not wish to make a speech. I rise to discuss briefly the motion now pending before the Senate to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted.

On the second day of our session I introduced a resolution on the general subject of an interoceanic canal. We had then no committees in the Senate, and I moved its reference to the Committee on Commerce when that committee should be appointed, my object being to let it there lie until the House of Representatives should take some action upon the subject, which, I was advised by members interested in it, would be done at an early day. Unfortunately I was called away from Washington during most of the month of December. On my return I found that the House had appointed a select committee, as I had been advised would be done. I therefore brought in the resolution asking for a special committee to consider this question, and that it might act concurrently with such committee as had been appointed in the mean time by the House.

The purpose of introducing the resolution in reference to interoceanic communication at so early a day of the session was twofold: first, that we might give some assurance to the distinguished citizen from Nicaragua then in our midst and to the capitalists whom he represented, as well as to the Nicaraguan government, which felt a deep interest in the subject, that the United States would not be slow to protect any such enterprise which might be inaugurated on that isthmus. The other object I had in introducing it at so early a day was that we might call the attention of the country as well as of Europe to the fact that there were those in the American Senate who were ready to meet the issue which is forced upon us, and to meet it with an affirmative declaration on the part of the American Government that whenever, however, or by whomsoever a canal should be constructed across the American isthmus, the American Government would see to it that such control was not hostile to American interests. I do not know, sir, to what extent, if to any extent at all, that resolution and the principle which it embodied met or attracted the attention of foreign governments or of those who were moving in the contemplated enterprise; but I do know that the question was of so much interest abroad that the resolution was copied and commented upon by the press of Europe and in almost every language spoken upon the Continent.

When that resolution was introduced there were no committees of the Senate appointed. I therefore asked that it go to the Committee on Commerce when it should be appointed, my object being that it should there lie until some action should be taken by the House, which I knew to be in contemplation. During most of our session prior to the holiday recess I was compelled to be absent. Upon my return I found the House had appointed a special committee, and I was waited upon by its chairman and asked to move for a special committee of the Senate to sit concurrently with one which the House had appointed. Agreeing fully with the opinion that this subject merited, if any one that ever came before this body did, a committee specially constituted with reference to the momentous questions to be considered, I moved for such a committee. The motion was agreed to, and the Senator from West Virginia entered the motion now pending, for reconsideration. This, sir, is briefly the history of the resolution for a special committee, and the motives which have induced me to make it.

The motion of the Senator from West Virginia for reconsideration is based upon the ground of economy. He is a member of the Committee on Contingent Expenses, of which my colleague is chairman. No man, sir, is more averse than myself to the useless expenditure of the public money; but, sir, to oppose the investigation of such a subject by a committee specially selected to deal with it in all its varied and vast phases seems to me in the last degree untenable. What, sir, are we to be told that we must not investigate a subject of such importance to every interest in America and to the commerce of Christendom, by a committee of chosen men specially qualified to consider it, because it will require one clerk to keep the record? Is this Senate to say, in the face of three hundred and fifty years of inquiry and the expenditure of untold millions of the public money in search of a practicable route for such water-way, that we must not now gather together and digest this information and consider what the interests of America require because the investigation will entail upon the Government the hire of a clerk? Is that the position which the American Senate proposes to assume?

With the attention of the country riveted upon this subject with an intensity of interest rarely felt before in any which has come before Congress; with all Europe on tiptoe to see what this Government proposes in the premises; with the Suez Canal already an accomplished fact in spite of the opposition of so powerful a government as Great Britain; with the great French diplomat and financier who projected it now upon the American isthmus with no less than eight corps of practical engineers; with our own commerce stagnant, our bottoms decaying and their sails rotting from disuse; with our geographical position midway between Europe and Asia; with six hundred millions of people, more than three-fourths of the entire civilized population of the globe anxiously awaiting the breaking down of the narrow barrier to our trade and productions; with the wealth of the Indies ready to be emptied into the lap of America; with all these facts, prospects, or possibilities before us, we are to refuse to consider them because it would embarrass the Treasury with the cost of a clerk. But, sir, I forbear to consider such an objection any further.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. EATON. I hope this matter will be proceeded with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there unanimous consent that this matter be further considered?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I certainly have no disposition to prevent myself from hearing the very interesting remarks of the Senator from Georgia; but I have the impression that there are many aspects of this question which ought to be considered under the provisions of Rule 64. There are some parts of it that I should be glad to refer to, that I cannot with propriety without violating the rules of the Senate in a public discussion; and if it were agreeable to the Senator from Georgia I should be glad under Rule 64 to make the motion that that rule provides for, closing the doors in the discussion of this question.

Mr. GORDON. I have no objection to that; but I would say in explanation to the Senator that my remarks this morning will not embrace anything touching in any degree treaty stipulations, and I did not presume that there would be any general discussion upon these subjects. The only question before the Senate is whether we should have a select committee to investigate the subject. I was only proceeding to analyze and answer, as well as I might, the objections which had been urged to the appointment of such a committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the resolution itself might not perhaps fall within the proprieties of the sixty-fourth rule, although I rather think it would if as ordinarily in such cases it involves some reference to the aspects of the general subject; and some remarks that the Senator from Georgia has already made have opened to my mind a state of circumstances and considerations that I think ought to be discussed in the manner provided for by the sixty-fourth rule. At the same time, as the Senator is half through with his speech, if it is at all disagreeable to him I shall not make the motion that the sixty-fourth rule provides for.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, will the Senate at this time further consider this motion, the morning hour having expired?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not object to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection. The Senator from Georgia will proceed.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President——

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to say that while I certainly have no objection to that, I hope no vote will be taken on this matter to-day.

Mr. GORDON. There is no purpose to force a vote until the subject is discussed. I am anxious that it be fully discussed.

Mr. THURMAN. It is too large a subject to be disposed of without consideration.

Mr. GORDON. It may be urged, indeed has been urged, that this was a subject of such wide range, embracing not only the commercial interests of the country and of the world but the relations of this country to foreign nations, the subject of treaties and practicability of the different routes and plans, that we ought not to plunge into its discussion without deliberation. Sir, that is true; and the suggestion will meet with general assent. But, sir, does the appointment of a committee of the wisest and ablest men in this body for the express purpose of deliberation presuppose a want of deliberation? Is it to be said that because a Senator asks for a committee to consider a great subject that therefore it is the purpose of that Senator to prevent consideration? Why the very intricacy and importance and complications which invest this subject and the very necessity for thought and great deliberation are commanding reasons for the appointment of a committee specially adapted to its consideration and elucidation.

But it is further objected that if the waterway should be constructed, Great Britain with her vast preponderance of ships would receive nineteen-twentieths of the benefits which would accrue to the world's commerce. Sir, let that be granted for the sake of the argument, which I think I can demonstrate is not the truth; still the fact will remain, that a refusal to appoint an able committee would not prevent the great Frenchman, De Lesseps, from completing his negotiations in Central America and constructing the water-way. And are we to be told that we must not investigate because investigation might demonstrate the feasibility of the enterprise, and encourage its construction and thus contribute to English wealth more than to American? Will a vote to reconsider the resolution, and a refusal to investigate, change the plans of De Lesseps or deter him from action? Sir, the reverse of this proposition is true. But again, suppose the building of the canal is to inure more to the benefit of England than of United States, are we to improve our condition by leaving the construction and control of the interoceanic transit to foreign capital and foreign protection? Will our share of the profits be increased by withholding all American influence and all American supervision? Sir, the very statement of the proposition is its own refutation. We cannot prevent the construction of this canal even if it should be to our interest to do it, by a refusal to investigate the purposes of M. De Lesseps. We cannot increase our share of trade lying supinely on our backs while France and England reap the rewards of the enterprise. Nor can we protect America by refusing to assert the immemorial doctrine of this Government and of American protection to this American water-way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I rise to a privileged motion under the sixty-fourth rule.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, I beg pardon, and accede to the proposition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the doors be closed.
Mr. ANTHONY. I second the motion.
Mr. GORDON. I will go on now, unless the Senate wishes to consider this question with closed doors. I think it is due to the subject to dispose of it, and regret that the country cannot witness the debate upon it.
Mr. EDMUNDS. I rise to a privileged motion under the sixty-fourth rule. I move that the doors be closed.
Mr. VOORHEES. I ask for the reading of the rule.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The sixty-fourth rule will be read.
The Chief Clerk read as follows:

64. On a motion made, and seconded, to close the doors of the Senate, on the discussion of any business which may, in the opinion of a Senator, require secrecy, the presiding officer shall direct the galleries to be cleared; and during the discussion of such motion the doors shall remain closed.

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the Senator from Indiana's right. The regular order is the unfinished business, being the bill (S. No. 19) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and certify the amount of land located with military warrants in the States described therein and for other purposes.
Mr. GORDON. I did not hear the motion; but if there is any indisposition to hear the discussion, I will forbear.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana has demanded the regular order, which has precedence.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator from Indiana to give me one minute.
Mr. McDONALD. Very well.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia has made two-thirds of his speech on one clerk.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, what is the pending question?
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is the special order, but the Senator from Indiana yielded to the Senator from West Virginia.
Mr. EDMUNDS. I insist on the regular order.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is insisted upon.
Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator from Georgia cannot be permitted to proceed either with closed doors or otherwise, I insist on the regular order.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is called for.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:
A bill (H. R. No. 4412) to regulate practice and suits brought to recover damages for infringement of patents; and
A bill (H. R. No. 4411) to establish an additional land district in the State of Kansas.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:
A bill (H. R. No. 325) for the erection of a public building at Danville, Virginia;
A bill (H. R. No. 3497) to provide for deficiencies in the appropriations for contingent expenses of the Senate and House of Representatives;
A bill (S. No. 325) for the relief of Henry Page;
A bill (S. No. 578) granting an increase of pension to Samuel B. Davis;
A bill (S. No. 857) authorizing the conversion of national gold banks; and
A joint resolution (H. R. No. 93) for printing the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac.

MILITARY WARRANT LAND LOCATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 19) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and certify the amount of land located with military warrants in the States described therein, and for other purposes; which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.
Mr. JONES, of Florida. I ask that the amendment I offered be reported.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee's amendments will be first disposed of.
The first amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands was, in section 2, line 15, after the word "same," to insert:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may, at his option, pay the said amounts allowed, or any part thereof, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that this bill be indefinitely postponed. That will dispose of the consideration of the amendments for the present.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont moves that the consideration of this bill be indefinitely postponed.
Mr. McDONALD. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.
Mr. EDMUNDS. So do I.
The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now we will hear the report of the committee, Mr. President.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.
The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. PLUMB January 20, 1880:

The Government of the United States, in receiving the Western and Southern States into the Union, stipulated in their several acts of admission to pay them 5 per cent. upon the sales of the public lands situated therein. The consideration for the 5 per cent. so reserved is substantially the same in each of the enabling acts of said States; that is to say, Ohio and Indiana stipulate that the public lands therein shall remain exempt from all tax whatever for the term of five years from date of sale.
Iowa, in the compact, stipulates four things:
First. That she will not interfere with the primary disposal of the soil;
Second. Nor tax for any purpose the public lands;
Third. That the non-resident proprietors shall not be taxed more than the resident; and Fourth. That lands granted for military services in the war of 1812 that may be located therein shall not be taxed for three years from date of patent.
Illinois—same as Ohio, and the third and fourth stipulations of the Iowa compact.
Alabama and Mississippi—same as Ohio, and embracing the second and third stipulations of Iowa.
Missouri—same as Ohio, and including that of Iowa.
Michigan and Arkansas—same as Iowa.
Florida—same as the first and second stipulations of Iowa.
Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Oregon—same as the three first stipulations of Iowa.
Nebraska and Nevada—same as the second and third stipulations of Iowa.
Kansas—the same as the first and second of Iowa.
Louisiana—the same as Ohio and Indiana.
These stipulations were proposed to the people of the several States by Congress as the condition of Union, for their "free acceptance or rejection," and if accepted were to be obligatory on both parties thereto. They were duly accepted by the States, which have, also, faithfully observed them.
The binding effect of these compacts is specifically recognized and set forth in an opinion rendered by Hon. B. F. Butler, then Attorney-General of the United States, dated March 31, 1836, in passing upon the legal effect of the act for the admission of Alabama into the Union, as follows:
"This proposition, having been accepted by the convention, became and is obligatory on the United States; that is to say, the faith of the nation is pledged to execute it literally, provided the Government of the United States possesses or acquires the ability to do so." (3 O. A. G., 56.)
Since the admission of the several States referred to, in many of them the entire public domain has been disposed of, and within the limits of the others but a small portion remains unsold. The methods of disposition have been various: For cash; in settlement of obligations of the Government to its soldiers, represented by military land warrants; in aid of railroads and canals, and other works of internal improvement; and under the homestead law. The States have as yet made no claim for compensation on account of the lands disposed of in the last two named methods; the Government has paid or is in the process of paying 5 per cent. upon the cash sales, but up to the present time has made no payment to any of the States upon entries of public lands with military land warrants, though demand has been made for the same.
The only ground known to your committee upon which this payment has been refused is that such disposition of the public domain was not "sales of the public lands" within the meaning of the enabling acts. The right of these States to the 5 per cent. upon military locations depends, in the opinion of your committee, largely upon the fact whether, as between the Government and the soldier, the lands disposed of formed a part of the consideration of his hire. Upon this point your committee have had little difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that such disposition did, in fact, enter into and become a part of the consideration for the enlistment and services of the soldiers to whom land warrants were issued. The acts of Congress for the benefit of the recruiting service of the United States at the opening of the revolutionary war are dated in August and September, 1776.
The Commonwealth of Virginia about the same time, (October, 1776,) for the purpose of raising her quota of men and meeting the exigencies of the coming war, also offered lands to her soldiers as part compensation for their military services. These lands thus offered by the Legislature of Virginia were afterward patented by Congress to her soldiers agreeably to the terms of cession made by Virginia to the Federal Government of the Northwestern Territory March 1, 1784.
The several military grants for the war of 1812 are dated December 24, 1811; January 11, 1812; February 6, 1812; December 12, 1812; January 24, 1814; January 27, 1814; February 10, 1814; April 18, 1814, and December 14, 1814.
Those of the Mexican war are dated February 11, 1847; March 3, 1847; September 28, 1858.
It is clear from the language of these grants that they were designed to effect a future object, and in no sense did they relate to a past subject. The time when and the circumstances under which they were passed indicate but too manifestly the aim in view, namely: to facilitate and encourage enlistments, that the requisite numerical force of the Army might be enlarged as rapidly as possible, in order to meet the pressing necessities of each of the impending wars.
At the time the resolution of September 16, 1776, was adopted Congress owned no land, but expected by conquest to become entitled to all the land which England had acquired by discovery. Anticipating, therefore, the acquisition of large landed possessions, and expecting to have more land than money, Congress, in order to fill up the rank and file of the Army, and to raise and complete a regularly organized military establishment, offered in advance, besides specified monthly wages in money, an additional consideration in land, not for past, but for services thereafter to be rendered. The colonial government of Virginia did the same thing, and her engagement to pay in land was afterward assumed and fulfilled by Congress, by setting apart for that purpose a section of country lying between the Little Miami and Scioto Rivers, in Ohio.
The military grants for the war of 1812 and the Mexican war are of the same character, enacted at or near the commencement of each, wholly prospective in their operation, and are their own best expositors; their meaning and purpose cannot be misinterpreted. In effect, they said to the party whose military prowess the Government so much needed at the time, "Enlist, and serve your country a given period, and you shall have as a reward therefor a quarter section of land in addition to your monthly pay." The land thus offered in advance of, and as an inducement to, the engagement formed as much a part of the contract of enlistment as did the money compensation. One cannot with any show of reason be designated a gratuity any more than the other; both alike constituted the consideration for which the services were to be rendered. It follows, therefore, that these grants of land for military service in the three great wars of this country are essentially in the nature of contracts; and as such become the foundation of the claim which the Western and Southern States now make for the 5 per cent. thereon, according to the terms of the compact contained in their several enabling acts; for, if they have the elements of a contract, it follows that the lands located thereunder are sales in legal contemplation, and not bounties in any just sense of that term. It involves no other or different principle than if one man should say to another, "Work for me twelve months and I will pay you at the rate of $15 per month and eighty acres of land for such service." Could he, in law, discharge his obligation by making the money payment and withholding the land, upon the pretext of a bounty to be paid or not at his own pleasure?

That this is the proper construction of the military land warrant acts of 1847 is abundantly shown by the debate thereon at the time of their passage. When the act of February 11, 1847, came to the Senate from the House where it originated an amendment was proposed, giving, in addition to the monthly pay and allowances and the money bounty, a grant of land to the soldiers whose enlistment was then sought. The subject was debated at considerable length, and the result was the statute referred to. In the course of the debate Mr. Cameron, the mover of the original amendment, said: "He was desirous that those of our fellow-citizens who intended to join the Army might know what they had to expect. The soldier who fought the battles of his country was deserving of reward, and as this Government possessed abundance of lands he thought no better disposition could be made of a portion of them than in rewarding the bravery and patriotism of the soldiers."—Congressional Globe, second session, Twenty-ninth Congress, p. 171.

Mr. Allen, of Ohio, while objecting to the proposition as not sufficiently guarded and specific, expressed his assent to the principles involved. He said he "was one of those who believed that, as between the Government and the citizens, great liberality should be observed, more especially as regarded the uncultivated soil of this country. He knew of no better use that could be made of the public domain than to reward the brave and patriotic men who had volunteered to serve in this war."—Ibid., p. 172.

Mr. Clayton said: "While graduation bills and pre-emption bills, and other projects for giving away and breaking up the public domain were in vogue, while the land was going, he preferred to see it given to the citizen soldiers and the regular soldiers of the United States Army. He preferred giving the lands to the soldiers as an inducement to fight the battles of the country rather than give them to the paupers of Europe."—Ibid., p. 173.

Mr. Corwin said: "It was a proposition to grant to every soldier who actually served, and to the heirs of every soldier who died in service, an amount equal to $200, which should pass current in any land office for the purchase of land. Instead of paying them in advance, it was paying him at the end of his service this amount. * * * A soldier's service was the hardest that any patriot could be called upon to perform, and he thought that they were entitled to receive at the hands of the Government this much at least."—Ibid.

Mr. Badger said: "If we are to call upon American citizens to enlist in the Army for the prosecution of this indefinite war—to enlist not merely for a certain period, but during the existence of the war, * * * was it not important that they should throw out strong inducement to the people to peril their happiness, their persons, and their lives? He saw in this very circumstance strong reasons why this bill should not be passed without a direct 'pledge' of future bounty on the part of the Government to induce men, whether as volunteers or regular soldiers, to make these sacrifices. He desired that every man should see on the face of the law under which the Government required the sacrifice from him the bounty at which the country estimates his service."—Ibid. p. 178.

Mr. Butler said: "The great object of giving bounty lands to soldiers was to encourage enlistments."—Ibid., p. 207.

Mr. Webster said: "The object was to obtain the services of the private soldier in the ranks of the Army and in the volunteer corps. * * * The precise point they aimed at was to fill the ranks of the regiments for the efficient defense of the country—the present urgent defense of the country. They asked, therefore, for something which would be an inducement to soldiers to enlist."—Ibid.

The land warrants issued in pursuance of the several acts named were certainly in the nature of evidences of indebtedness. The public lands were made available for meeting the demands of the General Government in the payment of its soldiery just as effectually by the warrant system as if the lands were first converted into money and the money used in liquidating these demands. Instead of patenting a specified tract of land to the soldier entitled thereto, the Government issued to him its written obligation, payable in the agreed quantity of land, to be selected from the whole body of the public domain. And these obligations, or "warrants" as they are called, were by law made assignable, and were subjected to sale and transfer. In this way they became a species of Government scrip, or currency, and persons desirous of purchasing could go into the market and buy the same, and with it secure title to tracts of the public lands whenever the same were subject to sale and entry.

Can it be considered less a case of sale that the purchaser, instead of paying for his land in greenbacks, does so with the Government's own paper obligations? The chief difference in the two descriptions of paper is that the first is available for purchasing all commodities indiscriminately, while the latter is limited to the purchase of land only. Suppose the United States had issued pecuniary obligations, i. e., bonds, payable to bearer at a future day, or payable like greenbacks, whenever the Government should find itself able, but with the proviso that they should be receivable at par in payment for public lands—how would the case of lands paid for with such bonds differ from the present case? The bonds might have been issued like land warrants, for military service, or for any other consideration, or for no consideration. They might have been regarded by Congress strictly as a gratuity to parties thought to have for any reason deserved well of their country.

This would not affect the question whether lands entered and paid for with such bonds ought to be considered as sold. In either case the Government would have received for thus disposing of its lands its own valid outstanding obligations, for the fulfillment of which its faith was plighted, and the surrender of which by the holder would constitute an ample consideration, legal and equitable, for the conveyance. These considerations apply to the fullest extent to the case of entries of land by means of land warrants.

To your committee it seems that the true solution of the question whether or not land entered by the location of warrants should be considered as sold by the Government is to be found in the nature of the transaction at the time of the warrant location, and not in that of its issue.

No land is sold or disposed of in any way by the mere issue of a warrant. That conveys no title whatever to the holder of the warrant for any specific land. The warrant is a mere executory promise or contract, calling for a given quantity of land, to be selected from the body of the public lands. It is not until the specific tract is ascertained, segregated, and the warrant surrendered in exchange for a certificate of location for a particularly described tract or parcel of land, which is to ripen into a full legal title upon the issuance of a patent, that any land can be said to have been disposed of by the Government; but when the warrant is located, this, to all intents and purposes, is a sale.

The term "bounty," as applied to this kind of compensation for military services, seems to be inapt. It certainly is not used in its popular sense as importing a gratuity, because in the several acts of Congress granting lands to the soldiers in the three great wars of this country the "warrants" were not issued in consideration of past services, but must be fairly understood as a part of the stipulated compensation provided for by the law under which the enlistment was made for services thereafter to be performed.

This is made most manifest by the debate above quoted. The object is there stated explicitly as being to "encourage enlistments."

In the late war of the rebellion, in order to stimulate enlistments, a pecuniary "bounty"—that is, a gross sum in addition to the periodical pay—was offered by the Government instead of land warrants to all who should enlist in the service, and in many instances further "bounties" of the same kind were offered and paid by counties and cities in order to induce enlistments and fill up their respective quotas of men. Such offers, when accepted and acted upon, have, in repeated instances, been declared by the courts to be valid contracts and have been enforced accordingly.

It will not be contended, as the committee believe, that the agreement to pay the 5 per cent. on the sales of the public lands does not find a sufficient consideration in the stipulations of the several States not to interfere with the primary disposal of the soil; not to tax Government land; in some States not to tax lands which the Government might sell for five years; in other States not to tax for three years a class of lands in the hands of certain patentees; not to tax non-resident proprietors more than residents, &c.

The rights surrendered by the States were of great material consequence to them. The right of taxation inheres in the sovereign power of a State, and is extended over all subjects and descriptions of property within its jurisdiction. In the relinquishment of the right of taxation the States have lost a very large revenue, far in excess of the 5 per cent. upon all the public lands, whether the same be computed cash sales or upon lands disposed of in payment for military services, or both.

By disposing of the public lands in the manner named, the United States discharged an obligation which was of binding force upon all the States as component parts of the common confederacy. Aside from the legal liability of the Government to pay the percentage claimed to the States within whose limits the lands were purchased with military warrants, it may be suggested that it would be palpably inequitable that a few States should be called upon to contribute so largely in the discharge of the nation's indebtedness. But when it is considered that the General Government and the eighteen States claiming relief under the bill submitted for the consideration of your committee entered into a solemn compact, partaking of the mutuality of a legal contract; that the States, in order to secure the 5 per cent. on the disposal of the public lands, agreed to surrender rights indisputable and of great value to them if retained, and that in good faith this agreement has, in every respect, been faithfully kept on the part of the States, there seems to be no good and sufficient reason, in the judgment of the committee, why the United States should be relieved of its obligation to pay the claims which the States have presented for adjustment.

The payment by the General Government to the several States of 5 per cent. upon the cash sales made, during a period of over seventy years, would seem to be conclusive against the Government upon the question of consideration.

The bill under consideration proposes to capitalize the lands taken up by the location of military land warrants, at $1.25 per acre. This has been the minimum price of the Government lands ever since there was a public domain. The price fixed cannot, therefore, be considered unfair to the Government. It will also be noted that in the debate quoted upon the act of 1847, Mr. Corwin stated the value of the one hundred and sixty acres proposed to be offered as a consideration for enlistments at $200; the market value of the warrants issued under the act also tends to fix the value of the land.

Your committee has also been pressed to consider the obligations of the Government to the several States on account of lands granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and other works of internal improvement, and also for lands disposed of under the homestead law.

The grants for railroads and other internal improvements were in nearly or every instance made to the States direct for the use of the enterprise to be aided. In accepting these grants the States fairly waived the right to the 5 per cent. compensation upon such lands, and the grants were, besides, generally of great special benefit to the States to which the grants were made. Besides, no consideration except the one affecting the growth and general prosperity of the country passed to the General Government.

The lands disposed of under the homestead law stand upon a different footing. Their disposition in that particular manner was undertaken without the consent of the States, and while nominally a gift to the settlers, the fees exacted are such as result in a considerable profit to the Government over and above the costs of selling and patenting. As, however, the passage of the homestead law worked a radical and beneficent change in the public land system of the Government, and one much more beneficial to the States whose limits then embraced public lands than the one theretofore prevailing, the obligation against the Government on account of lands thus disposed of is not very strong if at all existing.

The committee, therefore, propose to so amend the bill as to exclude from consideration hereafter the question of compensation for these two classes of lands, and make the acceptance of the compensation provided for by this act a waiver of all claim on account of the disposition of lands for internal improvements and under the homestead law.

And with these amendments, the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I ask that the amendment I submitted to the bill be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It may be read for information. The motion to postpone indefinitely cuts off amendments.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. JONES, of Florida, namely, at the end of the first section to add:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall also ascertain the quantity of public lands entered and patented under the provisions of the homestead laws in the States of Alabama, Florida, Mississippi, Arkansas, and Louisiana, between the 21st day of June, 1866, and the 3d day of March, 1877, and all lands entered and patented under said laws shall be subject to the provisions of this act in the same manner as lands entered by the location of military scrip and land warrants in the States mentioned in the first section of this act.

Mr. McDONALD. That is simply read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is read for information. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I rise to support this motion. Ostensibly on the face of the bill there are eighteen States whose treasuries are to be replenished out of the Treasury of the United States by this—shall I call it performance? And I had hoped therefore I should have the attention of the thirty-six Senators who presumptively, I suppose, by the originators of this bill are expected to lean favorably in that direction; and yet the thirty-six are wanting, Mr. President.

Before I begin the methodical discussion of this question, to which I have felt obliged to give some attention, I should be glad to know what the committee mean in their report when they say in the third line of it that—

> The Government of the United States, in receiving the Western and Southern States into the Union, stipulated in their several acts of admission to pay them 5 per cent. upon the sales of the public lands situated therein.

It unhappily is not according to the statute, except in a few instances in such case made and provided.

Mr. McDONALD. If the Senator will allow me, I will read the third clause of the fourth section of the enabling act in the case of Indiana.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Suppose you begin with Ohio, which was the first of these States admitted?

Mr. McDONALD. I prefer reading from this act. The Senator can read from the other if he desires.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

Mr. McDONALD. It reads:

Third. That 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the lands lying within the said Territory, and which shall be sold by Congress from and after the 1st day of December next, after deducting all expenses incident to the same, shall be reserved for making public roads and canals, of which three-fifths shall be applied to those objects within the said State, under the direction of the Legislature thereof, and two-fifths to the making of a road or roads leading to the said State under the direction of Congress.

And I desire to read in that same connection this:

And provided always, That the five foregoing propositions, herein offered, are on the conditions that the convention of the said State shall provide by an ordinance, irrevocable without the consent of the United States, that every and each tract of land sold by the United States, from and after the 1st day of December next, shall be and remain exempt from any tax, laid by order or under any authority of the State, whether for State, county, or township, or any other purpose whatever, for the term of five years from and after the day of sale.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yet, Mr. President, the committee in their printed report say that the United States "stipulated in their several acts of admission"—by which of course we must understand they mean each one—"to pay them"—that is, to each State—"5 per cent. upon the sales of the public lands situated therein." Now my honorable friend, not the author of the report, but who has come in as a volunteer I suppose, because Indiana was always good in time of war for volunteers I am proud to say——

Mr. PADDOCK. He is the chairman of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh yes, but he did not report the bill. He says that the act which supports the allegation of the committee is the act providing for the State of Indiana. I might remark that the State of Indiana has not been supposed hitherto to compose "the Western and Southern States" together; it was only a certain part of the Western and Southern States; but that view of the matter I let pass. What did we agree to give to the State of Indiana? Five per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands within her borders? No, sir. The very clause that my honorable friend has read provides quite the contrary. It provides that 3 per cent.—to be sure that is only two-fifths off from the truth—that 3 per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of these public lands should, not be given or paid to the State of Indiana even then, but should be devoted to certain objects of general and public concern that affected all the people of the United States as well as the people of Indiana, by constructing certain internal improvements in that State, not the private property of the State to levy tolls upon, but public methods of passage, highways and canals, then the only means of intercommunication known, for the benefit of all the people of the United States.

Mr. President, it will be seen by the proof cited by my honorable friend from Indiana that the opening statement in this report of the committee exceeds by two-fifths the fact. The statement is that we agreed to pay to the State of Indiana, among others, 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of public lands. The proof is read by the proponent of this last will and testament of the United States, the division of all that there is left, as I suppose, until they apply again, that only 3 per cent. was in any event to be disposed of in such manner as the Legislature of Indiana might direct.

Now, suppose we turn to another State; take Ohio which was the first of that great galaxy of States that has been added to the United States, after Kentucky and Vermont, that do not share in this beneficence, had been admitted—the State of Ohio the first out of the Northwest Territory. Let us see how true with respect to Ohio is this statement of the committee that we had promised to pay any per cent. of the sales of the public lands within her limits. Here is the clause; it is the third clause of the seventh section of the act of 1802 admitting that State:

Third. That one-twentieth part of the net proceeds of the lands lying within the said State sold by Congress, from and after the 30th day of June next, after deducting all expenses incident to the same, shall be applied to the laying out and making public roads, leading from the navigable waters emptying into the Atlantic to the Ohio, to the said State and through the same, such roads to be laid out under the authority of Congress, with the consent of the several States through which the road shall pass.

Does that provide that any sum of money, any per cent. whatever, shall be paid to the State of Ohio to go into her treasury? Of course not. It only provides that under the circumstances existing at that time, the Congress of the United States, representing its whole people, was willing to engage to devote 5 per cent. of the proceeds, net, of the sales of the public lands in that State, to certain works of internal improvements that should open a communication between her and the Atlantic seaboard. And yet the committee, through inadvertence I must suppose and as I believe, say that "the United States, in receiving the Western and Southern States into the Union, stipulated in their several acts of admission to pay them 5 per cent. upon the sales of the public lands situated therein."

I need not go through with the other sixteen of these eighteen States, or with any considerable number of them, to show the error into which the Committee on Public Lands has fallen in the very opening and fundamental statement of the proposition and principle upon which we are called on to tax the people of the United States to put into the treasuries of these States this money.

There is another thing preliminary to which I should like to call the attention of my honorable friend from Indiana who has charge of this bill. It is the statement on the second page at the foot of the second paragraph of the report, which says that the United States "up to the present time has made no payment to any of the States upon entries of public lands with military land warrants," which is true, so far, "though demand has been made for the same." I should be glad to be informed by the committee when, for the first time, any demand was made upon the United States for what is supposed to be this claim, or whatever it may be called, embraced in this report. The committee does not refer to the evidence in support of the allegation that demand has been made for 5 per cent. of the valuation of the lands of the United States located under military land warrants. I should like to see what it is that the committee refers to in proof of that proposition, and I wait for a reply.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I can say as of my own knowledge in reference to one particular State that demand has been made in behalf of the State of Kansas continuously, indeed ever since the admission of the State, by the agents of the State sent here for that purpose. I am also informed and believe that a like demand has been made on behalf of nearly all if not quite all the States interested. I speak from information on that point, and I have no doubt of the correctness of that information. Demand has been made at the Interior Department upon the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Possibly it did not bear an internal-revenue stamp and possibly may have lacked something of that formality which would delight the Senator from Vermont; but the fact of demand having been made and repeatedly insisted on, and in some cases recognized by legislative acts of some of the States, there can be no doubt of at all.

Mr. PADDOCK. The statement made by the Senator from Kansas in respect of his State is equally true in respect of mine. An agent was appointed by my State seven or eight years ago for the same purpose. An argument was prepared, written, and presented to the Interior Department on the subject, and since then he has continuously, so far as he could do so, pressed the claim of the State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I was not seeking for information as to the appointment of agents to hunt up claims in favor of States. Many States have such agents; Vermont has one, I am almost ashamed to say; they are around in plentiful numbers, beyond all doubt. I am on the question, which is fairly stated in this report, whether a demand by a State has been made upon the Government of the United States for 5 per cent. of the value of lands located with military land warrants; and Senators say that they have oral information—we do not see the documents—that such is the fact. Now, sir, looking at this, as I thought it to be a duty, and seeing that statement in this report, I addressed a formal inquiry to the official source to know how the fact was, and that was to the Secretary of the Treasury, who pays these percentages after the accounts are settled, and I received this official reply:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
January 28, 1880.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 27th instant, asking whether in the settlements hitherto made under the 5 per cent. clause in the bills admitting States into the Union any claim has been made for more than 5 per cent. on the lands actually sold, and if so, when and by what States, I have the honor to inform you that no claims for more than 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands within its limits appear to have been presented by any State either to this Department or to the General Land Office.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary.

Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
United States Senate.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. With the greatest pleasure. I am merely seeking information.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I can inform the Senator that in the year 1858, a good while ago now, I had the honer of holding a seat in the senate of the State of Iowa, and was upon the committee on Federal relations. This matter was referred to that committee, and a report was made by myself to the senate upon this identical question, and a memorial was passed by the Legislature of the State and the governor of the State was requested to visit Washington City on this identical business and endeavor to have from this Government the performance of the promise it had made to the State of Iowa when the State was admitted into the Union, the State of Iowa having in the mean time performed all the promises that she made as the consideration for that promise from the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, Mr. President, if my honorable and respected friend from Iowa——

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. EDMUNDS. He will excuse me a moment. If my honorable and respected friend from Iowa will have the kindness before we finish the disposition of this bill to look up the documents which will show exactly what the Legislature of Iowa did, in black and white, so that we can see whether it referred to this precise and identical question of military land warrants, and then will look up and show us the official communication that the governor of his State made to the Government of the United States on the subject, I think I can say to him without being misunderstood, as I should be glad to have him say to me in a similar case, it will be much more satisfactory in respect of seeing precisely what claim was made than my recollection of an oral communication or oral statement. My knowledge about this matter is only such as I have been able to obtain by applying to the official repositories of official communications on this subject between States and the General Government. I have read the official response. I do not know but that is all I can do about it.

Now, Mr. President, I will listen with great pleasure to my honorable friend from Illinois.

Mr. LOGAN. I was just going to say, in regard to States making a demand, that I do not know whether what might be called a formal demand has been made; but when a settlement was made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which was afterward referred to one of the Comptrollers of the Treasury in reference to these claims of the States, I, myself, at one time, authorized by the governor of the State of Illinois, went before the Commissioner of the General Land Office with an application to have him reopen the case of Illinois so that this matter might be adjudicated. It was afterward referred to a Comptroller, who, under a certain decision or rule of the Departments, held that the case was res adjudicata in that Department of the Government and could not be reopened; and hence, that the only remedy was to apply to Congress. That I know of my personal knowledge so far as the application of the State of Illinois is concerned.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, Mr. President, I must make the same reply to my honorable friend from Illinois that I did to my distinguished friend from Iowa, that if he will have the kindness to just get the papers in regard to that exact settlement that we may see precisely what were the questions presented, it will be a gratification to me, if to nobody else.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator will understand me. I stated that there was a settlement made with some of the States of which Indiana was one; and the Senators from Indiana will remember the settlement in reference to 2 per cent. of this 5 per cent. My object was to reopen that settlement with Illinois for the purpose of having the claim adjudicated in reference to the land warrants; and it was decided that the case in reference to the claims of States on these questions was res adjudicata and could not be reopened.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then, Mr. President, I understand my honorable friend from Illinois to mean that after all there is no paper on file in the General Land Office or in the Treasury which shows any claim on the part of the State of Illinois or any other State for 5 per cent. of the valuation at $1.25 an acre of lands located under military land warrants; but that on the 2 per cent. question, (which is quite a different one, I beg the very few Senators who care anything about these few millions of dollars that are to come out of the Treasury to remember,) from the beginning there have been efforts on the part of the States not only to get the 3 per cent. that was to be expended within their borders, but to get the 2 per cent. that was to be expended outside of their borders. That they have done "in season and out of season," and in some instances have succeeded, too; but that is quite apart from this business which, according to the best of my official information and to the best of my private belief, founded upon a search of Congressional Globes, records, and documents, which, of course, has been necessarily imperfect, has been born, not like that famous female so popular in Indiana, out of the foam of the sea, but has been born (like another famous female that is said to have been born out of the brain of Jupiter) out of the brain of the democratic—no, I will not say democratic, this has nothing to do with party—out of the brain of my distinguished friend from Indiana. That is what I should have said.

The inquiry I have made about when this thing was first thought of is not of very great importance, although of course it has its weight. If the claim had been made from the beginning and Congress after Congress had denied it, that ought to be a good answer. If it has never been thought of until very recently when the ingenious brain of State agents for collecting military claims in rummaging through and inventing all manner of good ideas for their clients is brought into play, that ought to lead us to hesitate a little before we dip into the Treasury to pay this, and it ought to lead us to hesitate for this reason, which I think cannot be too often impressed upon ourselves in respect of all transactions of this character: that the Senate of the United States and its House of Representatives are not a debtor or a wrong-doer to anybody. It is not against the Senate and the House of Representatives that any claims of this character, if they were made, were made twenty years ago as against a man whose duty it was to pay and it was denied; but the Senate and the House of Representatives, in just as large and just as independent and impartial a sense as may be said of the courts of justice of the United States or the several States, are a tribunal that has no other interest than that of doing impartial justice between the body of the people upon the one side and individual States and individual citizens upon the other. And so I say it is worthy of consideration when an impartial tribunal, existing always, is appealed to from year to year and does not see strength enough in a given case to furnish relief, that later members of the same tribunal, always existing, ought to be a little careful how they tax the people upon the other side to pay stale and newly invented claims. We are not in the attitude of a recusant debtor; we are in the attitude of impartial judges having no interest except that of doing right upon all subjects.

Now, let us see exactly where this present report leaves this business. The report itself concludes by showing the inconsistency of its own proposition. It proceeds in the first place to reason it out that the United States is bound, upon just principles of construction, in respect of these admission acts, to pay to the several States making this claim 5 per cent. of the value of the lands located under military bounty land warrants; that that is a debt upon a just construction of these statutes. What does it say next? It says that as a condition to the payment of this debt, due in justice and by law, these several States shall be estopped if they take the money to make any other claim for other lands disposed of under the homestead and land-grant acts. When are we to begin, Mr. President, the new era in our career of selling justice? Now? I hope not. If this committee is right in saying that by force of the compact with the State of Ohio, if you please, or any of these States or all of them they are entitled under a just construction of these acts of admission to 5 per cent. of the military lands, then why is it that we say "we will not give you that justice to which you are entitled unless you will agree to make no claim in respect of the disposition that we have made of other lands" which fall within precisely the same principle or which do not fall within precisely the same principle, no matter as to that? What sort of an attitude is that for the Congress of the United States to occupy? If these States are entitled by a just construction of these laws to this money, let us pay it to them. If they are not entitled by a just construction of these laws to this money, then I must suppose that the Senators from these States, as well as the Senators from other States, would not wish to have it and will not vote for the bill. Why then do you clog the payment of this debt, as you say it is, with this estoppel, as the committee call it and as the bill calls it, against their making a similar claim in respect to different lands?

Mr. President, I never could consent to a proposition of that kind. I agree that in cases where there is a dispute in respect of the quantum of a claim, where a man whose property has been taken for the public use says he is entitled to $5,000, that that is the value of his wood or his horses or his stores, and the executive agents of the United States say he is only entitled to $3,000, there you may with propriety say in some cases, though I should be pretty shy about that, but in general you may say with propriety "we will compose this matter and will give you $3,000 or $4,000, whatever the sum may be, provided you are willing to take it as a final settlement of this matter." But to say to a man who puts in a claim for a thousand cords of wood delivered in 1863 "we will pay you for the wood we had in 1863 provided you shall be estopped from claiming pay for any wood you delivered in 1864 or any horses that you delivered in 1862," would be rather rough treatment, as everybody would see.

I leave that, Mr. President, and I come to a consideration of these statutes. The Senate will have seen in the preliminary reference which has been made that the statute about Ohio has no application to this bill at all, because as to Ohio we never agreed to pay her, or into her treasury, or for the benefit of any internal improvements within her borders, any money at all. The United States did agree to expend 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands in her borders in works of internal improvement between Ohio and the waters falling into the Atlantic. That would hardly furnish ground for a claim as a matter of justice or of law for paying her 5 per cent. of the value of the military lands in that State. But let us come to a State where some money was to be paid over for expenditure within the State; take Louisiana, for instance, which I believe was the next State, chronologically, admitted into the Union. The act of the 8th of April, 1812, provided for the admission of Louisiana into the Union.

Mr. McDONALD. The act of February 20, 1811, is the one governing the case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. According to this volume of the statutes, on the 8th of April, 1812, Congress passed an act for the admission of the State of Louisiana into the Union.

Mr. McDONALD. The enabling act was passed on the 20th of February, 1811. I have the fifth section before me.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Here it is, volume 2 of the Statutes at Large, page 643:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of the lands of the United States, after the 1st day of January, shall be applied to laying out and constructing public roads and levees in the said State, as the Legislature thereof may direct.

That you will see, Mr. President, was not a proposition to pay to the treasury of the State of Louisiana any money at all, but it was an appropriation of a certain proportion of the public moneys of the United States for a certain object, and that object was to assist in the construction of public roads and levees in the State of Louisiana, to be applied as it respects the selection of the road and the levee and the circumstances under which it was to be done, in such manner as the Legislature of the State of Louisiana should direct. And that brings us to the question (aside from the fact that there was no provision to pay into the Treasury of the United States this percentage which I shall come to by and by,) what is the meaning of the term "sales," "proceeds of sales," "net proceeds of sales after deducting all expenses?"

What is a sale? The committee in their report say that a sale is anything that anybody gets or agrees to do for a consideration. That was not the general impression among law writers at the time and before and since these laws were passed; but perhaps the committee are correct about it. Let us see. Here is Bouvier's Law Dictionary which under the head of "sale" gives a very condensed but somewhat specific statement of what a sale is, and "sale" in law, I may add, is a term of art, so to speak; that is, it is a term that has a fixed and definite meaning, a precise definition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator yield a moment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I shall.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair asks gentlemen standing outside the bar to be seated and cease conversation, so that Senators who are interested in this bill may listen to the debate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My only fear is, Mr. President, that I shall disturb the Senators and the strangers in some private conversation that they have. Of course the public business is of no account, and it would be a great misfortune to disturb anybody in his private affairs here!

Bouvier, in his Law Dictionary, volume 2, fourteenth edition, page 492, says:

> SALE. An agreement by which one of two contracting parties, called the seller, gives a thing and passes the title to it, in exchange for a certain price in current money, to the other party, who is called the buyer or purchaser, who, on his part, agrees to pay such price.

Citing Pardessus, Noy's Maxims, Sheppard's Touchstone, Kent, Pothier, and all that long list of law writers who, whatever else they may have disagreed about, never disagreed about what a sale was. Then it proceeds:

> This contract differs from a barter or exchange in this: that in the latter the price or consideration, instead of being paid in money, is paid in goods or merchandise susceptible of a valuation. 3 Salk., 157; 12 N. H., 390; 10 Vt., 457. It differs from accord and satisfaction, because in that contract the thing is given for the purpose of quieting a claim, and not for a price. An onerous gift, when the burden it imposes is the payment of a sum of money, is, when accepted, in the nature of a sale. When partition is made between two or more joint owners of a chattel, it would seem the contract is in the nature of a barter. See 11 Pick., Mass., 311.

Then it proceeds again:

> The price must consist in a sum of money—

That is the consideration; and the writer italicizes the words that I emphasize—

> The price must consist in a sum of money which the buyer agrees to pay to the seller; for if paid for in any other way the contract would be an exchange or barter, and not a sale, as before observed.

Thus it is quite obvious, from the well-known definition, that I should not have presumed to cite but for this extraordinary report of the committee as to what they consider a sale to be, that the language of the acts of Congress admitting these States, wherein 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales—nothing else—of the public lands of the United States shall be devoted to certain objects, shows that Congress must have been understood to mean exactly what the term itself imports and was always known to import, and that is a disposition for money; and it is clear that Congress did not intend and cannot be construed to have intended to tie itself up that it would sell all of the public domain and preclude itself from disposing of just such part of it as public interests might require for the benefit of the general objects of the people of the United States, either as the consideration, if you please to call it that, for the services of its soldiers, or as donations to States for colleges and universities, or as homesteads to settlers, or for any other of the innumerable causes and instances for which and in which the public lands have been disposed of; but so far as a fund of net proceeds of money, the result of a sale, was concerned, Congress undertook in these acts of admission, sometimes in one way and sometimes in another, to devote it to objects that would be for the benefit of the settlers of these States and for the benefit of the citizens of other States as well, in respect of the expenditures for these objects of public intercommunication.

Now, to show that this law-dictionary man is not altogether wild, let me take the judgment of an Ohio judge, Judge McLean, whose character and learning I need not spend any time to comment upon, decided in the State of Ohio and where the very question arose as to what was the nature of a sale and purchase, because they are correlative terms, one upon the one side and one upon the other. In the case then before him it was claimed, on account of the statutes of the United States, that the Treasury Department could not get title to land by the levy of an execution or by the turning over by a debtor voluntarily of his estate to pay a debt that he owed to the United States, because the statutes forbid the purchase by any officer of the Government of the United States of any property without the express authority of Congress; and that was the point.

Judge McLean said, speaking of this case:

> The lands were taken, not as a purchase, but to secure the debt of the late receiver.—3 McLean's Reports, p. 367.

Admitting that the Secretary of the Treasury had no power whatever to purchase lands, but holding that the taking of land for a good consideration in the payment of a debt was not a purchase within the meaning of the statute, because the word "purchase" was the correlative, the counterpart of the word "sale," and that a sale was a trade by which one man sold for money property that he had and received from the purchaser the money he paid.

But, Mr. President, if it were open to any doubt, as it is not, what is the legal meaning of the term "sale" used in all these statutes, how much more is it fortified by the attending expressions in nearly every instance, I believe not in the case of Ohio where nothing was to be paid over to her under any circumstances? The fifth section of the Louisiana act says that 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of the lands of the United States after a certain date shall be applied to a certain purpose. What kind of meaning are you to give to the term "net proceeds?" The committee say in their report that consideration is the test; therefore they would read it in the case of Louisiana to fulfill our contract with her, that 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the military bounty land locations, that is 5 per cent. of the consideration that we got for those lands, should be applied and paid into the treasury of this State, which by the way was never agreed to be done, but that is another matter. What was the consideration for the military land warrants, 5 per cent. of which is to be paid into the treasury of the State of Louisiana? Why, Mr. President, it was the service of the soldier; it was his one year, or two years, or three years of toil, of privation, of blood, of wounds and misery. That was the consideration that the United States received. They received—to state it shortly—so much of his life, which is above money and beyond price; and yet on the theory of this report, inasmuch as the consideration, which it says is the test, is the net proceeds, we must take 5 per cent. of the consideration that the soldier paid. I can see one of them right before me now; and we are to take out of my good friend the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS] one-twentieth part—I wish we could—of the suffering and the toil and the danger that he experienced, and melt it up some way into money, and say "that is 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of his military services which is to be put into the treasury of the State of Louisiana."

Well, Mr. President, if it were not too serious a thing, we would say, like Mark Tapley, that that would be jolly. But the most admirable thing about it is, that in this age of progress and improvement and discovery, this alchemy that is to melt the blood and the suffering of the soldier fighting for his country into coin, to be turned into the Treasury as 5 per cent. of the net proceeds, has been reserved for this day and year of our Lord to be first discovered. It gives us hope of the future of the human race. In another half century undoubtedly we shall find something better; but I think we ought to be satisfied with our success in this method of turning blood into money.

But let us look a little further, Mr. President, about this business. It is obvious enough, as I have said, and the committee admit it by this style of reasoning, turning proceeds into consideration, (two terms and ideas that have no sort of relation to each other,) that if you take the face of these laws and their fair and legal import, these military bounty land warrants are not for lands that were sold by the United States; they are not for lands the net proceeds of which have come into the Treasury of the United States in any sense whatever. There would be an end of the claim unless it is a claim addressed to the beneficence of Congress, which of course is another thing; but the committee do not put it on that ground; the committee are altogether too high-spirited to be appealing for their great and prosperous States to any beneficence or gratitude of the rest of the people of the United States; they are appealing upon the law as they understand it, and upon that justice which is due under the law and for the law. And yet, as I have shown, and as no man can contradict either upon reason or authority, the law provides for the expenditure of 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of sale, and that sale is the disposition of property for money, and the term "net proceeds" is nonsense applied to any other construction than a transaction for money.

Now, let us look a little further. Taking the territory northwest of the Ohio, where do we get the right to give this 5 per cent. to any State at all for its benefit, which is the theory of this bill? This bill, Senators will bear in mind, is to pay into the treasury of the respective States for their private and municipal disposition in any way they please, these sums of money. Where do we get the right to dispose of the public lands for any such purpose as that? Let us see.

When the State of Virginia, with that patriotic self-sacrifice to the interests of the new and struggling American Union, gave the lands northwest of the Ohio to the Confederation, as it was then called, she took particular care to provide, as far as the clearest language could provide, that this property of hers should not be appropriated to the benefit of any particular State, but always and under all circumstances for the benefit of all alike. In the month of October, 1783, the Commonwealth of Virginia provided for turning over her property, this vast area, to the northwest of the Ohio River, to the confederated union, and let us see what she provided. After reciting the exigencies of the occasion and the condition of the common welfare of all the colonies or commonwealths, as they then called themselves, she provided for ceding "unto the United States in Congress assembled and for the benefits of said States," that is the United States, happily still the United States,—

> —all right, title, and claim, as well of soil as jurisdiction, which this Commonwealth hath to the territory or tract of country within the limits of the Virginia charter, situate, lying, and being to the northwest of the river Ohio, subject to the terms and conditions contained in the before-recited act of Congress of the 13th day of September last, that is to say—

Then it proceeds to state the conditions about forming States with sovereignty, and so on, and proceeds to say:

That a quantity not exceeding one hundred and fifty thousand acres of land, promised by this State, shall be allowed and granted to the then Colonel, now General George Rogers Clarke, and to the officers and soldiers of his regiment, who marched with him when the posts of Kaskaskies and Saint Vincent's were reduced, and to the officers and soldiers that have been since incorporated into the said regiment; to be laid off in one tract, the length of which not to exceed double the breadth—

And so forth, and so on. Further:

That in case the quantity of good lands on the southeast side of the Ohio, upon the waters of Cumberland River, and between the Green River and Tennessee River, which have been reserved by law for the Virginia troops upon continental establishment, should, from the North Carolina line bearing in further upon the Cumberland lands than was expected, prove insufficient for their legal bounties, the deficiency should be made up to the said troops in good lands to be laid off between the rivers Scioto and Little Miami, on the northwest side of the river Ohio, in such proportions as have been engaged to them by the laws of Virginia.

Further, and now I come to the condition to which I wish to call the attention of Senators; what I have read is very material as you will presently see in another connection:

That all the lands within the territory so ceded to the United States, and not reserved for or appropriated to any of the before-mentioned purposes, or disposed of in bounties to the officers and soldiers of the American Army, shall be considered as a common fund for the use and benefit of such of the United States as have become or shall become members of the confederation or federal alliance of the said States, Virginia inclusive, according to their usual respective proportions in the general charge and expenditure, and shall be faithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever.

Congress accepted the lands upon these terms; and now this bill provides that the very military land warrants that were issued to the officers and soldiers of the continental line and establishment in the war of the Revolution shall have a tax of 5 per cent. laid upon them against Virginia's interest in the money in the Treasury of the United States, shall be paid over to these States northwest of the Ohio, and that is asked in the name of law and justice! Just think of it! It is not lands of the soldiers of 1812 nor 1847 nor 1861 alone that are provided for; it is every military land warrant that has been issued since the existence of the United States of America. There is no limitation. The man who framed the bill had a large grasp of mind, and he proposes that the State of Virginia shall contribute, after she had given this property to the United States upon these terms, 5 per cent. of taxes upon her tax-burdened people in her Commonwealth to pay to these States, out of her own property, the proceeds as they call them, the value of the land that she had so generously and patriotically turned into the common fund for the benefit of all the States in proportion to the burdens for public benefit of the whole land that they had owned. And yet this report seems to think that it has made out that here is a legal, and a just debt as well, that is to be charged upon the Treasury of the United States. I have not been able to see it in that light.

Now, let us go a little further. What were these moneys to be expended for that were to be received from the sales of public lands? Were they to be paid into the treasuries of the States for their general benefit, to diminish taxation by that amount? Not at all. They were to be expended, either in the State or out of it, as a trust, for objects of general public welfare; and that is the sole ground upon which we could justify for a moment, in the light of this cession of the State of Virginia the provisions of this 5 per cent. at all, because if we had provided in the act admitting Ohio or any other of these States—I only speak of her because she comes first in point of time—that 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sale of the public lands within the borders of that State as admitted should be paid into her treasury as a fund for her disposition according to her own free will, we should have violated the compact with the State of Virginia, and the trust and terms upon which we received the land. This provision, therefore, for the 5 per cent. of the net proceeds can only be maintained upon the ground that this 5 per cent. is to be a trust for the general benefit of all the people of the United States, and to be expended in those parts of the country where in the judgment of Congress in making these acts of admission it is most for the advantage of all that this proportion shall be expended in public roads, over which all the citizens of the United States may freely travel, in public canals, in the making of levees along rivers up and down which the commerce of half a continent shall float.

That, Mr. President, was the only ground, and is to this day, upon which the 5 per cent. can be justified at all. And yet what does this bill provide? It provides that there shall be taken out of the Treasury of the United States, the common fund of all the people, five or six or eight or ten million dollars,—the committee has not been kind enough to tell us how many,—and put into the treasuries of these States for their private and personal disposition, not for objects of public improvement for which the 5 per cent. of sales was reserved, not for objects of education for which in one or two of the States 3 per cent. was reserved, but the mere payment of a debt which shall diminish the next year's tax-lists of these States in exactly that proportion. Therefore on the theory of this committee that these military lands fall within the definition of the term "sales," their bill is altogether wrong and their report is altogether wrong, for if that theory be true then the 5 per cent. of the value of these military land warrants must be expended by Congress, in the State or out of it, for objects of internal improvement, levees, canals, &c., that will be for the common benefit of all the people.

But that is not proposed by the committee in this bill at all. It is that these States shall take this money just as they take any other debt that is due to them, in their municipal and corporate character.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Under the same obligation as originally.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not at all. Let us see what it says. The obligation that will rest on each of these States by this bill is the obligation that is in it, and not in some other bill.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I take it that if any State under this bill receives its part of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands within it that has been improperly withheld from it, the obligation as to that which has been withheld will rest upon the State to expend it, just as the obligation rested upon it to expend that which it has received. Whether it is safe to trust these States as you have trusted them in regard to what has been received, or not, the Senator from Vermont and I might differ, but if this money has been improperly withheld and is now paid, the obligation to devote it to the purposes for which it was intended is precisely the same as was the obligation to expend what has been not withheld but received.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, that would be very fine indeed if this money was received under the original acts; but the reason for this bill at all is the fact that these States cannot get this money under the original acts. Nobody understands the law as they seem to think they do; therefore the title of these States to this money is this act which we are called upon to pass, and no other; and hence their title will depend upon the construction of this act. Now what does it provide? It provides:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to ascertain the amount of public lands entered by the location of military scrip and land warrants in the States—

Naming eighteen, which as I said before covers the beginning of this great and free Commonwealth of the United States down to this day—whose enabling acts of admission into the Union contain a stipulation for the payment of 5 per cent. on the sales of the public lands therein.

There is an assertion in the bill which I have already shown about the report of the committee does not appear to be true; but we will not mind that just now. So far it directs the Secretary of the Interior. What then?

And after making such investigation it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to certify the amount so found to the Secretary of the Treasury, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to such States—

A phrase that never existed before in one of these acts about the 5 per cent. of sales even, according to the best of my belief—perhaps I am mistaken, but certainly I do not remember any—to pay to such States 5 per cent. on the amount of lands located by military scrip and land warrants, estimating said lands at the rate of $1.25 per acre.

Then follows a proviso which has not any bearing on this point, and that is all except that we are to incur a public debt in order to raise the money to pay these millions. Now, my friend from Iowa, whose candor and uprightness I have quite as high respect for as I have for my own, suggests—and it is the best possible suggestion that can be made; it exhausts all possible argument of ingenuity on that side—why is it not the presumption that the State of Iowa, for instance, will be bound to devote this money to the same purposes that she was bound to devote the original money to. That is his argument. She is bound to devote this money that she gets by this act to the purpose that this act provides it shall be devoted to, and what is that? Paying it into her treasury.

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. President——

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator will pardon me for just a minute; I am not quite ready for him now. Just wait a moment or two.

In the preceding acts providing for the three percents and two percents—some of them, not all—there is the express provision that these moneys shall be faithfully (I am quoting the word "faithfully") devoted by the State to these objects of internal improvement, roads and canals. Then there are others that require the State to keep an account as a trustee, and to report to the proper officers of the Government of the United States how the money has been spent. And when in the year 1850, Mr. Thomas H. Benton, for upward of thirty years a member of this body, undertook to have passed a bill—not this, nor anything like it, even his active and far-reaching brain had not discovered the secret of the gold that lay hidden in this mine—by which the United States was to pay over to the State of Missouri the 2 per cent. of the 5 mentioned in her act of admission, that he contended was to be spent in building roads to that State that confessedly never had been built, he found it necessary, differing from my honorable friend from Iowa as to the presumptions about what States can do, to provide in the bill by an amendment made by his own committee and which still stands in italics to this day in the records of the Senate, that the money thus given to the State of Missouri, the 2 per cent., shall be faithfully expended for the objects provided in the original provision, of building roads and canals within her borders for the general benefit of the people of the United States.

Mr. Benton perhaps overleaped the mark; he was too generous;

but he had not discovered the presumption that my ingenious and respected friend here has found on the spur of the occasion to get over this difficulty. Now I will hear my friend from Indiana.

Mr. McDONALD. I call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the enabling act under which the State of Nebraska was formed. The twelfth section reads as follows:

That 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of all public lands lying within said State, which have been or shall be sold by the United States prior or subsequent to the admission of said State into the Union, after deducting all expenses incident to the same, shall be paid to the said State for the support of common schools.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I must modify my denial to that extent. The Senator has found an instance.

Mr. McDONALD. No. I will state that not only in this case but in several others following this the terms originally used were changed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How many others are there following the State of Nebraska?

Mr. McDONALD. Nevada is one, Colorado is another.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us look at Nevada and then at Colorado which I believe winds up the song. The State of Nebraska, when she came in, had already got the benefit of the Pacific Railway grants and the benefit of grants to the various spreading branches of that line by the act of 1864. The condition of the land grants in that State as it related to internal improvements would be represented on a map much in the condition that a demonstrator of anatomy or a geologist would designate as an anastomosed anfractuosity; that, I have no doubt, is a phrase perfectly familiar to the Committee on Public Lands as it is to the rest of the Senate; that is to say, a net-work running into each other in every way of veins, spreading everywhere, having, like eternity, neither end nor beginning, but covering the whole surface of things.

Mr. PADDOCK. And yet there were but two grants, I will remind the Senator from Vermont, for two roads.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What of that? There was only one creation which was only half of what the Senator says, and yet the creation embraced everything. The only thing that astonishes me is that it should have been necessary that there should be two grants. I should have supposed one would have scooped up the whole concern.

Mr. PADDOCK. It simply became necessary, in order that the Senator from Vermont and his constituents should communicate with the citizens of the Pacific coast, that they should pass through the State of Nebraska.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would be a great pleasure to us, only the people there are so hospitable that when we got to Nebraska we should not wish to go farther. [Laughter.]

Mr. PADDOCK. It is a question whether it might not have been better for us in the long run if the grants had not been made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know but that it would have been better for Nebraska if the grants had not been made at all. The power of monopolies in a State, the power of corporations that control Legislatures, that influence the administration of justice, that escape taxation, that grind commerce, is a serious question, whether for any State it is better that such monopolies should exist in it. That is true.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to state to the Senator that they do not escape taxation in my State. That is one State in which they do not escape taxation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am glad to know that, Mr. President. I wish they did not escape taxation in any State; I wish they did not escape legislative control in any State. But that is apart from my purpose. When we get up a railroad bill, we will consider that part of the subject. We are now on the question of how much of the consideration, that is to say the blood and bones of our soldiers, is to be turned into money by this bill and put into the treasuries of these States.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think the Senator will admit that Vermont and all the other States of the Union had as much interest in the construction of that road as Nebraska itself had.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not sure, if you come to a question of definition, as to exactly what you mean by "interest." It is not necessary to spend the time of the Senate, which I see is so eager to get on with this discussion, with that.

I go on again. Mr. President, I was saying, and I wish to repeat so that it may not be forgotten when the supporters of this bill do me the honor to reply if they find it necessary, that upon the theory of the bill itself, granting (which is contrary to the truth and the law) that these military lands were in any way the subject of these compacts, these States are not entitled to have this money paid into their treasuries, excepting possibly Nebraska for schools; I leave that out.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator from Vermont permit me a moment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. PLUMB. I would call the attention of the Senator to the fifth subdivision of the third section of the act for the admission of Kansas:

Fifth. That 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of sales of all public lands lying within said State which shall be sold by Congress after the admission of said State into the Union, after deducting all the expenses incident to the same, shall be paid to said State for the purpose of making public roads and internal improvements, or for other purposes as the Legislature shall direct.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the date of that?

Mr. PLUMB. The 29th day of January, 1861.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Five per cent. for the purpose of making public roads.

Mr. PLUMB. "Or for other purposes, as the Legislature shall direct."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly. The Senator need not interrupt again; I can remember long enough to remember the words of that sentence "or for other purposes, as the Legislature shall direct." Now, will my learned friend tell me as a lawyer and as a judge, that that means that the State may omit taxation for one year and take that money to spend for ordinary State expenses, or will he say "for other purposes of the same character?" I know what he will say as a lawyer and a judge. He will say that that does not confer on the State unlimited authority to give it to him or to me.

Mr. PLUMB. I called the attention of the Senator from Vermont to this provision for the purpose of challenging his statement, as I understood it to be that no other State except the one he named was entitled to have the money paid to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No. I took it from the Senator from Indiana who spoke of Nebraska, and said that the following States, by which I understood him to mean those following in point of time, had different provisions.

Then, Mr. President, taking the great mass of these, because each one varies from the other a little almost in every instance; I have an exact abstract of them all here which I think I shall have printed; taking them all together, in every instance, in some form, except possibly in two or three of the last, these moneys, by whomsoever they were to be expended, were a trust fund to be expended for objects of general public welfare in the State or out of it that would be for the common and permanent benefit of the whole people of the United States. They were not to go into the treasuries of these States as their ordinary revenues go, but as trust moneys, if they went there at all, and in the earlier instances they were never to go there, but as trust moneys to be turned into the form of a canal which should last for an indefinite number of years, or a public highway that should last in the same way, or for levees that should maintain a river for the common commerce and interchange of communication of the whole people. And yet this bill does not make any such provision and does not intend to make any such provision, as I must presume from the tenor of the report and from the bill itself. The report was intended to demonstrate that the United States owed a debt, in the simple and ordinary sense of that term, to these respective States upon the construction of a statute that had never been discovered for a period of fifty years and upwards.

Now let us go a little further, Mr. President, if we may.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator from Vermont yield to me for a moment on that part of his argument?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I would ask the Senator, if no provision had been made in any of the enabling acts of these States securing to the Government lands exemption from taxation, whether or not in his judgment the States would have had any claim against the General Government for taxes as the proprietor of these lands?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is exactly the next point I was coming to in the observations I am making upon this question. I am of opinion myself—it does not bind anybody but me—that the property the United States had in these lands derived from the State of Virginia—there were other lands sold that came from Georgia, but we need not mind those now, this illustrates the whole thing—was a property in the same sense and of the same character as that which the Commonwealth of Virginia possessed, and that it would be no more within the competence of the respective States admitted into the Union to tax those lands while they remained the property of the United States, under the Constitution and under this act of cession, than it would be if this Capitol had been located, as it might have been without this ten-mile provision in the Constitution, in the city of any State, for the State to have taxed the Capitol or taxed the Senators who come here to attend the sessions of Congress. In other words, I hold that this public domain was entirely beyond the jurisdiction of State power for the purpose of taxation while it was the property and in the hands of the United States, in exactly the same sense and for exactly the same reason that the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that even under the stress of war it is not within the constitutional power of the United States to derive a revenue from the salary of a State officer. I think my honorable friend will agree with me.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. No, Mr. President, I cannot. I think I can see a very great distinction between the case of a public officer, or any agent properly required by the Federal Government in the discharge of its great powers and functions, and the case of land held by it as a proprietor. I know there has been a great deal of difference of opinion among able men on this subject, and I did not know what the opinion of the Senator from Vermont was, and therefore I thought I would ask him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope I have stated my opinion with sufficient distinctness so that my friends understand it.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Look at it a moment. Suppose in the time of the late unhappy civil war, or whatever we call it, the United States wanting to borrow money very much had undertaken to tax the property of the respective States, their State-houses, their jails, their money on hand, is it possible that any human being who occupied a seat as a judge or any Senator would spend any time in thinking of it or would say that such a proposition could be maintained? And if it is clear that the United States cannot tax the property of the States which they hold in their sovereign character, is it possible that the States may tax the property of the United States that it holds in its sovereign character? I should think not.

But then the gentlemen in support of this bill will say "every act of admission seems to imply that the States may tax because there is a prohibition, a compact that they will not." Not by any means, Mr. President. No such implication is to be drawn from that provision. It was to secure, so that everybody would understand it alike, the constitutional right of the United States to dominion over these lands that that clause was inserted, just as you will see in the next clause that these States shall never tax the lands of citizens of other States higher than they do those of their own; and yet the Constitution is perfectly clear that they cannot do that because it says that the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several States. It has always been the law, settled by the courts, agreed to by everybody, that a State cannot make discriminations of burdens between citizens of its own State holding similar property, and citizens of other States; and yet there is a provision of these compacts to that effect.

There was another, that the free navigation of the Mississippi River, in the States that bordered upon it when they were admitted, should never be interfered with. Suppose that had not been in those acts, would anybody stand up and maintain before 1860 and after 1865—I will leave out the space between which was abnormal—that any State bordering upon that magnificent river would have a right to impede by laws or regulations the free flow of commerce up and down it? I reckon not. If that river had been held at its mouth by an independent nation, I maintain upon principles of modern public law (and I do not mean by that the public law of this year or last year, but upon principles of civilized jurisprudence as regulating the public law between nations) that it would not be within the competence of France or Spain, if either held it at this day, to prevent its free navigation past the port of New Orleans. That I think is public law to-day, and it ought to be.

I say then this matter of "consideration," as it is called, does not help the case of this bill at all. Now I come to that which was a consideration, for so far there is no consideration at all. It only said what the law was before. Now I come to a thing that the States really gave up when they came in and that they were not obliged to give up, and that was the right to tax the lands in the hands of private owners, after they were sold, for the period of five years. The moment the United States parted with the title to the land and the patent was issued, the States could tax the lands, but it was agreed they would not. What consideration did they get for it? The Senators supporting this bill say they got the consideration of having 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of these lands paid to them. I have shown that was not so agreed to be done; but no matter for that. I cannot go on, sir, with this noise; I must stop.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The disturbance comes from gentlemen who are not members of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should of course have inferred that, Mr. President. Members of the Senate are supposed to know the rules. Strangers who come in in spite of the rules, of course are not bound to know what the rules are. I must put in that plea for the strangers.

Now we come to the five years' exemption from taxation. There was a consideration in one sense. What did the State get for it and what was the mutual understanding and the mutual convenience and the mutual benefit that was to be got? The United States gained the privilege of making a greater demand for the sale of her own lands, because the people who bought them from the United States would have them free of taxation for five years. What did the State get? The State by the same sign got the inducement to settlers to come into the State and buy these public lands and build up a State by rapid growth because they would be free from taxation for five years during which time the hardy pioneer might turn up the prairie or fell the forest and get in his crops and build his little log hut and become a citizen of the Commonwealth able to pay taxes and develop it to the extent that these great States have been developed. Is there any balance of advantage, any balance of injury to these States out of that? I want to ask my honorable friend from Iowa, whose opinion I almost always follow in all matters of legislation, if he thinks this five years' limitation, which did not exist in Iowa at all by the way——

Mr. McDONALD. I should like——

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Indiana will pardon me a moment. I have not quite finished. I was going to make a very handsome observation just there, and I should be sorry to lose it. [Laughter.] I wanted to ask my honorable friend from Iowa whether if this five years' limitation against taxation had existed in the State of Iowa, and thereby the emigration from the other States of the Union had been promoted, (and if it was not promoted, of course the limit of taxation would be of no advantage because the lands would not be sold,) so that the pioneers and the settlers and their wives and children, and their oxen and their wagons, had come in and turned up the prairies and raised wheat and corn and built houses and schools, he thinks it would have been injurious to the State of Iowa to hold out an inducement of that kind. I know what his answer would be. He would say no, just as in old States as well as in new ones, when we wish to enhance or stimulate the prosperity of our respective commonwealths we provide that, for three years or for five or whatever the time, special industries shall be exempt from taxation, the manufacture of iron, the opening of mines, the manufacture of cotton, anything that the private citizen will invest his capital in—which is labor as well as money, I beg everybody to believe in my opinion—all species of enterprise and industry that is to promote and build up the general welfare of the State, he is not getting a favor when the State says, "we will relieve you from otherwise contributing to the burden for a limited time," but he is making a fair compact upon equal terms, and he pays well for all the immunity that he gets.

Now, I will hear the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. McDONALD. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont what benefit it was for instance to my State where the exemption did apply? Land companies purchased the land in blocks of twenty and thirty thousand acres, and held the land for five years without taxation, and after the issuance of these land warrants located them and held them also after they were sold, without taxation for five years. I ask what benefit that was to the State of Indiana, or how that aided in developing its resources?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I do not think it would do so; but I do not know much about the speculations in the State of Indiana or how they managed them there. I am speaking of the principle and the tenor of this compact between the United States and the State of Indiana and the other States. I am not speaking of the fact that under these laws or any other law it may happen that combinations of speculators and evil-minded men can get together and impede the prosperity of a State either by discouraging manufactures or by buying up large blocks of land and excluding immigration, although I have never heard, I confess, that in the State of Indiana all the land there was bought up, that her population did not increase in an enormous degree and with an almost unprecedented rapidity. The speculators may have been there; the blocks may have been made; but there was still ample room that was occupied by the settler who devoted his labor to the improvement of the soil and to the building up of the tremendous prosperity and the great welfare of that State. But, as I say, that is not the question. The question is the true intent and theory upon which these compacts between the United States and these States were made. If there were abuses under them, it was not the fault of the law, it was the fault of the circumstances under which the combinations were made.

Mr. McDONALD. I understood that the Senator was endeavoring to show that Iowa would have been benefited by this exemption by enabling settlers to come in and purchase lands, and be free from taxes for five years. I was merely endeavoring to illustrate by the practical results in my own State that that was not the way this compact had operated; but that, on the contrary, capitalists purchased the lands, held them for five years without expense, and when they were finally sold to the settlers to whom he referred they were sold at enhanced prices, and this made an inducement to persons who had capital to buy up lands in the western part of my State, which they could do, and hold them without expense for the term of five years before they were called upon to make any disposition of them. Thus they had five years for the advance of the price of the land before it was any burden to them to hold it at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I think I have seen not long since the comments of a court in the State of Indiana upon this taxation principle by Judge McLean, or else the judges of the State courts, I have forgotten the case. In a tax case where the question arose whether the particular land was within the protection of this compact or not the judges, citizens of Indiana, or of the bordering State of Ohio if it was in the circuit court held——

Mr. McDONALD. Citizens of the State of New York. I have the record of the case here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I supposed Judge McLean was a citizen of the State of Ohio and not of the State of New York.

Mr. McDONALD. The parties to the suit I referred to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not on that; I am on what the judge said about the theory of the five years' exemption. The court administering justice in the time of it among that people said that this statute of exemption was a statute of high public interest and import. I am not using his exact language but the substance of it, as I remember it, and that it was of the greatest possible benefit as well to the whole body of the commonwealth as to the particular person who sought to avail himself of the benefits of it. So it would appear from the tax cases in Indiana arising under this exemption that the speculators did not have their blocks waiting for five years and keeping out settlers so extensively as to prevent the State from getting the real benefit that the theory and provision of the act for her admission provided for, the furnishing inducements to settlers to go in and fill up the State to the greatness to which she has grown.

Mr. McDONALD. If the Senator from Vermont will permit me I will read him an extract from a bill filed in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Indiana by one of these non-resident holders to enforce by injunction this exemption from taxation for five years after the land had been entered, that, too, after the act of Congress had been passed relieving our State from this disability, holding that the land having been entered before the act was passed they had the five years to run notwithstanding.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the name of that case? Is that the Holton case?

Mr. McDONALD. This is the Holton case. This is the bill. After stating his citizenship in the State of New York the complainant says:

Thereupon your orator complains and says that he was the owner in fee-simple, by purchase from the United States at their land office at Crawfordsville, of about 15,852 acres and forty-two one hundredths of an acre.

Which he said he entered in 1851, and that in 1852 the State of Indiana under the license as it was understood then granted by Congress, undertook to tax these lands, and he seeks an injunction which was granted by the Federal court. The small purchase was fifteen thousand acres, that was all, as a homestead.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is so much more than fifteen thousand acres in the whole State of Indiana that I take it that would not be a very large exclusion of the settlers that actually came in. But if the Senator will just give a little attention to his own case, he will see that Holton had bought his land before the repealing act.

Mr. McDONALD. So I stated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. McDONALD. I am not complaining of the decision, but I am simply showing that this benefit was not for the exclusive advantage of homestead settlers on forty acres or one hundred and sixty acres of land, or anything of that kind.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly, there were not any homestead settlers at that time. The homestead acts came in long afterward. But if the Senator merely means to say that under the beneficent provisions of these acts of Congress as well for the States as for the settlers, some people would make profit who did not give proper consideration for it, like this fifteen-thousand-acre man, then I agree to it, because the millennium has not come, and everybody is not always found willing, except in the case of the Committee on Public Lands, to omit to avail himself of what he thinks the law may give him if he can make anything out of it. That I admit, and that is all there is to it.

Then we come back, without spending any more time on that, to the proposition that I started out with in this connection, that this provision for omitting taxation for five years, instead of being a consideration given by the State for the 5 per cent. on sales that was to be expended in a certain way, was quite, on the other hand, a wise and wholesome provision of public policy by the governing power of the country that had a right to admit the State or leave it a Territory, that in order to build up the State in the most rapid and stable way possible, immigrants should be induced to move in and settle by having this relief for that period.

Now, let us go a little further, Mr. President, although that partly relates to a subject that I have gone over and I refer to it lest I may have forgotten it before. In several of these acts there are words to show conclusively that both Congress and the States understood that the military bounty lands had no reference to this 5 per cent. subject at all. Why? Because in many of them—and I will have them read by and by before this debate gets through—in the very act of admission it is provided, first that the lands sold shall not be taxed for five years, and next that the military bounty lands shall not be taxed for three years; and then when you come to later admissions of States, there is no limitation of taxation of lands sold at all, but there is still preserved for the benefit of the soldier the provision that his military bounty land shall not be taxed for three years.

How is it possible for human ingenuity, under a statute which says that, to maintain that the military bounty land falls within the definition of the term "lands that are sold" when it speaks of the two classes of lands as entirely separate and distinct, the same act, one falling under one provision as to taxation and immunity, and the other under another, and when you come to the later States while the lands sold are not relieved from taxation for a day, still the 5 per cent. out of them is to be devoted to public uses, and the military bounty lands are to be free for three years or two as the case may be. I should be glad to hear my honorable friend from Indiana, when his time comes, explain to us how that comes, how Congress should have been so utterly incapable of understanding the use of language as to speak of these two kinds of lands in the same act and the same contract with these States, one of them to pay 5 per cent. of their proceeds for certain public benefits of the United States and of the citizens of the States and to be free from taxation for five years, other lands described in this bill not as lands sold but as military lands to be subject to taxation within three years, and then when the policy was reversed a few years later, the lands sold to be taxed at once and the military bounty lands to be taxed only at the expiration of three years—how Congress fell into such an amazing confusion and chaos of terms and provisions as that if the military lands fall within the fair meaning of the term "lands sold" as having net proceeds out of which was to be paid such and such sums of money.

Mr. ALLISON. Will not the Senator have one of those statutes read now?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh yes; I will with great satisfaction.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Will the Senator from Vermont yield for an adjournment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator wait a minute? I want to answer my honorable friend from Iowa first. Here is one; I will take the State of Illinois which comes to my mind as it always does with gratitude and respect when my honorable friend rises. The act was passed April 18, 1818:

Third. That 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the lands lying within such State, and which shall be sold by Congress, from and after the 1st day of January, 1819, after deducting all expenses incident to the same, shall be reserved for the purposes following, namely: two-fifths to be disbursed, under the direction of Congress, in making roads leading to the State; the residue to be appropriated, by the Legislature of the State, for the encouragement of learning, of which one-sixth part shall be exclusively bestowed on a college or university.

Now I come to the exemption part:

Provided always, That the four foregoing propositions, herein offered, are on the conditions that the convention of the said State shall provide by an ordinance irrevocable without the consent of the United States, that every and each tract of land sold by the United States from and after the 1st day of January, 1819, shall remain exempt from any tax laid by order, or under any authority, of the State, whether for State, county, or township, or any other purpose whatever, for the term of five years from and after the date of sale: And further—

In a separate clause—

And further, That the bounty lands granted, or hereafter to be granted, for military services during the late war, shall, while they continue to be held by the patentees, or their heirs, remain exempt, as aforesaid, from all taxes, for the term of three years from and after the date of the patents respectively; and that all the lands belonging to the citizens of the United States, residing without the said State, shall never be taxed higher than lands belonging to persons residing therein.

There is one instance, and this is not the only one; there are plenty of them.

Mr. ALLISON. I have been unable to find but that one. I have not looked carefully.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I can supply my honorable friend with many.

Mr. ALLISON. I have not looked at all the statutes; but I find that the exemption in Iowa applies to the holders of military bounty land warrants, not under the war of 1812, but under all wars.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly, under the Revolution as well; but the lands sold could be taxed immediately.

Mr. ALLISON. But it provided that the lands should be exempt in the hands of the patentees or their heirs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. And after the act of admission these military bounty land warrants were made assignable, so that they could be transferred to bearer.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. And under that second act men could enter thousands and tens of thousands of acres under these military bounty land warrants, and still under that compact they were exempt from taxation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is mistaken as to the last part of it, because they were only secured in Iowa in the hands of the soldier or his heirs.

Mr. ALLISON. But the statute said the patentees, and the patentees were the assignees of the soldiers or their heirs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But my honorable friend must not forget that every court of the United States and of every State to which the question has been presented has held that the time for the running of this exemption begins the moment the man becomes entitled, takes his first step to get his land; that it is not the date of the patent from which the three years began to run but the date of his becoming entitled by taking the initial steps to obtain the land so that he has got an equity in it.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well, then, the soldier taking the necessary steps by getting his land warrant, and entering it—I have forgotten what the detail is, and I should not encumber what I say with it if I remembered—has put the land in the category where the three years begin to run, and then if after three years or six years or ten years somebody buys up one hundred thousand acres with these warrants and can locate them all together he does not escape taxation a single moment. But I do not care whether he does or not; I am on the question of what is the true import and meaning of the contract between the United States and these States, for it is on that that this committee has reported, as a matter of law and justice under the law, that the people of the United States are to be taxed and their Treasury depleted to fill up the treasuries of these respective States. Now, I will yield.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Senator from Vermont is undoubtedly fatigued, and I move that the Senate adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Pending that motion the Chair will lay before the Senate for reference some bills from the House of Representatives.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 4411) to establish an additional land district in the State of Kansas was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands; and

The bill (H. R. No. 4412) to regulate practice and suits brought to recover damages for infringement of patents was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will withdraw that for a motion to go into executive session.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I think the motion ought to be adhered to.

The motion was agreed to; and (at three o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 10, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The SPEAKER. The Journal of yesterday will now be read.

Mr. HAWK. I ask consent that the Clerk omit, in the reading of the Journal, that portion of it which embraces the list of bills and joint resolutions introduced yesterday during the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. That can hardly be done.

Mr. HAWK. It can be done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. It might lead to a great deal of confusion if the Journal was not read.

Mr. HAWK. I think that has been done heretofore.

The SPEAKER. It has been done very late in the session.

Mr. HAWK. It has been suggested that it would save time this morning to omit the reading of that portion of the Journal, as it is not regarded of much importance by members.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is preferable to have the Journal read in full.

Mr. HAWK. Very well; I have no particular desire about it myself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is very well aware of the object of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HAWK,] which he understands is merely to save time.

Mr. HAWK. That is all.

The Journal of yesterday was then read and approved.

RETURN OF BILL TO SENATE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the Senate:

IN SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 9, 1880.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. No. 56) for the relief of Edward Braden and J. W. Angus.

The SPEAKER. It has been the uniform practice of the House to comply with such requests; and if there be no objection the Chair will direct the Clerk to return the bill as requested by the Senate.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. WARD, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 93) for printing the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. DIBRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom had been referred the request for leave to withdraw from the files of the House the compilation of data relating to the battle of Gettysburgh, Pennsylvania, reported that the committee had decided to grant the request.

The SPEAKER. There is no necessity for the committee to report their action to the House. A notification to the Clerk of the House of the action of the committee would seem to be all that is required.

J. H. DILLARD.

Mr. DIBRELL, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2806) for the relief of J. H. Dillard; which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

J. SCOTT PAYNE.

Mr. DIBRELL also, from the same committee, by unanimous consent, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 312, for the relief of J. Scott Payne, Fifth United States Cavalry, a bill (H. R. No. 4413) with the same title; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ENFORCEMENT OF INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS IN GEORGIA.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, from the Committee of Ways and Means, to which had been referred a resolution submitted by Mr. SPEER, calling for executive information, reported the same back with a substitute therefor.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to lay before this House all evidence on file in the Internal Revenue Office, and all papers, reports, letters, and other documentary evidence from official sources going to show the true state of affairs touching the enforcement of the internal-revenue laws in Northeast Georgia, and tending to explain the necessity for raiding expeditions of armed men at the instance of the internal-revenue bureau, and which may give information to the House of Representatives on this subject.

Mr. CONGER. I would like to ask when this matter was considered by the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. It was informally considered by members of that committee, and I believe the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] was one of them.

Mr. CONGER. My attention has never been called to this resolution.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The names of the members of the committee authorizing me to make the report appear upon the report.

Mr. CONGER. That may be. I do not remember about this resolution. I object very much to the language of the resolution. The statement that officers of this Government who act under the sanction of law in the enforcement of the laws are engaged in "raiding expeditions" is another instance of the misuse of language.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I cannot hear what the gentleman says.

Mr. CONGER. My point of objection was to the wording of the resolution.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Let the gentleman suggest any change.

Mr. CONGER. My objection is to the wording of the resolution, which declares that officers of the Government discharging their duty under the law are engaged in "raiding expeditions."

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. That is the alleged action of the officers. The resolution simply calls upon the Bureau of Internal Revenue to report such documents as may be upon file in reference to this matter.

Mr. CONGER. In reference to "raiding expeditions" by officers of the Government?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. That is a mere matter of phraseology. The gentleman may take exception to it if he thinks proper. These expeditions are generally known as "raiding expeditions," and there can certainly be no objection to the use of that language.

Mr. CONGER. I move to strike out the word "raiding."

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman will allow me I think I can offer a somewhat broader amendment which will meet his approval. The language of the resolution at present is "tending to explain the necessity for raiding expeditions of armed men." I move to strike out the word "raiding expeditions" and insert "the employment."

Mr. CARLISLE. I think that is better.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SPEER] I understand desires to print some remarks on this subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to allowing the gentleman from Georgia to print remarks?

Mr. GARFIELD. I have no objection to that request; but if anything should be published in criticism of officers of the Government, there ought to be opportunity to reply to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] seems to object unless he has assurance that the remarks will contain no criticism on officers of the Government.

Mr. GARFIELD. No, I do not make that objection; but I say that if any remarks published should appear to call for reply, that right ought to be reserved.

The SPEAKER. It is usual where unanimous consent is given for the publication of remarks which are not delivered that they shall not be in any relation personal.

Mr. GARFIELD. I simply say that if any member should want to reply there ought to be opportunity.

Mr. SPEER. Of course there will be no objection to that.

[The remarks of Mr. SPEER will appear in the Appendix.]

The amendment of Mr. GARFIELD, to strike out "raiding expeditions" and insert "the employment," was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. ELECTA L. BALDWIN.

Mr. OVERTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4414) granting a pension to Mrs. Electa L. Baldwin, widow of Charles L. Baldwin, late of the Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

M. M. HERR.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution (H. R. No. 157) for the relief of M. M. Herr, which has been returned from the Senate with amendments, be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee of Accounts.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was referred accordingly, not to come back upon a motion to reconsider.

FRAUDULENT CLAIMS.

Mr. CARLISLE. I rise to make a privileged report. The Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred a resolution calling for information in regard to expenditures under laws relating to permanent annual appropriations, have directed me to report the same back and to move that the committee be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas the Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report for the year 1877, referring to the payment of claims against the Government, said: "Most of these claims are paid out of what are classed as permanent annual appropriations contained in section 3689, Revised Statutes, which do not come under the annual supervison of Congress. These appropriations, though declared to be annual, have been used for the payment of claims, however old, including nearly every case of fraudulent or exaggerated claims paid by this Department:" Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to this House what fraudulent claims have been paid by the Treasury Department from the appropriations authorized by section 3689, Revised Statutes, and what fraudulent claims, if any, have been paid from other appropriations since June 22, 1874, up to and including the date of his said annual report; the amount and date of each fraudulent claim paid during the time above mentioned, specifying the appropriation from which paid, the nature of each claim, to whom paid, and what recommendations have been made or action taken or ordered by the Treasury Department to recover any money thus paid, with the date of such recommendations, action, or orders, and a statement of the result, if any, of such recommendations, actions, or orders in each case; and also to furnish this House with the evidence upon which said statement of fraud is predicated.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I do not know the paternity of this resolution, but it seems to me to call for valuable information. Why should we not adopt it now, instead of sending it to another committee?

The SPEAKER. The Committee of Ways and Means recommends that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I do not know who introduced the resolution; but I suggest that it be adopted now.

The SPEAKER. It will come back at any rate in one week, under the rule.

Mr. CARLISLE. I suggest to the gentleman that the resolution in its present form is somewhat defective, and evidently requires amendment. If adopted at all, it should not be adopted in its present form. I think it ought to go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I withdraw my suggestion.

The motion of Mr. CARLISLE was agreed to; and the resolution was accordingly referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

RELIEF OF COLORED EMIGRANTS.

Mr. CONGER. I am directed to report from the Committee of Ways and Means, for present consideration, the bill (H. R. No. 3288) for the relief of colored emigrants.

Mr. CLYMER. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all clothing and other articles, being charitable contributions or the avails of charitable contributions, imported in good faith for the relief or aid of colored persons who may have emigrated from their homes to other States, and not for sale, and all such articles imported and now in bond, shall be admitted free of duty under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That such articles shall be delivered only to State or municipal corporations, or to some society or institution established for charitable purposes: And provided further, That the importers or consignees of such articles shall give such security as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe for the payment of lawful duties on such articles, should any of them be sold or used contrary to the provisions and intent of this act. This act shall take effect from its passage.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Add to the bill the following: "and remaining in force until February 1, 1881."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CUSTOMS DISTRICTS OF YORKTOWN AND RICHMOND.

Mr. BEALE. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to report back a bill (H. R. No. 4214) to amend and reenact sections 2552 and 2553 of the Revised Statutes, and to ask by unanimous consent that it be now considered and passed.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That paragraph 4 of section 2552 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so that it shall read: "The district of Yorktown: To comprise all the waters and shores from the point forming the south shore of the mouth of the Rappahannock River, and from the mouth of York River to Cappahoosic, in which Yorktown shall be the port of entry, and East River and Cumberland ports of delivery."

SEC. 2. And that paragraph 7 of section 2552 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so that it shall read: "The district of Richmond: To comprise all the waters and shores of the James River, from its junction with the Appomattox River to the highest tide waters of the James River, and all the waters and shores of the York River from Cappahoosic to its head, and the waters and shores of the Pamunkey and Mattaponi Rivers, to the highest tide waters in said rivers, in which the port of entry shall extend from Richmond and Manchester to Bermuda Hundreds, and to West Point, at the head of York River."

SEC. 3. And that paragraph 7 of section 2553 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so that it shall read: "In the district of Richmond, a collector and a surveyor, who shall reside at Richmond; a surveyor, who shall reside at Bermuda Hundreds; and a deputy collector, who shall reside at West Point."

Mr. BEALE. I ask for the reading of the report which accompanies the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order of business is in the nature of objection.

Mr. BEALE. Let me get this bill through first.

Mr. PAGE. The bill is subject to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the report is not received.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

On motion of Mr. VAN VOORHIS, by unanimous consent, admission to the privileges of the floor for the remainder of this week was granted to Professor Theodore W. Dwight, late one of the judges of the New York commission of appeals.

The SPEAKER. At the request of Mr. KEIFER, the Chair asks unanimous consent for admission to the floor of the House for this day of Ex-Governor William Dennison, of Ohio, and ex-Postmaster-General of the United States.

The Chair is further requested to ask unanimous consent for admission to the floor of the House of William Bross, ex-lieutenant-governor of Illinois.

The Chair hears no objection to these several requests, and it is ordered accordingly.

NAVAL OBSERVATORY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as a member of the commission to locate and purchase a site for a naval observatory authorized by act approved February 4, 1880, Mr. MORSE, of Massachusetts.

ESTABLISHMENT OF TITLES IN HOT SPRINGS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the House resumes the consideration of the unfinished business coming over from yesterday, a bill (H. R. No. 4244) for the establishment of titles in Hot Springs, and for other purposes.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a point of order. I should like to have the question considered whether business which comes before the House by suspension of the rules for consideration, and under a motion which can only be made upon Monday, can come over to the next day as unfinished business, and whether, on the contrary, it does not go over until the same order of business is reached, which is upon Monday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would have no status next Monday. The suspension of the rule was merely to bring the bill before the House for consideration, and thus its status in the House was determined. The Clerk will read Rule 56.

Mr. CONGER. The previous question was not seconded nor the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] holds the floor, having given notice that at the end of one hour he would demand the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. As the unfinished business of Friday goes over to the following Friday, and as the unfinished business of Monday goes over to the following Monday, it seems to me that this is the unfinished business of Monday, and not unfinished business which comes over from yesterday to this morning.

The SPEAKER. The action of the House yesterday, by reason of a suspension of the rules, brought this bill before the House for consideration, and it was being considered under the operation of the majority rule. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE 56. The consideration of the unfinished business in which the House may be engaged at an adjournment shall be resumed as soon as the Journal of the next day is read, and at the same time each day thereafter until disposed of; and if, from any cause, other business shall intervene, it shall be resumed as soon as such other business is disposed of. And the consideration of all other unfinished business shall be resumed whenever the class of business to which it belongs shall be in order under the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is a fair interpretation of that rule that it would bring over from yesterday's session what the House, under a suspension of the rules, determined then to consider.

Mr. CONGER. I raise the question——

The SPEAKER. The Chair is quite willing to hear the gentleman from Michigan. He has no tenacity of opinion on this point. To take it over until next Monday would seem to the Chair to bring it in conflict with another rule of the House, which states after the call of States and Territories for bills and joint resolutions for Monday shall have been concluded, then motions to suspend the rules will be in order.

Mr. CONGER. I have no particular opinion about it.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair desires to hear the gentleman.

Mr. CONGER. I have no particular opinion about it; but I raise the question in order that we may have a ruling upon it. I do not know there ever has been a ruling upon the particular point which I now raise for the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair himself thinks it is an unusual question. He has no recollection of a similar question having been raised during his occupancy of the chair.

Mr. CONGER. There have been, I think, some cases in point—the Kelley resolution and others.

The SPEAKER. The Kelley resolution went over because the motion for the suspension of the rules was not finally determined. The House at the adjournment was acting upon the motion to suspend the rules. The subject went over to the following Monday, because the House had not fully acted upon the motion to suspend. The case to which the gentleman alludes, therefore, was quite different from the one now before the House.

Mr. CONGER. I thought the analogy would hold good in reference to the business of Monday as it does with the business of Friday or any other day set apart especially for the consideration of a particular business, and that the business of Monday, when unfinished at the hour of adjournment, would go over to the following Monday, as the unfinished business of Friday goes over to the following Friday, and the unfinished business of the District of Columbia day goes over to the next day set apart under the rules for the consideration of that business. In my judgment, the analogy is precisely the same in this case that it is in those other cases.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan will recollect that this bill is taken entirely out of the category of motions requiring a two-thirds vote, and that now the bill is before the House in such condition that only a majority vote is required for action in reference to it.

Mr. WHITE. It was the belief of members upon this side of the House who desired time to investigate this subject that it did not come up this morning as unfinished business, but went over to next Monday under the operation of the rule which has just been read for the information of the House. It is a measure sui generis, which has been brought before the House in a peculiar way. It seems to me it is like the case of a day assigned for the consideration of the report of a committee, and if the day is passed without action, it is ended, or it is to be taken up when the same class of business shall again be reached. Yesterday, before the adjournment, by reason of a suspension of the rules, the gentleman from Arkansas having made a motion which prevailed, this bill came before the House for consideration under that motion to suspend the rules, and of course this bill belongs to a peculiar class of business which under the rule should go over to the next day when the same class of business is in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this business would have no status upon next Monday against a motion to suspend the rules by a two-thirds vote, which would vacate all the rules of the House, even the rule which gives it the position it now occupies.

Mr. WHITE. I am a young member, and I should like to have some precedent cited for this action.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let me suggest to the Chair that when the House is acting under a suspension of the rules, another suspension of the rules is not in order, and if the House had suspended the rules in reference to this question, it was estopped from any further motion to suspend the rules until this subject was disposed of.

The SPEAKER. It was under a suspension of the rules for a limited purpose.

Mr. GARFIELD. No; not limited.

The SPEAKER. It is now being debated, and there is no rule which authorizes debate on motions for suspension of the rules except for consideration.

Mr. GARFIELD. But there was no limitation in the motion suspending the rules.

I wish to say furthermore to the House, Mr. Speaker, that I do not antagonize this bill, but I wish to say I think it is a matter of justice all round we should have a little time more than we have had since last evening to look into a few facts in regard to this matter. I learned this morning that the Interior Department states that seventy-five thousand dollars' worth, or thereabout, of certificates have been issued by this commission, which have given vested rights to the individuals holding them.

Mr. DUNN. I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. GARFIELD. They are not referred to in the bill at all. I understand also that the Government will have expended not only the cost of the commission, but this seventy-five thousand dollars' worth of certificates, and whatever other expenses have been incurred, and if the bill as it is now before the House should pass, we will get back not more than $20,000. So there is an actual outlay and loss to the Government. These are suggestions——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will remind the gentleman that the question pending before the House is on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. GARFIELD. On every account we ought to have time; and if the Speaker can find, according to what seems to me to be a fair construction, that this is a proceeding still under a suspension, it will take its place as an unexecuted order the first thing when we meet on Monday next, and no suspension of the rules can be had until that is completed. That will give us time and will wrong nobody; and I hope even if the Speaker does not feel at liberty to rule in that way, which I hope he will, the matter will be laid over until we have time to consider the provisions of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say in reply that the suspension of the rules by a two-thirds vote, to bring this bill before the House for consideration, vacated every rule which interfered with its consideration in the House, and therefore established its status in the House. It now comes under the operation of Rule 56 as unfinished business. On next Monday, if it came over under a rule of the House as unfinished business, it would not have any status as against a motion to suspend the rules, including the rule which gave it a status under a majority vote as unfinished business.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to submit this inquiry to the Chair: Could I have made a motion to suspend the rules right after this order was made yesterday? Suppose that an hour or half an hour after the House had suspended the rules for the purpose of considering this bill I had moved to suspend the rules for some other purpose, would that motion have been entertained?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman would not have been recognized for that, because until in some way this bill was disposed of it was before the House under a suspension of the rules to consider. And the Chair stated yesterday if the motion for the previous question was voted down then a motion to commit would be in order, but the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. DUNN,] first had the right to test the sense of the House as to the passage of the bill by moving the previous question.

Mr. GARFIELD. I admit if the gentleman from Arkansas had got the previous question ordered yesterday on the bill it would have come up this morning as unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. The right to demand the previous question is under another rule.

Mr. GARFIELD. The previous question having been ordered would have carried it straight on under another rule, but as the previous question was not ordered and as the bill still stands as an unexecuted order of Monday it seems to me it must remain in Monday until it is executed.

Mr. FRYE. Does not the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] make this error? The motion to suspend the rules on yesterday was to suspend them for only one purpose and that was to bring a certain bill before the House for consideration. Now, when two-thirds voted for it, that motion had completed itself and the bill was before the House for consideration; it makes no difference how it got there, being before the House for consideration.

Mr. GARFIELD. For consideration in the Monday House, not in the Tuesday House.

Mr. WHITE. Would it not be in order to move to make this a special order for consideration on a future day?

The SPEAKER. It would not until the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] has the opportunity to test the sense of the House on ordering the previous question.

Mr. WHITE. Would it not be in order to move to refer it to the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. It would not. The gentleman can move to lay it on the table. That motion and the motion to adjourn are the only motions which take precedence of the previous question.

Mr. REED. If the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas to suspend the rules yesterday has been exhausted, would it not be in order to move that the bill be considered in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. It would not. The rule which would require the consideration of such bills in Committee of the Whole was suspended. Except for such suspension it would go instantly to the Committee of the Whole if the point of order was made against it.

Mr. REED. Do I understand the suspension of all the rules in regard to this bill continues to-day?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not so state. On the contrary, he states in effect otherwise?

Mr. REED. If it does not, why can I not under the rule move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The House has considered the bill, and it would at any rate be too late to make the point of order on it if allowable under the rules.

Mr. REED. Is it not in order to move that the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider this bill?

The SPEAKER. The bill is not in Committee of the Whole, and if the House so resolved it would not find the bill in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WHITE. What we want is to get it there.

Mr. FRYE. Would it not be in order to move to recommit this bill to the Committee on Public Lands?

The SPEAKER. Not while the gentleman from Arkansas is on the floor demanding the previous question.

Mr. FRYE. I did not understand he was.

Mr. CONGER. I understand it would be in order to raise the question of priority of business. I raise that question that we may proceed with the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman raises the question of consideration.

Mr. CONGER. I raise the question of consideration, and ask that the morning hour may now commence.

The SPEAKER. That of course is the object of the gentleman, but he cannot embrace it in his question of consideration. The gentleman raises the question of consideration, and the effect of it will be, if successful, to hold this bill as unfinished business every time when there is nothing of higher importance coming before the House.

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir; I want the morning hour now.

Mr. DUNN. Does the Chair rule upon the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair entertains the question of consideration raised by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

Mr. DUNN. What is that question?

The SPEAKER. It is whether the House will now consider this bill. It is a question which the gentleman has a right to raise under Rule 41, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

When any motion or proposition is made, the question "Will the House now consider it?" shall not be put unless it is demanded by some member or is deemed necessary by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Should the gentleman from Michigan be successful in his proceeding, that would not displace this bill; it would merely keep it in position, to come up in its order at other times.

Mr. CONGER. It will give us further time for considering the provisions of the bill, which many of us desire.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will there be time for considering this bill when it shall come up again? When will it come up again?

The SPEAKER. Immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow; perhaps it may come up again to-day.

Mr. CONGER. Perhaps when it again comes up we may be willing to consider it.

Mr. BUCKNER. The House suspended the rules for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of this bill. As I understand the ruling of the Chair, the bill comes over from yesterday as unfinished business, and the only question now is, whether the House will proceed with its consideration at this time.

The SPEAKER. The majority of the House can now determine whether they will proceed to consider this bill, coming over from yesterday as unfinished business. The question is, in the language of the rule, "Will the House now consider it;" that is, the bill now pending.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 94, noes 81.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. WHITE called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, there being 31 in the affirmative, more than one-fifth of a quorum; and Mr. DUNN and Mr. WHITE were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 105, noes 81.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. CONGER said: I desire the yeas and nays on this question. I make the demand for the yeas and nays only that we may have time to further examine this bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being 45 in the affirmative, more than one-fifth of the last vote.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 125, nays 117, not voting 50; as follows:

So the House decided to proceed with the consideration of the bill.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. BLAND. I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. CLAFLIN.

Mr. HERBERT. My colleague, Mr. LEWIS, is paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. HARRIS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. The gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. ELAM, who is detained from the House by sickness, is paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. DICK.

Mr. NORCROSS. I am paired with the gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. MARTIN.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

EXTRA FORCE IN HOUSE FOLDING-ROOM.

Mr. MCLANE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee of Accounts:

Resolved, That the superintendent of the folding-room of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, authorized to employ such additional force as may be deemed necessary by the Committee of Accounts, to fold speeches and other public documents that are now accumulating or may hereafter accumulate in the folding-room; and that said additional force shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House the same amount as the laborers are now paid in the folding-room.

ESTABLISHMENT OF TITLES IN HOT SPRINGS.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4244) for the establishment of titles in Hot Springs, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Yesterday fifteen minutes were occupied on each side in the discussion of this bill. In pursuance of the arrangement then made the same time will to-day be allowed to each of the respective sides.

Mr. DUNN. I yield five minutes to my colleague on the Committee on Public Lands, the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CONVERSE.]

Mr. CONVERSE. Mr. Speaker, I had the honor to introduce this bill, and if I can get the attention of the House for five minutes I will endeavor to explain its provisions. It contains but two principal propositions. The first is to authorize, not strictly an appeal, but a review in certain cases by the district court at Little Rock of the action of the commissioners in making their award of the right to enter lands at Hot Springs. The other proposition is to remit the assessments which have been made.

This bill has received the careful and earnest attention of the Committee on Public Lands. They occupied seven separate meetings with the bill, reading and discussing it sentence by sentence. Upon this thorough examination the bill has received the unanimous indorsement and recommendation of the committee. I mention these facts to show the care with which the bill has been prepared and examined.

The first proposition in the bill, which is called the right of appeal, provides simply for a review of the action of the board of commissioners at Hot Springs in cases of fraud, gross error, or mistake. Those are the only grounds upon which any question can be taken to the court from the decision of the commissioners.

Gentlemen are aware that under a former law a board of three men was appointed to assess the value of the lots at Hot Springs, and also to award the lands to the persons occupying them. In this bill we propose to allow the decision of the commissioners to be reviewed by a court of equity for fraud, gross error, or mistake in making their awards.

The object of thus limiting the right of review is to prevent litigation, except in cases where fraud, gross error, or mistake have intervened. It is said that there have been some mistakes; for instance that certain lands have been awarded to persons who did not petition for them; that, in other cases, persons who were entitled to lands, no one else claiming them, have been deprived of them—evidently by mistake. In some cases parties interested have charged fraud. There ought to be some means of correcting such errors, and that is the object of this provision of the bill.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] says that there ought to be a jury trial. Why, sir, who ever heard of a jury trial in a court of equity, except when the chancellor may refer a question of fact to a jury in order to have his own conscience enlightened? Juries are unknown in courts of equity, with that exception. The bill is carefully guarded. It will not allow parties to go into court unless they can in the first instance make a prima facie case, as they would upon application for an injunction, showing affirmatively, by affidavits, that there has been either fraud, gross error, or mistake in the award which has been made. Can there be any objection to this wholesome provision of the bill? It is carefully guarded, and there probably will not be more than two or three dozen cases that will go before the court under this provision.

As a gentleman near me suggests, [Mr. TUCKER,] this proceeding will be conducted as all equity proceedings are; and if the chancellor desires to submit any question of fact to a jury, he will have power under this bill to do so, as he would in ordinary equity practice.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Several MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. DUNN. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. CONVERSE. As to the other proposition, the question of remitting the assessment, the committee conceived that to be right for this reason: More than thirty years ago this very land was located by settlers for settlement, who paid the Government for it—not for all of it, but a portion. Certificates of entry were made, and upon those certificates of entry these lands were parceled out and subdivided into small lots and sold to settlers and residents. For more than thirty years the lands have been bought and sold, and passed by inheritance from hand to hand. The original proprietors now hold but little of the lands. They have been built upon, and taxes paid upon them by innocent holders until two years ago, when it was ascertained that the lands belonged to the Government by reason of some act of reservation away back in 1832. These citizens are now called upon to pay a second time for the lands which they thought they owned, which had been bought and improved by them in good faith. Under the circumstances the committee concluded it was unconscionable on the part of the Government to ask an assessment to be made, and that these citizens, in paying for their lands a second time, should be compelled to pay for them their full present value.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CONVERSE. Certainly.

Mr. SPRINGER. I see in this list of special assessments that some are assessed as high as $1,700——

Mr. CONVERSE. Please do not take up much of my time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I see that some in the list of assessments are rated as high as $1,700 while others are as low as forty and sixty dollars. Under this bill the parties would be allowed to pay at the rate of $10 an acre all the way through.

Mr. CONVERSE. I will come to that directly. Certainly that is so; and why should it not be so?

Mr. SPRINGER. Would that be an equal assessment, if some having a lot worth $1,700 should pay $10, while others assessed only forty or sixty dollars should also be required to pay $10 for their lots?

Mr. CONVERSE. Certainly; why not? They have already paid for that land.

Mr. SPRINGER. To whom have they paid?

Mr. CONVERSE. It is their own land. They paid to the men they bought of. Why does not my friend require assessments to be made on mines owned by the Government worth millions. Mining lands are sold for $5 an acre? Has the Government ever dealt with anybody in that way—by such a hard rule?

Mr. SPRINGER. They did not buy this land of the Government.

Mr. CONVERSE. They bought a part of it from the Government more than thirty years ago, and they built upon it and made improvements, built up a town there, and they are asked now to buy them over again.

And in addition to that, I desire to say this increased value is made partly from the fact they have built a city there.

Mr. BLOUNT rose.

Mr. CONVERSE. Let me go on in my own way, and I will shorten the time. I think I can meet all the objections of gentlemen.

In the first place, Mr. Speaker, it has always been the policy of the Government in reference to town sites to allow actual settlers to make entries at a merely nominal price, in no case requiring more than $10 an acre. As I said before, even in your mines, in which have been discovered millions of treasure, the Government only requires $5 an acre on entry as payment.

Mr. WARNER. Will my colleague allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. CONVERSE. I cannot yield just now. In more than two hundred towns which have been built upon the public domain in no instance has the Government asked over $10 an acre, and this bill provides only for the payment of $10 for every acre and fraction of an acre.

It is said there are large assessments made by the commission as damages to certain parties which have accrued in connection with improvements in that city; that the expenses of the commission are large, and that the Government ought not to be compelled to pay them; that the city ought to pay them. Why so? Let us look at it.

In the first place, the Government has reserved already nine hundred acres of that land, and this reservation was part of the work of that commission. In the second place, they laid out their streets themselves——

Mr. SPRINGER rose.

Mr. CONVERSE. Let me go on. In the third place, this commission has selected six hundred acres and divided them into town lots to be sold at public auction and which, it is believed, will bring at least $100,000 into the Treasury of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CONVERSE. I hope I may be allowed to proceed.

Mr. ROBESON. I move, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman be permitted to complete his statement.

Mr. TUCKER. By unanimous consent, let that be done, not to be taken out of the hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to that arrangement, and the gentleman from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. CONVERSE. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the cost of these assessments and of the commission itself were too expensive, that is not the fault of the settlers and property-owners of that city. This Government undertakes to administer justice. It does not charge all the expenses against those in whose behalf it is administered. You do not charge to litigants the salaries of your judges and the cost of your courts, and neither ought you in reference to the expenses of this commission. It was judicial in part, sent there by the Government to adjust these difficulties, and it is only right the Government should pay the entire expense, whatever it may be. And as to the other assessments which have been made, the Government has already received from the settlers rents on the houses they themselves built, more than $38,000, and it is to-day in your Treasury. After the lands were adjudged to belong to the Government you sent your commissioner there, and he rented to these settlers their own houses, and the money received as rent from them is to-day in the Treasury—more than $38,000—and that will more than pay their proportion of these expenses.

As my friend near me suggests, the Government also leases the Arlington Hotel there for $1,000 a year. It is worth $5,000 or more.

In addition to that, under the law the healing waters of those springs are now being sold, and bring revenue day by day and week by week into the Treasury of the United States. And for all coming time, under this bill and preceding legislation they are to be sold and will be a source of revenue to the United States. That ought to pay of itself the expense of this commission, and these assessments sought to be charged upon those poor settlers, many being in infirm health, having located there and built their little houses on account of the healing waters, and who have once paid for their land and are now required to pay for it a second time.

Mr. WARNER. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. CONVERSE. I will, for a question.

Mr. WARNER. I should like to know upon what principle of equity the Committee on the Public Lands recommend these lands shall be paid for at any price again, if it be true, as stated, that they have been once already paid for?

Mr. CONVERSE. They ought not to be paid for a second time, but in the hurry to settle this thing, and get rid of litigation, and to settle title, the settlers prefer to pay $10 an acre and end the whole business. That is in accordance with the general law governing town sites on the public domain.

Mr. Speaker, none except those who have had experience know the blighting curse which an unsettlement of land titles creates, whether it be in city, town, or country; and those people would rather pay $30,000 than be delayed in the settlement of the titles to their real estate.

Mr. HAYES. Let me ask the gentleman just this one question: Does it appear anywhere in the land records that any of these parties ever did pay the Government for these lands?

Mr. CONVERSE. It does not appear that these parties paid for them.

Mr. HAYES. But does it appear that any other parties from whom they acquired their rights paid the Government for these lands?

Mr. CONVERSE. Yes; the record shows that Gaines and others made entries and paid the Government for their lands, and upon the certificates issued to them by the Government they sold the lands to other parties year after year for nearly forty years.

Mr. ATHERTON. How long ago was that?

Mr. CONVERSE. Over thirty years.

Mr. HAYES. Does this cover the whole nine hundred acres?

Mr. CONVERSE. Not all; nine hundred are reserved. The Government now has it; and six hundred more acres have been divided into lots by the commission. It is proposed to sell them out at auction, which will bring in at least $100,000.

Mr. HAYES. The Government has reserved nine hundred acres. Is that in the market?

Mr. CONVERSE. It is not in the market; it has been permanently reserved——

Mr. HAYES. You say these people purchased it originally?

Mr. CONVERSE. By reason of a mistake in the administration of public affairs these people assuredly ought not to be set out in the cold and their property taken away from them after they have settled there, built their churches and school-houses, established their homes, reared their families——

Mr. HAYES. If that is the fault of the Government it is all right; but if not, and it is the fault of the individual, it is not all right.

Mr. BRIGHT. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. CONVERSE. For a question.

Mr. BRIGHT. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the Supreme Court of the United States has decided there was no just and valid claim against the United States. Am I correct in that?

Mr. CONVERSE. That is correct in regard to the legal title.

Mr. BRIGHT. I understand there were five different claims to these different lands, some under old Spanish grants and some, as has been said, under grants from the United States on entry and settlement. Now, I would like to ask my honorable friend from Ohio under what law of the United States does any individual upon the Hot Springs reservation claim title?

Mr. CONVERSE. I will endeavor to answer my friend. No such claim is made by anybody; but the law of the last Congress provided these settlers should have their homes, and it provided a commission to set apart their homes to them. They did it not as a matter of strict law, because the Supreme Court found this very land had been reserved as far back as 1832; but the Government dealt with these people in that regard as it has dealt with all others—with generosity, with magnanimity——

Mr. BRIGHT. I wish simply to get at the facts.

Mr. CONVERSE. The Government is willing to give them titles to their homes.

Mr. BRIGHT. I merely wish to get at the facts, because as a member of the Committee on Private Land Claims during one session of Congress I had occasion to look into this matter.

I understand there was no law under which any claimant could set up title to these lands. I understand, furthermore, that these titles were submitted to the Interior Department for investigation and to the Attorney-General of the United States for investigation, and that all these titles had been decided against these different claimants.

Mr. CONVERSE. I will state to my friend from Tennessee, as I did before, that no settler has any legal title or has had any. The title was in the Government all the time. But the settlers thought they had the title; and the Government, with that generosity, that magnanimity which has always characterized it, was willing to give them the lands for merely nominal sums. That is the reason they are here.

Mr. BRIGHT. One more question. I will ask my honorable friend if these purchases were not made from individuals who pretended that they had title from the United States, and if they did not receive the money and not the United States?

Mr. CONVERSE. Certainly. I so stated. That is all so, but that does not change the question.

Mr. BRIGHT. Let me go a step further. Let me ask if the act of March 3, 1877, did not recognize the United States as the sole proprietor, and did it not direct that the possession of that property should be taken by the commissioners of the United States; that it should be laid out into lots, and that those occupants of those lots who had made improvements should have an appraisement as to the value of the improvements and as to the privilege of purchase. Is not that the whole of it, and has not the question been submitted through the commissioners to the United States by the parties themselves?

Mr. CONVERSE. Certainly, that is all so; and the commissioners have discharged their duty and have made these appraisements of the value of the land. But it would be unconscionable for the Government to take the value of the lands after these parties had built there, thinking they had a right. It is in accordance with the policy of the Government to deal with these parties as I have suggested; because, as I said to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] the Government, at $5 an acre, was selling to individuals mines that were worth millions of dollars. Who ever thought of appraising a mine according to the value of the metal that was in it and asking an individual to pay for it on that basis?

Mr. BRIGHT. Let me ask the gentleman another question, so that we may get at the facts of the case.

Mr. CONVERSE. If the gentleman will promise this is his last inquiry, I will yield for it.

Mr. BRIGHT. Very well, it shall be the last, unless something else is suggested with a view to getting at the truth of this matter. I understand that these individuals, under the act of March 3, 1877, have submitted their claims for the adjudication of that commission. They received that award. They were allowed twelve months to accept the provisions of that award. Now, after these individuals have accepted the award of the commission, I understand they come in here and seek the same privileges as they would have had if they had refused to accept the award.

Mr. CONVERSE. I will answer the gentleman. In the first place, the settlers have never accepted the award. That is the question that is now here before us. The award has been made by direction of the Government, and the assessment of the value has been made by reason of the action of the Government.

Mr. BRIGHT. Are they not barred under the act of March 3, 1877?

Mr. CONVERSE. No, sir. No man is barred when he calls upon the Congress of the United States or the Government of this Republic for that which is just or even that which is merciful. The door here is always open to the humblest citizen of the United States to obtain justice. Neither pleas in bar nor statutes of limitation avail here.

Mr. BRIGHT. Have these parties now the right to accept under the award unless there is an enabling act? Is this pretended to be an enabling act?

Mr. CONVERSE. Certainly they have the right; because the law passed a few days ago extends the time sixty days.

I have said all I desire to say and have occupied too much of the time of the House on this bill. But I desire to urge that this bill has been carefully prepared; it is a measure of justice; it is in accordance with the whole history and policy of our Government upon these questions, and I hope no gentleman will hesitate to vote for this bill.

Mr. REED. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether some portion of this amount of $74,600 for which certificates have been issued was not caused by enlargement of streets and improvements of property which it is now proposed shall be sold to the settlers at a low rate? And let me ask what his judgment is as to the equity of that as between the Government and the citizen?

Mr. CONVERSE. I will answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. REED. If the gentleman will answer the question as much in detail as he can I will be obliged.

Mr. CONVERSE. It is true equity would require that the settler should pay a portion of the expense. Our calculation is that the settlers should pay about one-third, and that the Government should pay the remaining two-thirds. But my friend must remember these settlers have already paid into the Treasury of the United States as rent over $38,000, and they now propose to pay $20,000 more, while their third of the expenses would be much less than that amount.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask the Chair what time remains for each side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] occupied five minutes. His time was extended five minutes more by the gentleman from Arkansas. At the end of the ten minutes the House gave unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio should proceed as long as he might desire. The result is that there are still five minutes remaining for the friends of the bill and fifteen minutes for the other side. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CHALMERS] to speak against the bill.

Mr. CONGER. Is the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CHALMERS] to occupy the entire fifteen minutes?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know how much time he will occupy.

Mr. HAWLEY. Has not the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] charge of the bill?

The SPEAKER. He has; but the Chair has stated to the gentleman from Arkansas that the gentleman from Mississippi desired the floor to speak against the bill. The gentleman from Arkansas has not said how much of the fifteen minutes to be occupied in opposition to the bill is to be used by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. CONGER. The usual custom is to allow the opponents of the bill to decide as to the division of time. Myself and others around me took measures to secure time for debate on this bill.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman has had the co-operation of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CHALMERS] to that end.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know that he has. The usual courtesy would require——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will give the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] all the time that he can.

Mr. CONGER. Is it not the practice for the Chair to recognize those who make motions to obtain time for debate?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] was recognized yesterday to speak and did speak.

Mr. DUNN. I had agreed to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.] As the Chair has recognized the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. CHALMERS,] I will yield first to him for five minutes, and then I will yield the next five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut.

The SPEAKER. And to whom else will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUNN. To any gentleman of the opposition who desires the floor. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WHITE.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will endeavor to act with strict impartiality.

Mr. CHALMERS. I do not understand this case as fully as I would like to do, and therefore I voted that we should have more time for its consideration.

I remember with great distinctness the controversy about the Hot Springs matter which was before the courts for many years. There were three claimants, Mr. Rector, General Gaines, and Mr. Hale, if I remember correctly; and if either one of those gentlemen had succeeded in his claim, every man who had bought land from the other two would have been turned out without any opportunity to obtain the lands which they now claim they should be allowed to take as a matter of equity.

In that litigation it was determined that neither of the three parties claiming were entitled to the land; that it belonged to the United States Government. As a matter of equity, as a matter of justice, the United States Government said to the holders of these lands: "Although this land has been reserved by the Government, although you have no right to enter upon it, although you are trespassers upon it, yet you may have an advantage over other people. A commission shall be established which shall assess the value of the land, and you will be permitted to purchase it at its assessed valuation, deducting therefrom," if I remember rightly, "the value of your improvements."

Now, when the assessment has been made; when this act of charity, if you choose to so term it, has been extended to these people, and the report of the commission comes before us for confirmation, these people say: "No; we do not want to take this land on the terms on which you offer it to us; we want now to be permitted to enter it at $10 per acre."

Now, by what right can these people make this claim? By no right, says the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, [Mr. CONVERSE,] there is no right in the matter. But he says this is a great Government, and it ought not to make money out of these citizens. Grant that to be so.

But on the other hand these very people would not to-day be willing to allow the public to come in and bid against them for this land which has been set apart for them. If the public were allowed a fair opportunity they would give far more than the valuation which has been placed upon these lands by the United States commissioners. These people, then, have an advantage over the rest of the people of the United States.

Gentlemen say further that $38,000 has been taken out of the pockets of these people by way of rent for one year. Have they not been receiving that same amount of benefit for years and years from the General Government? Have they not been taking these same rents, or making that amount of money, every year out of the people? If there is any one spot in the United States besides Niagara Falls where the inhabitants "live upon strangers," that spot is the Hot Springs in Arkansas. I have been there, and I know from experience.

These people have for years been deriving benefits equal to at least this amount of money, which they say was taken from them for one year only, from the people of the country. They have been living upon the people, upon the Government of the United States. But now, because the Government has stopped that for one year, they say that $38,000 has been taken out of their pockets by the Government of the United States.

At the termination of the suits which were instituted in the courts of the United States these people were very glad to have the first opportunity to purchase these lands, which Congress graciously offered them. They were very glad to have an advantage over outside purchasers, and to be allowed to buy the land at the assessed valuation.

They now come and tell us that that is all wrong; that they do not want the land at the assessed valuation; that they want it at $10 per acre. They want us to give them for $20,000 property that is worth over $400,000.

Gentlemen say there are some precedents for this course in other parts of the country. If there are such precedents, it is time they were being stopped. The committee in their report state that Leadville City stands in the same situation. If it does, then when Leadville City comes here, I shall vote against any such opportunity for the people there to obtain the property of the Government at less than its assessed value.

Mr. DUNN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, some circumstances connected with this measure seem not a little discouraging. The chief question in controversy, having been carried to the Supreme Court of the United States, was decided in favor of the claim of the Government to this land. Congress appointed an able and honest commission to go to the Hot Springs for the purpose, as I supposed, of settling this controversy substantially. The printed report of the commission is before us—a very brief and business-like document; too brief, perhaps. I wish now they had given us more explanatory matter. There is, I understand, a large body of information on this subject in the Interior Department. But while we were supposing that we could rely on this report of gentlemen whom we sent there—one of them a former Senator, another a former member of this House, well known to us—there comes in on a Monday, under a suspension of the rules, a bill which proposes to upset the work done by this commission. Upon inquiry I do not find that a single member of the commission has been here for consultation with regard to this bill which proposes to set aside the report of the commissioners; nor can I find that there has been a single letter or document from them since their report, excepting a private letter to a member of this House, which certainly does not harmonize with the purposes of this bill; nor can I find that there has been inquiry made of the Interior Department, where, as I have said, a great body of information upon this subject is to be found. No communication from that Department has been presented here, and I understand unofficially that no inquiry has been made of that Department, although there is much information there.

Mr. DUNN. I will correct the gentleman by telling him that I hold in my hand a letter from the Interior Department on this subject.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have asked whether there was any such communication, and this is the first time I have heard that there was.

Mr. DUNN. If the gentleman desires it, I will send it to the Clerk's desk to be read.

Mr. HAWLEY. That can be done when I am through; I have but a few minutes. I understood this morning that no inquiry had been made of that Department.

I find further that if the report of the commissioners were carried out, we should have expended upon the expenses of the commission $27,500, and should pay to certain persons as damages for condemned buildings $74,600, making the cost to the Government, in round numbers, $102,000. I also find by the report that the commissioners have assessed upon the claimants to this land a not very extravagant sum, considering the many hundreds of acres of valuable land given to them—the sum of $250,000. Deducting from this the expenses, $102,000, there would be left an apparent profit to the Government of about $150,000. But this statement does not cover all our expenses. There are certain lands given for churches and schools.

Now, under this bill, while the expenses remain as I have stated—$74,600 damages for condemned buildings and $27,500 as expenses of the commission, making a total of $102,000—all the receipts we are to get are about $20,000, about $10 an acre for these lands, many parts of them extremely valuable; so that our net loss resulting from our outlay in benefiting these people by laying out a handsome city will be $82,000. Of course I state these figures roughly.

Now, I do not ask that the Government shall make any great profit out of this transaction; but I do think, considering the fact that these people have been in reality trespassers in law, that we ought to get out of the thing whole. As the minister said, we ought at least to have our hat back after passing it around for the collection. I do not ask anything but that Uncle Sam's hat shall be returned.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CRAVENS. I would like to correct the gentleman.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman had better do it in his own time, as my time has expired.

Mr. CRAVENS. So far as condemned buildings are concerned, the Arlington Hotel and other buildings there are upon the permanent Hot Springs reservation, and amount in value to nearly one-half of the $74,000.

Mr. CONGER. That property rents for $1,000 a year I believe.

Mr. CRAVENS. That is the rent for an acre of ground. The buildings are not yet paid for. After they are paid for the Government may rent the buildings and grounds for more.

Mr. DUNN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I have but a brief word to say about this very important bill. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] has correctly stated that the passage of this bill destroys entirely the effect of the report of the commission appointed in pursuance of the act of 1877. The Supreme Court of the United States, after solemn argument, adjudicated that the title of the land in question, now constituting the city of Hot Springs, was in the United States Government. There had been from time to time intruders upon the Government property, who possibly had erected valuable improvements. They did so at their own risk. There is no evidence before the House to indicate that there was any act of the Government or any of its officers to estop it from reasserting title to the locus in quo. That is the status. For the purpose of doing equity, acting generously to these people, Congress in 1877 passed an act authorizing the appointment of three commissioners. To adjudicate what? The title? No, that is already settled in the Government, but to adjudicate the right to purchase from the Government and the terms upon which that purchase should be made.

That duty has been performed. I hold in my hand, and I have not had the privilege of reading it in detail and as patiently as I should like, the report of that commission. What is it? The Hot Springs, as I gain from current conversation, is a flat between two mountains along which runs the Hot Springs Creek, on the one side the Hot Springs Mountain, and on the other West Mountain. One locality is the reservation where the Hot Springs water, the Bethesda, so to speak, of that country, comes out. On the other side is the improved part of the town. Now, in laying out the town and adjusting the line so as to have proper frontage, this commission laid out a street, as I understand it, and in laying out that street they had to condemn certain buildings, making valuation of them before condemnation and issuing certificates on that condemnation to the claimants or reputed owners of those buildings. The buildings that were condemned were put up for sale at auction and bought in. In one instance, $750 was the valuation put upon one residence, and it was put up at sale and bought in by its former owner by virtue of a common law which obtains among early settlers, no one bidding against him—bought in by that former owner for $5, no one bidding against him. He purchased that residence for $5, although at the time he had in his possession a certificate for $750, as the valuation by the commission on condemnation of the same property.

Now, sir, that is precisely the situation with which we are confronted. There were of these certificates one hundred and seventy-two, aggregating, as the gentleman from Connecticut has stated, $74,496.

Some one has stated that is left to the credit of the Government to be paid from time to time. So it is. But there is an equity against the Government in favor of these claimants which will be exceedingly difficult hereafter to resist. I find this commissioner's report states as follows:

> The commission deem it advisable to recommend that an appropriation be made to pay off the certificates issued for condemned buildings, or, in case this cannot be done, that they be made receivable at the land office at Little Rock in payment for lots to be sold in the Hot Springs reservation. It is obvious that these certificates for condemned buildings are promises, on the part of the Government, to pay the settlers for the losses caused by a total or partial destruction of their buildings of a highly equitable nature.

We are confronted, Mr. Speaker, with this situation of affairs. There are outstanding certificates which we shall have to pay.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] desires to speak, but the time of the opposition to the bill, by agreement, having expired, the Chair thinks as unanimous consent was given to the friends of the bill to have additional time, the same privilege should be granted to those opposing it. About twelve minutes additional were allowed to the friends of the bill.

Mr. DUNN. I have no objection by unanimous consent to allowing the gentleman to go on for that time.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. REED. Before the gentleman from Minnesota proceeds, I should like to have a little light and perhaps it would be as well to have the letter from the Interior Department read. It can be done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. It will be read; but it seems to come out of the time of the friends of the bill.

Mr. REED. O, no! Mr. Speaker; let it be done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the letter will be read by unanimous consent.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 20, 1880.

SIR: I am in receipt of your communication of this date, asking for information relative to certain towns located upon the public lands, the valuation and price of the tracts sold, the population of said towns, &c., for the use of a sub-committee of the House Committee on Public Lands.

In reply, I have the honor to state that the files and records of this office do not furnish data in any case showing the valuation of the land sold for municipal purposes, but the price of the land sold to town sites has been, except in a few instances, at the minimum rate of $1.25 per acre. The valuation of the improvements is generally given in each case.

The lands comprising the town site of Salt Lake City, Utah, embrace 5,730.45 acres, sold at $1.25 per acre, under a special act of Congress, approved July 1, 1870, now section 2390, Revised Statutes.

No entry has been made of the town of Leadville, Colorado.

The city of Denver, made entry May 6, 1865, of nine hundred and sixty acres, at minimum rate under act of May 28, 1864, (13 Statutes, 94.)

The towns of Virginia City and Gold Hill, in Nevada, were entered under what is known as the town-lot act of July 1, 1864, as amended by act of March 3, 1865. (Sections 2382 to 2386, R. S.) The lots were sold at a minimum of $10 per lot; the larger lots being increased in price, as provided in section 2385, Revised Statutes. One hundred and fifty-five entries have been made of lots in Virginia City, and two hundred and forty-four entries in Gold Hill. Besides, entries under said acts have been made of lots in the towns of Petaluma, California, Le Grand and Baker City, in Oregon. The town of Sparta, in Oregon, has applied to make entry under sections 2382 to 2386, but no entries have been made.

Since January 1, 1873, about one hundred and fifty towns upon the public lands have been patented, and in the time allotted it will be impossible to give the population of each town at date of entry, as requested by your letter, or to give such a detailed statement as would be satisfactory and desirable.

Section 2389, Revised Statutes, provides that towns of two hundred inhabitants may enter three hundred and twenty acres; two hundred to one thousand inhabitants, six hundred and forty acres; one thousand and over, twelve hundred and eighty acres, and for each one thousand inhabitants, not exceeding five thousand in all, a further grant of three hundred and twenty acres shall be allowed.

Lists of the towns patented, with the number of acres entered in each case, may be found on page 27, report of this office for 1874; page 46, report of 1875; page 52, report of 1876; page 96, report of 1877; and page 30, report of 1878, and from these lists the number of inhabitants in each town may be approximated. Valuable information relative to town sites may be obtained by reference to the report of 1870, page 224; report for 1871, page 34; report for 1872, page 21.

I transmit copies of the reports above mentioned, for the use of the committee in this matter.

Respectfully,

J. M. ARMSTRONG,
Acting Commissioner.

Hon. P. DUNN,
House of Representatives.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, I only desire to call the attention of the House to one or two facts in connection with the history of this Hot Springs reservation. When this commission was created a few years ago, the argument, the great argument, and indeed the only argument used for its creation, was the settlement of all questions growing out of this reservation. The argument was, and the only argument, that we would thereby get rid of litigation.

Now, we created a commission at a large expense, a commission composed of honorable gentlemen, and no one has said anything to the contrary here upon this floor. They have gone on, they have taken into account the whole history of this case, and adjudicated it and rendered their report thereon.

The gentleman from Ohio says that this bill has been introduced to prevent litigation. He ought to have said that this bill has been introduced to beget litigation. If this bill be not passed litigation ceases, and every claimant gets his title, paying the amount which he confesses is not an exorbitant one. In other words not a single claimant who has been adjudged the possessor of or entitled to a single acre of this land comes here and confesses he is willing to give it up for the amounts set over against it.

Every settler desires to continue in possession. This bill proposes to open again the whole field to litigation; and, Mr. Speaker, I predict that if this bill passes we shall all have passed away from this House before we shall get through with legislation in reference to this Hot Springs matter.

We have now reached this point: On one side is a report which will give to the Government $220,000, the finding of an honorable commission, ending now and forever all litigation; and upon the other hand a bill opening up litigation which shall give to the Government $20,000. We are to surrender this award and open up litigation at the request of whom? Why, Mr. Speaker, in the closing words of the report which these gentlemen have submitted to the House they say that few, if any, will apply to the court for a rehearing. It is the very few, and not the many, who are creating all of this trouble. I understand, sir, one, two, three, or four out of the five or six hundred interested in this matter only are making complaint. We are here listening to the voice of a few, while the many are not being heard. Four-fifths of the parties interested have not been heard at all in this controversy. It is only the very few of those discontented parties who are asking for this legislation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me a mere act of folly. There is no party in this thing, and there ought to be none. Congress passed a law creating this commission, and I voted for it. I am willing to stand by its finding. It is in the interest of good legislation here; it is in the interest of a good method of settling these disputes.

Mr. Speaker, I think that we shall do others great wrong if we refuse to the Treasury this money which has been adjudicated here to be due, and, worse than all, open up the litigation of these cases that may spring from the passage of this law.

There is another point which I desire to mention. The gentleman from Ohio says that the lands remaining to the Government will be worth at least $100,000. Now, I do not wish to accuse the gentleman of unfairness in debate; but I do say that there is not a line anywhere in the report of the committee itself, or the report of the Secretary of the Interior, or the report of this commission, that fixes any value whatever on these lands. These lands are represented as being mountainous and broken, and will not be worthy of settlement, and are to be sold at auction. I say the gentleman fixes the figures on the result of an exercise of his own imagination.

Mr. CONGER. I ask permission to make one or two more remarks on this question.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. CONGER. Only two or three minutes.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the gentleman from Michigan will be allowed to proceed for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, in addition to what has been already said, I desire to call the attention of the House to this—and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will sustain what I shall say, for I have it from the RECORD itself: It was proposed, when the commissioners decided in regard to the boundaries of the streets and the lots, and had laid out these lots, that they should be sold at public auction. That was the proposition, thinking those who had improvements upon them for which others would have to pay would thus be enabled to pay and secure their own property in the most advantageous way. The debates show that the occupants of the land desired this commission to make a valuation of these lands and not leave it to public auction or to any other mode of determining what they should pay than the decision of this commission; and the bill was so amended and so became a law.

The owners of these claims desired further that the decision of that commission should be final. The bill was so amended that the decision of the commission should be final and their award final. The law was prepared then with full acquiescence in the desire of all these owners of the lands. Congress yielded to their desires. It provided that the amount to be paid should be by a system of valuation instead of competition by public auction. It yielded further to the requests of these claimants. In order to settle all these disputes forever it placed in the bill the provision that the determination of these commissioners should be final.

I ask the House to see how fully the commission has complied with those original requests of the claimants. And now when all that has been fulfilled, when the titles are all settled, when each claimant knows exactly how much he will pay and have a good title forever, this bill, as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] has stated, comes in, and, upon the ex parte showing of any person feeling himself aggrieved, if he can make his case strong enough, if he can write it out strong enough on his own side, opens a question of litigation with whomsoever he may contend. In my opinion, if this bill passes, we are passing a bill which will in the future reflect discredit upon every man who advocates it, which will reflect discredit upon this House, and which will be opposed by the claimants themselves who have secured the titles for their property at a given price. And I understand, Mr. Speaker, there are in the possession of the committee memorials from these claimants desiring that the report of that commission shall be by law and by the action of this Government enforced, and stating that they do not complain of the price fixed upon their lands.

I read in the report of the debates when this question was here before that the memorialists then stated that it was not the payment of one sum or of another sum that they cared about so long as the price was anything reasonable; but they did want their titles finally settled, so that they might know whether they were the owners of the lands upon which they had lived so long and improved so much. It is well for this House to understand that this bill unsettles, or may unsettle, every title of every claimant, provided there is an opposition claimant who has been heard before these commissioners. Such an opposition claimant can make out in writing for himself a petition, giving his own views of his rights. He can make out a prima facie case and then go into court; and no matter whether his claim is right or wrong, he may, in the crowded state of the business of our courts, continue this litigation from year to year for ten, or fifteen, or twenty years before the matter is settled.

It was that we might inquire into this, that we might have the report of that commission, that we might have at least before some committee the views of the gentlemen of that commission, that I desired the delay in settling this question; and I still hope this bill will not be passed until that opportunity has been obtained.

Mr. WRIGHT rose.

Mr. DUNN. I cannot yield more time.

Mr. WRIGHT. It is very little time that I wish to occupy. I am afraid the House does not understand the nature of this bill.

Mr. DUNN. I presume it is the first time in the history of legislation in this House that the argument has ever been urged against a bill pending before it that there might be litigation under the operation of that bill, and therefore it ought not to be passed. Is there not litigation under the operation of all the laws that were passed by this Congress? Are your courts not provided for the purpose of litigating and adjudicating rights under the operation of these laws? And is this Congress to close the doors of the courts of justice against the people of the country and deny them an adjudication of their rights? Will such arguments be heard and entertained here by grave statesmen, by the gentlemen who are called upon to administer the affairs of a great government of forty millions of people? I say leave ajar the door that leads to the tribunal of justice and let the people go there and seek their remedy.

It has been alleged that this bill will bring discredit upon this House. How, and in what respect? If it be dishonorable to disallow a few adjudications of this commission, a mere quasi-judicial tribunal, then it would be discreditable. If it be dishonorable for the Government to be merciful to its own deluded and misguided people, then there would be discredit; but that would be a discredit which good men would rejoice in.

It is said here that there is but slight complaint about the award made by this commission and the assessments made by the commission. It is said that none are willing to give up their homes, but they all desire to keep them. Who in this land is willing to give up his home? That decision of that court came upon those people like a fire-bell in the night-time, and startled them in the imagined security of their homes. They were alarmed, and they grasped at anything. And when gentlemen say the act of 1877 was the demand of the people of Hot Springs they mistake.

These people were made to understand distinctly that they would not be permitted to enter their town sites under the public law, and that no bill could pass the Senate which did not put their claims into the hands of a receiver or a commission. Like drowning men grasping at straws they caught at anything that would allow them to remain under the roofs of their own houses. That is all there is of it.

The argument is now made that by the passage of this bill the Government will be left unremunerated for the amount of expenses it has incurred. That is not true. The Government has reserved nine hundred acres for the use of the people of the United States and five hundred and seventy other acres to be sold. It also owns the Arlington Hotel. It is fairly estimated, on good proof before your committee, that this will more than meet the expenditures of the Government. I now call the previous question.

Mr. CASWELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. DUNN. I cannot yield further time.

Mr. CASWELL. I desire to inquire what provision there is in the bill for compensating those persons whose lots are within the reservation?

Mr. DUNN. None; that is left for the future.

Mr. CASWELL. Is not there great injustice in the bill, in that it virtually gives a part of the settlers the value of their lots and strips the rest of all their property in them?

Mr. DUNN. I cannot yield further.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask the gentleman to give me five minutes.

Mr. DUNN. I have only one minute left.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask the indulgence of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. DUNN,] as a part of the House, declines, and it requires unanimous consent.

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not think there will be any objection.

Mr. DUNN. If time is reserved to me to move the previous question I will not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WRIGHT] asks for five minutes. Is there objection?

No objection was made.

Mr. WRIGHT. I paid a great deal of attention to this bill when it was under consideration before the Committee on Public Lands. We listened to arguments from those who had charge of the bill outside of the committee as well as arguments which were made in the committee-room by members of the committee. After a full and careful examination we came to the unanimous conclusion that the bill offered here is right and just and proper. So much for the action of the gentlemen who have had charge of the bill in the committee.

I do not regard this bill, if it shall become law, as one that will interfere with statutes of repose or quiet. I do not agree with gentlemen that the passage of this bill will open up the whole subject to litigation and controversy. You will find that this commission in its decision has given very general satisfaction in the cases that have been brought before it. But there were some few cases where it was alleged that fraud had been committed, not by the commissioners, but by outsiders. There being no appeal from the decision of the board of commissioners, there is no way to correct such fraud except by the passage of this bill. I desire to call the attention of the House to the language of the bill:

> A revision may be had in equity of the adjudications and award, of the right of entry of lots made by the commissioners, the correctness of which may be questioned on account of fraud, gross error, or mistake, &c.

That does not reach to the jurisdiction of all these matters. It does not give the court the right to pass upon all questions connected with these subjects. It only allows an appeal to the courts of the United States when it can be shown or ascertained that there has been "fraud, gross error, or mistake."

Mr. FINLEY. That will open up the whole subject.

Mr. WRIGHT. No, it will not, for this reason: before any person can lay the ground for a complaint he must appear before the judge of the district court, and must make it apparent to that judge that fraud, or gross error, or a mistake has been committed. Then he will obtain his order to the commissioners to grant an appeal from their decision.

Mr. FINLEY. That will leave it all open after that.

Mr. WRIGHT. It will be open only for certain reasons, such as gross fraud, &c. There is now no appeal from the decision of these commissioners; their decision is final.

Mr. DUNN. I now call the previous question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Before that is done, I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DUNN. I cannot yield.

Many MEMBERS. Regular order!

The question was taken upon seconding the demand for the previous question; and upon a division there were—ayes 89, noes 77.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. BURROWS called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, there being 31 in the affirmative, (more than one-fifth of a quorum;) and Mr. DUNN and Mr. CONGER were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 98, noes 72.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered.

Mr. DUNN moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being 51 in the affirmative; more than one-fifth of the last vote.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 125, nays 121, not voting 46; as follows:

YEAS—125.

So the bill was passed.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. COFFROTH. My colleague, Mr. BACHMAN, is paired with the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am paired with the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. COOK. If he were present, he would vote in the affirmative and I should vote in the negative.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. DUNN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. R. No. 170) concerning an international fishery exhibition to be held in Berlin, Germany, in April, 1880.

EXPORTATION OF TOBACCO, SNUFF, ETC.

Mr. JOHNSTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4415) to amend section 3385, Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to cancellation of export bonds on exportation of tobacco, snuff, and cigars; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

N. & G. TAYLOR COMPANY.

Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee of Ways and Means, with a favorable recommendation, a bill (H. R. No. 4416) for the relief of N. & G. Taylor Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GENERAL AMNESTY.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4417) providing for general amnesty; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEY OF MISSISSIPPI AND OTHER RIVERS.

Mr. POUND, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred under the law to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 5,000 extra copies of the report of the survey of the Mississippi, Saint Croix, Chippewa, and Wisconsin Rivers, transmitted to this House by the Secretary of War on the 9th instant, together with the accompanying maps, be printed in document form; 3,500 of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 for the use of the Senate, and 500 for the use of the War Department.

INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on the Interoceanic Canal a resolution for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to communicate to this House copies of all correspondence in relation to the interoceanic canal which may have passed between this Government and foreign governments, also between this Government and its own representatives in other countries, and between this Government and individuals interested in or proposing to be interested in negotiations for the construction of such a canal; and that he communicate to this House what, if any, treaty obligations with other governments rest upon this Government.

Mr. DUNNELL. This resolution should go to a committee.

The SPEAKER. It comes from a committee, the Committee on the Interoceanic Canal.

Mr. CONGER. It is a mere request for executive information.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour.

Mr. KNOTT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 185) for the relief of Gibbes & Co., of Charleston, South Carolina.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. COX asked unanimous consent to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of Richard Atkinson, there having been no adverse report; which request was referred to the Committee of Claims.

COMPANY QUARTERS, FORT LEAVENWORTH.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting an estimate for company quarters at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

R. V. BELT.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a request of Mr. R. V. Belt, chief clerk of claims branch of Quartermaster-General's Office, for an increase of compensation; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

STANISLAUS JORDAN.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the petition of Ordnance-Sergeant Stanislaus Jordan, United States Army, to be placed on the retired list; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SALES OF LANDS FOR DIRECT TAXES.

The SPEAKER. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in reply to the resolution of the House of January 16, 1880, calling for information as to the amount of money covered into the Treasury as the proceeds of sales of lands for direct taxes in the State of South Carolina, was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means; but upon further examination the Chair finds that it should have gone to the Committee of Claims. If there be no objection, the reference will be changed.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KNOTT. Several gentlemen who desire to introduce bills, &c., by unanimous consent, have requested me to withdraw my motion to adjourn. I do so for that purpose.

Mr. FINLEY. Then I call for the regular order.

Mr. KNOTT. I renew my motion to adjourn.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I rise to a privileged motion. I move that at half past four o'clock this afternoon the House take a recess till half past seven o'clock, for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules, and that to-morrow at two o'clock the House take a vote on that report.

The SPEAKER. If the House should vote down the motion to adjourn, the Chair will then decide whether under the rules he can entertain that motion.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, it was agreed to, there being—ayes 109, noes 47. And accordingly (at three o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 11, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster-General, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Post-Office Department, of the 30th ultimo, addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, in regard to a deficiency in the appropriation for post-office envelopes for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of January 7, a letter from the Chief of Engineers and a report of Major C. R. Suter, Corps of Engineers, in regard to the condition of the Missouri River between Omaha and Plattsmouth, Nebraska, and the probable expense of improving that river between the points named; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting letters from the commanding general of the Department of Missouri, the chief quartermaster of the military division of Missouri, the General of the Army, and the Acting Quartermaster-General, representing the necessity for the construction of permanent brick buildings for quarters for six companies at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, and recommending an appropriation of $35,000 for that purpose; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HOAR. I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of Massachusetts concerning the extirpation of the pleuro-pneumonia. I believe the usual courtesy of the Senate requires such resolutions to be read at the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be reported at length.

The resolutions were read, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture, as follows:

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

In the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty.

Resolutions concerning the extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia in the several States of the Union.

Whereas the business of raising, transporting through the States, and shipping to foreign ports of cattle is already one of the most important industries of this country, and a source of wealth and profit to the citizens of all portions of the Union—to the agricultural States, to the States in which through lines of railroad run, and to the seaboard States, where commerce is greatly increased by the export of live stock and beef products; and whatever interferes with such demand in foreign market produces a direct and incalculable injury to every portion of the country; and

Whereas the disease known as pleuro-pneumonia, a most pestilent, contagious, and fatal disease, prevails at the present time among the neat stock in no less than five States on the Atlantic seaboard, menacing the entire Middle and Eastern States, and ultimately the unfenced stock-ranges of the South and West, where its extermination would be utterly impossible, thereby interfering with the exportation of cattle, and destroying one of our most valuable industries; and

Whereas the State authorities have not sufficient power to control the intercommunication between different States, and consequent spread of the disease, or may not be fully awake to the importance of its utter and entire extermination: and

Whereas the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, having in former years, expended many thousand dollars in extirpating this plague among the cattle in her own borders, whereby this disease within her territory was entirely extirminated: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Legislature of Massachusetts pray the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled to devise such measures of law as regards quarantine, and transportation of cattle between the several States; and also grant such financial aid to the States where it now exists as in your wisdom may be deemed best calculated to eradicate in the present and prevent in the future this dangerous and threatening pestilence, and thereby avert a national calamity.

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be transmitted by the secretary of this Commonwealth to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

SENATE, January 27, 1880.

Passed.
Sent down for concurrence.

S. N. GIFFORD, Clerk.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 30, 1880.

Concurred.

GEORGE A. MARDEN, Clerk.

SECRETARY'S DEPARTMENT,
Boston, February 9, 1880.

A true copy.
Attest:

HENRY B. PEIRCE,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Mr. HOAR. I also present the petition of Jeremiah Fisher, of West Boylston, Massachusetts, who reqnests, as this seems to be the felicitous moment when Congress is ready to do justice to the soldiers and sailors of the late war, that there may be an amendment made to the bill for the restoration of Fitz-John Porter to the Army list, with other valuable considerations, which shall provide for the increase of the pension of all soldiers and sailors who lost a leg or an arm in the United States service in the late war to $50 a month. I ask its reference to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill on the subject-matter having been reported to the Senate by the Committee on Military Affairs, the Chair thinks the petition should lie on the table.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose, where the prayer of a petition is that a certain amendment may be made to a bill which introduces a distinct subject-matter and which requires the drafting of legislation, we may properly send the petition to the appropriate committee, even though the bill be not there.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WINDOM. I present the petition of Norman Shook and sundry other citizens of Pope County, Minnesota, earnestly praying Congress to enact such laws as will alleviate the oppressions imposed upon them by the transportation monopolies that now control the interstate commerce of the country; and they urge that Congress enact such laws as will prevent fluctuations in freights and unjust discriminations in transportation charges. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I present the petition of James Hart and several others, citizens of the same county and State, representing that innocent users of patented articles are frequently threatened with prosecution as infringers, and that the existing patent laws are ineffectual to protect such parties from the threats of the patentees or owners of patents, or from the speculations of impostors; and they pray that Congress so amend the patent laws as to make the manufacturer or vendor alone responsible for infringements; and further to so amend them as to exempt from penalty any person manufacturing for his own use any article previously patented, provided such manufacturer was not cognizant of the existence of the letters-patent. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Patents.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KERNAN presented the petition of Jabez Matthews and others, citizens of New York, praying for an appropriation by Congress to pay the certificates issued by the State of New York to soldiers in the war of 1812 to reimburse them for money expended by them in purchasing arms and ammunition; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of William Colligan and others, survivors of the Mexican war, praying for the enactment of a law granting pensions to those who participated in the Mexican, Black Hawk, Creek, or Seminole wars; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EATON presented the petition of John H. Babcock and others, citizens of New Haven, Connecticut, and soldiers in the late war, praying for the passage of a law for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the memorial of Thomas H. Ward and others, citizens of New Haven, Connecticut, and soldiers in the late war, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PENDLETON presented the memorial of John Edgington and others, citizens of Ohio, soldiers in the late war, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, presented the petition of J. O'Neal and others, citizens of Pensacola, Florida, praying for an appropriation by Congress for the improvement of Pensacola Bay; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BURNSIDE presented the petition of Stephen B. Reynolds and others, citizens of Rhode Island, praying for the passage of a law authorizing the removal of the light-house at Poplar Point, in Wickford Harbor, Narragansett Bay, to the rock known as "Old Gay," in that bay; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MORRILL presented the petition of Peter F. Bacon and others, members of the American Missionary Industrial Association, praying that industrial schools for the education of mechanics may be established from the unclaimed bounty money due to colored soldiers; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BECK presented the petition of John W. Gazaway and others, citizens of Lexington, Kentucky, praying that Wilberforce University be embraced in the distribution of the proceeds of the unclaimed bounty money of colored soldiers; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. GROOME presented the petition of R. H. Cameron and others, members of Wingate Post, No. 9, Grand Army of the Republic, department of Maryland, praying for the passage of a law granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah H. Alexander for services rendered by her son, Thomas Dilks, during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of H. G. Wright and others, and the petition of W. H. Newling and others, citizens of Brown County, Kansas; the petition of Samuel N. Johnson and others, and the petition of Richard Hartley and others, citizens of Doniphan County, Kansas, praying for the passage of a law authorizing the sale of the lands of the Iowas, Sacs, and Foxes in Kansas and Nebraska, and the removal of the Indians occupying the same to the Indian Territory; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented the petition of Maxwell Carroll, of Paola, Kansas, praying for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GARLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a resolution of the Legislature of Michigan relative to the abolition of polygamy in the United States, and petitions relating to the same subject, reported a bill (S. No. 1266) to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 459) for the relief of Elizabeth B. Custer, reported adversely thereon and moved its indefinite postponement.

Mr. FERRY. I ask that the bill be not indefinitely postponed but that it be placed on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. P. L. Ward, widow and executrix of William Ward, deceased, praying compensation for stores alleged to have been furnished and delivered to the Navy Department and the Quartermaster's Department by her late husband in the years 1860 and 1863, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1267) for the relief of P. L. Ward, widow and executrix of William Ward, deceased.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2269) for the relief of Calvin Bronson, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PRYOR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of W. W. Busby and Eva V. Busby, of Shelby County, Tennessee, praying compensation for quartermaster and commissary stores taken for the use of the Army of the United States during the late war, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 522) to extend the provisions of section 4631, Title LVI, "Prize," of the Revised Statutes, and of the act of June 8, 1874, in relation to prize-money to all fleet-officers, reported it with amendments and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HEREFORD, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of James Vance and William Vance, of San Antonio, Texas, praying compensation for the use and occupancy of their property by the United States military forces during the late war, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1268) for the relief of James Vance and William Vance.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 557) to authorize the payment of prize-money to the captors of the steamboat New Era No. 5 and cargo, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 768) for the reclamation of arid and waste lands, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of John Beeson, praying the passage of a law granting him compensation for alleged services rendered citizens of the United States in protecting them from Indian hostilities and depredations in the State of Oregon, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. CONKLING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 872) for the better organization of the district courts of the United States within the State of Louisiana, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SLATER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 714) for the relief of William H. Barnhart, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 1269) for the erection of a public building at Denver, Colorado; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. LOGAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 323) for the relief of the Winnebago Indians in Wisconsin, and to aid them to obtain subsistence by agricultural pursuits, and to promote their civilization, to report it back and recommend its passage with sundry amendments. I ask that a letter from the Secretary of the Interior be printed as the report of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar and the letter of the Secretary of the Interior be printed.

GEOLOGICAL AND GEOGRAPHICAL SURVEY OF THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, the last one on the Calendar, for printing certain documents, which was objected to on Monday last by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL.]

The resolution was read and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be printed at the Government Printing Office, for the use of the Department of the Interior, 1,500 copies each of volumes 4 and 12, and 1,200 copies each of volumes 3, 8, and 13 of the final reports of the Geological and Geographical Survey of the Territories in quarto form, with necessary illustrations, uniform with the edition ordered by Congress.

HISTORY OF THE COTTON-WORM.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to which was referred a resolution for printing 10,000 additional copies of Bulletin No. 3 of the history of the cotton-worm, prepared by Professor Charles V. Riley, under the order of Congress, to report it with an amendment by way of substitute, and I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed substitute will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the resolving clause of the resolution and insert:

That there be printed 10,000 additional copies of Bulletin No. 3 of the United States entomological commission on the cotton-worm, 6,000 copies for the use of the House, 3,000 for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 for the use of the Department of the Interior.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. I am in favor of the resolution, but I am opposed to this mode of considering a resolution or bill when it is first reported. We have a daily Calendar; and as the Senator from Rhode Island is exceedingly good-natured I shall begin with his case, as I intend hereafter to object to the present consideration of all cases. I ask that the resolution go upon the Calendar, and that it be acted upon in the morning when we can see it in print.

Mr. ANTHONY. I call the attention of my friend from Missouri to the fact that resolutions for printing additional copies of documents are always considered immediately upon being reported, because the type is standing, and it is impossible for the office always to keep the type standing. If the resolution is postponed it may necessitate the expense of resetting the type.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator from Rhode Island will in the interest of economy assure me that if this resolution is not passed to-day instead of to-morrow the type will be taken down, I will withdraw my objection; but it does not seem to me in a pamphlet of this size—I have examined it very carefully and consider it an important document—that the type will be taken down before to-morrow.

Mr. ANTHONY. The type will not be taken down before to-morrow; but then it may be impossible to react the resolution to-morrow. It will require a vote of the Senate to take it up to-morrow.

Mr. COCKRELL. There will be no objection to it I am assured, as there was none to-day to a similar resolution reported by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE,] which was formerly laid over on objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BOOTH asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1270) for the relief of A. Griffith; which was was read twice by its title, and, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. LOGAN (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1279) to extend the powers of the Anglo-American Land and Claim Association and to promote colonization upon the public domain; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FARLEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1271) to amend sections 2582, 2583, 2607, and 2684 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the collection districts of California; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WALLACE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1272) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase pensions in certain cases," approved June 18, 1874; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1273) declaratory of the meaning of the amendment to the bankrupt law approved June 22, 1874; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JOHNSTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1274) to amend and re-enact sections 2552 and 2553 of the Revised Statutes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COCKRELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1275) to establish a post-road in Missouri; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, (by request,) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1276) for the relief of Charles B. Phillips; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BRUCE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1277) for the relief of Washington Ford; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1278) for the relief of Lewis D. Allen, of Mississippi; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. TELLER, it was Ordered, That the papers of Messrs. Field & Hill, concerning their claim for goods supplied for the use of the Indians at Los Pinos Agency, be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

On motion of Mr. MAXEY, it was Ordered, That the joint resolutions of the Chickasaw Nation introduced on the 13th day of December, 1878, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, in connection with Senate bill No. 967.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I gave notice last week that at the close of the morning business to-day I should like to call up the bill (S. No. 1139) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of the United States Volunteers and colonel of the Army. As there is a considerable portion of the morning hour left, with the consent of the Senate that the bill be taken up, I shall proceed to make my remarks now, of which I gave notice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That requires unanimous consent, as what is known as the Anthony rule attaches at the close of the morning business. Is there objection to the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. LOGAN. I did not hear the proposition.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I propose simply to proceed with my remarks on the bill for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, of which I gave notice about a week ago.

Mr. LOGAN. I understood that the bill would be taken up at a time when all would have an opportunity of discussing it.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I have no objection—indeed I would very much prefer, if it be the wish of the Senate, that the bill be taken up and proceeded with; but the Senator from Illinois will bear in mind that there is now before the Senate, as unfinished business, the bill which was under discussion last evening.

Mr. LOGAN. So I understand. I do not want the Senator to suppose that I mean any discourtesy to him, for I certainly do not, but I do desire when the bill is taken up that both sides may have ample opportunity to discuss it, and that the discussion may proceed along without being confined to the morning hour. I think such a course would be fair and proper. I have no disposition to delay the consideration of the bill for one moment. Whenever the Senate is ready to hear the discussion upon it, I am ready for the bill to be taken up and thoroughly discussed on both sides; but until that time I do hope the discussion will not proceed.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I could not have anticipated when I gave the notice a week ago that a bill of the character now pending before the Senate would have interrupted the progress of the bill after I should have submitted the remarks I proposed to submit upon it, but such happens to be the case. As I am prepared this morning to proceed with the remarks that I have to make in opening the case, I hope that the Senate will grant me the privilege of proceeding with what I have to say.

Mr. LOGAN. I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that when the discussion proceeds the bill should be in such a condition that it will go over from day to day as the unfinished business. Then the discussion can proceed on both sides as the bill will stand on the Calendar as the business for the day, and that will be fair to both sides. I do not like to object to the Senator from New Jersey proceeding to-day, I do not want to do that, and therefore I desire that we may have an understanding so that there will be no friction in reference to the matter at all. All I desire in the world is to have the case fairly presented on both sides for the consideration of the Senate; but when it is presented in scraps, as a matter of course it is neither entertaining nor advantageous to the Senate. There is nothing in the case that we cannot discuss in a proper manner, and in the hearing of the Senate for their information if other Senators have not examined the subject as thoroughly as we have in the Military Committee.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Not at all.

Mr. LOGAN. Therefore I hope the Senate will agree that when the bill is taken up we shall proceed with its discussion, it being the unfinished business from day to day, and determine the question.

Mr. THURMAN. I believe this discussion is not in order, but it goes on by unanimous consent, and I beg leave to say one word. I ask the attention of my friend from Illinois to what I have to say.

This is a subject that requires a great deal of examination in order to understand it, as I am told by those who have examined it. I have not done so except in a very perfunctory way. I want to get all the light that I can upon it, and I do really think that it would facilitate the examination by Senators of this question if the Senator from New Jersey, the chairman of the Committee, were allowed to open the case, as our late friend from Massachusetts used to say. Then at any time when the Senator from Illinois desires to open it on his side in support of the views which he holds in the case I am sure the Senate will be willing to hear him. By pursuing such a course I really think we shall have more time to consider this question and understand it than if we were to take up the bill and go right straight on until we voted on it. I do not believe such a course would give us time to examine the very voluminous documents connected with the case, as I am told they are voluminous, and we should not understand it half as well as if the chairman of the Committee were to make his opening speech in favor of the report and then at any time when it suited the convenience of the Senator from Illinois he should ask the Senate to hear him in reply, and then if the bill were not taken up again for a week after that, or two weeks, it would be probably with a better understanding of it by all Senators. I hope the Senator from Illinois will not object to the Senator from New Jersey proceeding this morning.

Mr. LOGAN. I will state in the hearing of the Senator from Ohio my objection to his proposition. If the bill is not set down for the day it cannot be discussed as unfinished business. Suppose the Senator from New Jersey be allowed to proceed this morning. There is but half an hour of the morning hour remaining, when the bill would go over, and ten days would elapse probably before anybody else would be heard upon the bill on either side. As I said, in that case the information would come in scraps. It seems to me that it would be much better for all the debate to go together in the RECORD. I presume that all Senators will not care to stay and listen, as they generally do not, to a debate of this kind; but if they desire to read the debate it will all be together, so that all the information would be summed up together on both sides, and it would be much easier to examine the case and understand it.

So far as I am concerned I would say to the Senator that while I do not desire to detain the Senate at great length on any question, on this particular question I cannot get through the argument that I propose to make in the morning hour. I expect to examine this question from a legal stand-point; I expect to present to the Senate a great many authorities; and I desire for that purpose to have ample time in which to do it.

Therefore I would say to the chairman of the committee that if he will propose any day, I do not care what day, it is immaterial to me, when the Senate may take up this question and hear the debate, I shall certainly, so far as I am concerned, agree to any suggestion he makes as to the day, and then let us proceed with the discussion, but I must certainly interpose my objection to taking the bill up in this manner.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the call of the Calendar under the rule.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Before this matter passes away, I ask that the bill be made the order for next Monday, immediately after the morning hour, if there be no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey moves that this bill be made a special order for Monday next, immediately after the morning hour. Is there objection?

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection. I certainly hope the Senate will agree to that.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. We may wish to finish other business that may be pressing at that time.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I should have no objection to the suggestion if the bill now under consideration as the unfinished business for to-day can be disposed of.

Mr. LOGAN. Of course.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That will be the understanding.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Or any other business that may be unfinished at that time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business always overrides a special order. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill will be made a special order for that day.

INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

Mr. EATON. On the 4th of December I submitted a resolution calling for correspondence from the State Department respecting a ship-canal between North America and South America. I desire to call the resolution up for passage. I suppose there will be no objection to it.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to transmit to the Senate copies of all correspondence between this Government and any foreign government since February, 1869, respecting a ship-canal across the Isthmus between North America and South America, together with copies of any projét of treaties respecting the same which the Department of State may have proposed or submitted since that date to any foreign power or its diplomatic representative.

Mr. EATON. It has been suggested by Senators in front that the resolution be verbally amended by adding after the word "requested" "if not incompatible with the public interests."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so modified.

The resolution was agreed to.

READJUSTMENT OF SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will now proceed with the call of the Calendar, commencing at the point reached when it was last under consideration.

The first bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 903) authorizing and directing the Postmaster-General to readjust the salaries of certain postmasters in accordance with the provision of section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Postmaster-General to readjust the salaries of all postmasters of the third, fourth, and fifth classes, under the classification provided for in the act of July 1, 1864, whose salaries have not heretofore been readjusted under the terms of section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866, who made direct official application or sworn returns of receipts and business for readjustment of salary to the Postmaster-General, the First Assistant Postmaster-General, or the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, such readjustments to be made in accordance with the mode presented in section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866, and to date from the beginning of the quarter succeeding that in which such application or sworn returns of receipts and business was made.

Mr. BAILEY. A report accompanies the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire it read?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, let it be read.

Mr. BAILEY. I suppose Senators would like to have it read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BAILEY December 18, 1879:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom were referred the following bills, S. No. 44, S. No. 246, and S. No. 262, and also the memorial of Harvey Spalding, for the relief of certain postmasters and late postmasters in the States therein named, have had the same under consideration, and ask leave to make the following report:

The act of Congress passed June 22, 1854, directed the Postmaster-General to allow to deputy postmasters, in lieu of the compensation before allowed, commissions on the postage collected at their respective offices, at varying rates, according to the sums collected.

The act of July 1, 1864, instead of compensating them by commissions upon actual receipts, substituted a new system, by which the receipts for two years preceding an adjustment of salaries were to be regarded as the basis, and, fixing the date of the act as the initial point, directed that a readjustment should be made every two years thereafter. But in special cases the Postmaster-General was authorized to make readjustments as much oftener as he should deem expedient, with the proviso, however, that changes in any salaries should not take effect until the next quarter succeeding the order of the Postmaster-General directing the change.

The act of 12th June, 1866, amended the last-recited act by adding a direction that when the quarterly returns of any postmaster of the third, fourth, or fifth class should show that his salary was 10 per cent. less than it would have been on the basis of commissions under the act of 1854 the Postmaster-General should review and adjust the salary.

In executing the provisions of the act of July 1, 1864, so far as the regular biennial adjustments were concerned, it was the practice of the Post-Office Department, by an order issued from the office of the First Assistant Postmaster-General and addressed to all postmasters, to require from the latter a sworn statement of the revenues of their offices from the 1st of July to the 31st of December (inclusive) next preceding the date of the proposed readjustment.

Upon these sworn statements the salary to be assigned to each officer was estimated and fixed by an order bearing date June 1 of the current year, or one month prior to the date when the salary as adjusted was to take effect.

In case of special readjustments the Department rules required that the attention of the Postmaster-General should be called to the case by direct application.

Under the act of 1864, and also of 1866, letters of appointment were issued to newly-appointed postmasters whose compensation was necessarily fixed at an arbitrary sum, by which they were notified that the compensation was fixed at a certain sum until the amount of business to be transacted and their receipts could be ascertained. They were instructed "at the end of each quarter to make and forward to the Third Assistant Postmaster-General a statement under oath of the total value of postage-stamps canceled during the quarter and sold;" that "their salaries would be readjusted at the proper time by the Postmaster-General, on the basis of the amount of business done as shown by the quarterly statement above required."

In the period reaching from the year 1866 to the year 1872, when the whole system of compensation was modified, many new post-offices were established, and the rate of compensation was necessarily fixed not upon the basis of receipts, but arbitrarily; in the same period the business of other offices belonging to the "third," "fourth," and "fifth" classes was increased.

The Department, carrying out its practice and conforming to instructions given to the postmasters, did not readjust the salaries oftener than once in two years, except in cases to which its attention had been called by official letters, or by sworn returns made in accordance with its rules.

Postmasters generally, either through ignorance of the terms of the act of 1866, from inattention, from indifference, or because they were satisfied with the compensation they were receiving, did not generally make official application for a readjustment of salaries until the occurrence of the biennial period fixed by the act of 1864.

Their attention, or the attention of many of them, was at length called to their supposed right to increase of compensation by printed circular letters, scattered broadcast through the country by claim agents. Thereupon some who were in office, others who had resigned, or had been removed, either by letter written in person or through attorneys, made application for increase of salaries under the provisions of the act of 1866.

The Post-Office Department denied these claims, because—

First. The appropriations made by Congress for the expenses of the post-office service would not justify their payment.

Second. Because the applicants had not conformed to the rules and practice of the Department in making these claims.

Third. Because the recognition of these claims would be an encouragement to the prosecution by officers of the Government of stale claims and demands against it, not founded upon an expectation of payment at the time when services were rendered, but suggested by that large class of persons who earn a livelihood by investigating and vitalizing doubtful rights.

One or more actions were brought in the Court of Claims to compel payment of the sums alleged to be due. The causes at last reached the Supreme Court of the United States, and by that court it was decided that the judicial department of the Government could not revise the action of the Postmaster-General, nor inquire into the grounds or correctness of his decisions under the act of 1866; these were not subjects of judicial cognizance.

Some of these claimants now make application to Congress for relief, and ask that the merits of their respective claims shall be investigated and settled.

It appears from a communication addressed to this committee by the Postmaster-General that in two States of the Union, namely, Iowa and Kansas, the persons who claim arrears of compensation under the acts referred to number seven hundred and forty-six, and the sum total of their claims is $53,324. If only one-half the number of claimants shall appear from each of the other States, and only half this sum be claimed by them, the total number will be seventy-one hundred and ninety-two, and the sum $525,578.

Notwithstanding the magnitude of this claim, your committee are of opinion that the Government should pay the entire amount if justly and equitably due. Yet it should pay no more. They beg leave to submit that where services were rendered with no expectation of compensation, or, at all events, to the extent now demanded, and where public officers were derelict in the discharge of duty, or failed to conform to the reasonable directions of their superiors, and especially where they are prompted to make demands not "sua sponte," but by the instigation of other and interested persons, equity does not require a relaxation of the rules of law, settled by the highest judicial tribunal of the country.

But they also submit that such of these claimants as made direct and timely application to the Postmaster-General, or who complied with the orders of the Department by making sworn returns to the officers indicated, for readjustment of salaries, under the act of 1866, have a strong equity. This class was not only obedient to the law, and to the orders of their superior officers, but, by their action, have established that they looked to the act of Congress as a basis of a contract.

The committee therefore recommend the indefinite postponement of all the bills for special relief heretofore recited, and recommend the passage of the bill now submitted.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 966) to establish a department of agriculture and commerce.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That bill, it is understood, is to be discussed at some future time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

JOSIAH H. PILLSBURY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 762) for the relief of Josiah H. Pillsbury; which was considered as in Committe of the Whole. It requires the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to the administrator of Josiah H. Pillsbury, deceased, late postmaster at Manhattan, Kansas, $323.95, of which he was robbed on the night of the 28th of June, 1877, and which he has accounted for to the Government, the robbery having occurred without neglect or other fault on the part of Pillsbury.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. KIRKWOOD January 8:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 762) for the relief of Josiah H. Pillsbury, have considered the same, and report:

That said Pillsbury, on the 28th day of June, 1877, was, and yet is, postmaster at Manhattan, Riley County, Kansas; that on the night of that day the post-office at Manhattan was entered by burglars, the safe therein, in which were kept the moneys and stamps of the Post-Office Department and registered letters, was broken open and robbed of money-order funds, postal funds, and registered letters, containing money to the amount of about $476.96, which amount the postmaster has since made good to the Department.

The special agent sent by the Post-Office Department to investigate the matter reports, among other things, as follows:

"The post-office is kept in a frame building in the principal business street, and was entered by the robbers through a side window near the back part of the room, in which the office is kept. The safe used by the postmaster is one of Hall's patent combination four-tumbler locks, and weighs about seven hundred pounds, and was entered by means of a sledge-hammer weighing ten and three-quarter pounds. * * * Mr. Pillsbury, the postmaster, is considered by the citizens of Manhattan as a very worthy and careful postmaster, and I am satisfied that he took the same care of the Government property that he did of his own."

It also appears that the safe broken open and robbed was furnished by the postmaster at his own expense, and was such an one as the Government furnishes to second-class offices.

Mr. Pillsbury, immediately after the robbery, gave notice thereof to the proper officer of the Department, and promptly paid over the amount of money stolen.

The post-office at Manhattan is of the third class; the population of the town is about twelve hundred; and it contains two private banks, but no national bank.

In his report the special agent says:

"While Mr. Pillsbury took every precaution, under the circumstances, to secure the door and window of said post-office, yet I am of the opinion it was very unsafe to risk $500 in money and valuable letters, not knowing the value of contents, in a safe which was not burglar-proof, in a frame building which was not occupied by any one at night. Mr. Pillsbury being the custodian of public money and Government property, and being paid for the care of said money and property, did not show any desire to shirk the responsibility resting upon him, but paid the losses reported herein."

The same report shows that of the amount stolen $288.40 was money-order funds, $155 postal funds in money, and $35.55 contents of registered letters.

Your committee are of the opinion that, upon these facts, the postmaster should be reimbursed the amount of money-order funds and the amount contained in registered letters, and that he should not be reimbursed the amount of postal funds. They therefore recommend that the bill be passed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not rise to oppose this bill, because I know it to be not of the least use in the world. A good many years ago, when I was rather green in the Senate, I used to oppose the passage of these bills. I opposed them as a mere suspension or overriding of the law, which makes an officer of the Government liable for the safe custody of Government property and money in his hands. If he were not so liable by law there would be no necessity to come here with a bill for his relief. The law is perfectly clear that the officer does insure the safe custody of the money, and the compensation he receives is the insurance money that is paid to him for doing it; but it is no use to oppose these bills. After the fullest discussion years ago the Post-Office Committee carried everything before them, and they have done so ever since; and they have extended it to the subtreasurers, and relieved some man in New York from a liability of a hundred and some odd thousand dollars in one case there. It is no use to oppose them.

Therefore it is not for that purpose that I rise; but as I do not believe there is a single postmaster in all the United States whose post-office has been robbed in this way of any amount that made it worth while for him to come to Congress who has not obtained a bill for his relief, I beg leave most respectfully to suggest to the Post-Office Committee that they had better bring in a general bill at once, and let the Postmaster-General, when satisfied that there has been no fault on the part of the postmaster, be authorized to relieve him from liability. I do not see why in the world we should go on every session and have our time occupied with bills of this sort, except in certain cases where we are to refund money to the man. I think he could be credited on the books of the Department in most cases if the Postmaster-General is satisfied he ought to be credited with it, without our having to take up these bills. I do not say that such a law ought to pass, but it would be a great deal better to pass it than to pass these bills as a mere matter of course whenever they are brought up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, it would be perhaps an improvement on the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio, with whom I have so often in old times tried to resist these bills without success, to say to the Post-Office Committee that instead of leaving it to the Postmaster-General they leave it to the postmaster who is robbed, if he is satisfied that there ought to be an adjustment of that kind, then it shall be made. [Laughter.] Now I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is the unfinished business.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator from Vermont will allow me?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. FERRY. It is due to the facts in the case, and also to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, that I should say in reply to the Senator from Ohio that if he had carefully observed the reading of the report in this case, he would have seen that all the funds in money that the postmaster held have been excluded from the relief granted by this bill. It is simply to reimburse him for registered packages over which the postmaster had no control except custody. He could not convert them into money. In all other cases except postage-stamps, which also could not be converted into money, the Post-Office Committee have adopted a rule following directly in the line of argument of the Senator from Ohio. Where property has been converted into money, in which case the postmaster can deposit that money and controls it entirely, the committee have ruled the applications out, but in the case of stamps or registered letters containing property which the postmaster cannot open and dispose of, the committee have always considered that relief may properly be granted. This is a case in point, and I think the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads are hardly subject to the indirect implication of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. THURMAN. Upon my word I cast no reflection on the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, for it has always had two-thirds or three-fourths of the Senate at its back; I should have been reflecting on the large majority of the Senate. I only rise to say that from the information which I just have for the first time as to the course now adopted by that committee, I shall not object to the bill. I am very glad to hear the principle on which they act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is the consideration of Senate bill No. 19.

Mr. INGALLS. Has not the morning hour been extended to half past one by the Anthony rule?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business of the Senate overrides that.

Mr. INGALLS. I think not during the morning hour.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. INGALLS. My understanding was that the morning hour had been extended by order of the Senate until half past one o'clock on each day by the adoption of the Anthony rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that the unfinished business of the Senate overrides that order.

Mr. INGALLS. An extraordinary ruling.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 4244) for the establishment of titles in Hot Springs, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3288) for the relief of colored emigrants.

The message also, in compliance with the request of the Senate, returned the bill (S. No. 56) for the relief of Edward Braden and J. W. Angus.

The message further announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 75) to print the eulogies delivered in the two Houses of Congress upon the late Zachariah Chandler.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. No. 185) for the relief of Gibbes & Co., of Charleston, South Carolina; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 695) for the relief of Michael Granery, Nicholas Wax, and Moliere Lange; and

An act (S. No. 317) for the relief of Captain J. B. Campbell.

MILITARY WARRANT LAND LOCATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 19) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and certify the amount of land located with military warrants in the States described therein, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the motion of Mr. EDMUNDS to postpone the bill indefinitely.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator suspend until order is restored?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly, and at the same time, Mr. President, after talking with some other Senators I wish to say what I intended to have said after the reading of the Journal this morning, that from this time forward to the end of this session I humbly and respectfully petition the Chair to direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to enforce the rules about the presence of strangers in this Chamber. It is not that I am not glad to see strangers, but it makes so much noise necessarily that it absolutely impedes business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to state, in justification of himself and the Sergeant-at-Arms, that he has given that direction daily, and that the Sergeant-at-Arms and his assistants have done their best to enforce the rule; but, despite all efforts, gentlemen are brought upon the floor of the Senate who are not entitled to admission.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then, Mr. President, I want to take the earliest possible occasion to offer a resolution which shall provide the Sergeant-at-Arms with guns, swords, pistols, dirks, bayonets, and all other necessary implements of war to see if he cannot have the rules enforced.

When I left off yesterday, Mr. President, on this interesting and important bill which involves so much money to be paid from the Treasury, many millions, and which if the principle of it be adopted involves so many more millions, suggested on one point simply by the amendment proposed by my friend from Florida, [Mr. JONES,] I had endeavored to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the lands northwest of the Ohio—and the same might be said of the others given by Georgia, &c., but I did not happen to have the book at hand to show it—were given in a solemn trust for the benefit of all the States of the Union equally, by the noble generosity of the State of Virginia, and that any payment out of the proceeds of these lands in any form or upon any valuation of them into the treasury of a particular State to be disposed of according to the will of that particular State and not for some object of general public benefit to all the people, would be a violation of that trust.

I had then endeavored to show that as it respected the State of Ohio, the first of the States admitted in the Northwest Territory, this bill provided for paying to her money that by the original compact of admission was never on any principle or under any circumstances to go to her hands at all, but it was money pledged by Congress to be expended in certain works of public improvement in the State and to it, in the methods and for the purposes provided.

I had endeavored to show, what I supposed to be clear law, and what, so far as I can understand the report of the Committee on Public Lands, does not appear to be disputed, that the legal construction in every one of these compacts, as they are called, embraced in the acts of admission of the term "net proceeds of the sales of public lands," does not include any valuation or other appropriate reference to lands that Congress from time to time, beginning with the Revolution and coming down to now, have devoted under the head of bounties to the patriotic citizens of the country who had entered its military service in time of peril.

I had also called the attention of the Senate to the universal circumstance in every one of the acts of admission of these States, that the 5 per cent., however broad the field of subjects that it covered, whether bounty lands or railway grants, or salt springs, or school lands, or homesteads, or as the acts say always, the net proceeds of the sales of public lands, was made a trust fund, (to state it in the strongest way that my friend from Indiana in charge of the bill would wish me to state it in favor of his side of the case) a trust fund, to be devoted sometimes by Congress, sometimes by the State, sometimes partly by one and partly by the other, but in every instance to some object specifically named that it was supposed would promote the general welfare of all the people of the United States. This bill simply provides that 5 per cent. of the valuation of these bounty lands shall be paid over to these respective States without any trust at all.

Then, Mr. President, I had commenced to call your attention to the argument in the report of this committee on the subject of consideration. The committee in its report says that there was a good consideration for the promise by the United States to devote 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of these public lands to the objects named. I grant it; and if there were not a good consideration, the faith of Congress undoubtedly whether you can make out what in law would be called a consideration or not, is a faith that I for one am quite willing to carry out. The question, therefore, is not whether there was a consideration, but the question is what the United States promised for that consideration or for general considerations of public faith and public prosperity. Whatever the United States has promised, that we ought to do; what she has not promised we ought not to do unless it now appears that considerations of public welfare generally require us to deposit in the treasuries of these several States these sums of money to be ascertained in a certain way.

But the equity of the thing, as it is called, has been placed upon the ground that the States engaged not to tax the lands sold by the United States, and in other instances not to tax lands granted for military bounties by the United States for a certain length of time, and that that was an onerous burden imposed upon the States by the compact, which gives these States in equity and justice a title to have the word "sale" stretched sufficiently to cover, as this bill does, revolutionary land warrants, bounty lands, bounty lands in all the Indian wars which are referred to in the various acts, the war of 1812, the Mexican war, and the war of the rebellion. Now let us see how that is.

As I stated yesterday, the judges of the courts of the States and of the United States in these States, in the time of it, many years ago, always upheld the provision of the compact forbidding taxation for a limited time, in opinions which persistently stated in administering justice there that it was an object of the highest interest to these new States to promote the rapid increase of their population and the development of their industries. It was therefore a wise policy on the part of the States to agree to that; and if that be so—and the States certainly ought to have been the judges of it—there would be no general equity that a tax should be laid upon all the lands given to soldiers as bounties, past, present, and to come, in order to pay something into the treasuries of these States. But when the States began to fill up rapidly and new enterprises made it seem pretty clear that this limitation was not necessary to encourage emigration to the new States, even this tax limit, on bills introduced by Senators and Representatives was repealed in 1847, and that repeal of the limitation upon the power of the States to tax the lands within five years as to sales and three years as to the bounties, referred to as bounties, was made to apply to all States admitted before the 24th of April, 1820; that is to say, down to and including the admission of the State of Missouri. Even then, in the discussion of that question, I have not been able to find that any Senator or Representative from any one of these States hinted or appeared to suspect that a wrong construction had been put upon this statute by the officers of the United States, or that justice or fair dealing required that the words "net proceeds of the sales" should be expanded to include military bounties. That had not been thought of.

Then every State admitted after the 24th of April, 1820, did not engage not to tax lands sold by the United States within any length of time, but every State admitted after that was left with the right to tax the lands sold by the United States at the moment of sale. There were several States after that which came into the Union, in whose acts of admission it was agreed that while the 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of the lands should be devoted sometimes by Congress and sometimes by the State (which I need not go over again) to certain public uses for the benefit of all the people, nevertheless the bounty lands—a different thing as these States and Congress appeared to understand—should not be taxed for three years. This was declared as to the bounty lands, while the right to tax the sold lands by the same acts accrued at the moment of sale. That of course would fortify, if it needed any fortification, the proposition I advanced yesterday that under no possible construction of law or common sense can it be said that the word "sale" in the connection in which it is used in all these acts covers anything but a sale for cash, and that the "net proceeds" referred to money and not to the services of citizens of the United States who undertook to carry on its wars and to defend its honor.

I may mention merely in passing that long ago when Congress by act reduced the price at which originally the public lands were held, the question arose whether that was a violation of the compact in the admission of those States that were admitted at a time when the price fixed by law was greater than that to which Congress reduced it. The law officer of the Government, the Attorney-General of the United States, examined the subject and delivered an opinion to the President or the head of some Department—I do not remember which—an opinion that was acquiesced in by everybody, in which he said that even in that case it was no violation of the compact between the United States and these various States to reduce the price of the lands. Why? Because he said this provision for 5 per cent. of the proceeds was a provision to devote a certain part of the public revenue to certain uses that would specially benefit the people of these new States and generally benefited the people of all the other States by building works of public improvement generally and sometimes by assisting them to establish free universities of education, and therefore that these compacts could not be construed in any possible light as impairing in any degree the sovereign power of Congress over the disposition of the public lands. It was only a pledge that whatever revenue Congress should derive into its Treasury from the disposition of these lands by sale, one-twentieth of it should be devoted to these purposes. If that be so, is it not very clear that this claim is unfounded?

Mr. McDONALD. I ask the Senator to cite me to the opinion of the Attorney-General.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I cannot at this moment, but I will give it to the Senator in a little while. I think it is in print. Certainly there was one, and I will give the Senator a reference to it after a while.

The States in which these military bounty lands, as they were always called—not consideration lands, not payment lands, but bounty lands—are separately mentioned in some form or other in the acts of admission themselves, are Illinois, Missouri, Arkansas, Michigan, Iowa, five in all. After getting down to Iowa, they evidently stopped mentioning the military bounty lands for the simple reason that after that time there is no provision for exemption from taxation even of the bounty lands. As I have shown you, the exemption from taxation of the sold lands was repealed long before, but there still continued for a while a limitation and preservation of non-taxation for the bounty lands, and that was dropped at last, the last State to which it applied being, I think, Iowa.

Mr. THURMAN. If my friend will allow me, I want to get some light. When the provision in respect to the taxation of these lands was dropped, was anything substituted to the State? Was there not a 10 per cent. increase of some kind?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir. The 10 per cent. increase was in 1841, I think.

Mr. THURMAN. Was the exemption of lands from taxation dropped before that?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, it was dropped after that, in 1847, but it was made to affect States admitted before the 24th of April, 1820; but every State admitted after the 24th of April, 1820, never had any such limitation applied to it, so that it let the whole thing out. When I say it never had any such limitation applied to it, I mean the limitation of taxation on the sold lands because there was still a reservation of taxation in many of the States against bounty lands for three years.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. And the Government lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, that exists in them all. The exception of the Government lands from taxation, I undertook to state yesterday, in my opinion was an exception which was not made a part of the compact to create a new right in the Government of the United States that it did not possess before, but to save all matter of dispute and misunderstanding respecting what the rights of the United States and the States were; and so that provision was in all the acts, and of course always must be, as I believe on principles that are of reciprocal benefit and reciprocal application as between the States and the United States for all time to come about their respective properties. I hope all the State-rights men will stick by me on that.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to open a new branch of this subject to such Senators as do me the honor to listen; and that is that all the benefits of the 5 per cent. provision being as I have shown trust benefits for public improvements that would benefit primarily the residents of the State, and secondarily the residents of all the other States, since that time and during this long period when this one course of construction of these acts has been held to and applied, equivalent benefits of the same kind have been granted by Congress to every one of these States, some more and some less it is true, but equivalent benefits to them all, exceeding by many, many fold the 5 per cent. that is now claimed on military bounty lands, and upon homestead lands as is claimed by the Senator from Florida, and by the same sign, the railroad lands and the ten thousand other objects for which these lands have been disposed of.

In the first place, this question of the public lands and the excess of benefits that the new States where they lay were getting from them in spite of the solemn provision in the cession of Virginia, and I believe also of Georgia—but I do not speak by the book as to what she gave—came to the attention of Congress in 1841, and then after full consideration a bill was passed which provided for distributing according to the original grant of Virginia the proceeds of the sales of the lands among all the States, to execute in its terms and in its spirit this munificent grant and trust that the noble State of Virginia, I may say the mother of the country as much as the mother of Presidents, in those days had bestowed. And then in the same act that provided for the distribution of the proceeds of the sales of the lands among all the States, it was provided that in addition to the 5 per cent. of the sales that had been provided for before, 10 per cent. more should be reserved from the sales before distribution should be made to all the stockholders in the partnership of the Union, and that 10 per cent. additional should be given to these several States for objects of internal improvements within their borders. It provided also, I beg Senators to understand, that each one of the new States should have five hundred thousand acres of land to be selected by herself out of the public domain. Then it provided after all that should be done, that the balance of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, after paying all expenses, should be divided among the several States. Then it had a provision which some very astute person must have put in I suppose, that in case of war or any other great emergency this distribution of the proceeds of the balance of these sales among the States should stop; and so in a very few months the great public emergency that came was a new tariff act, and as a part of the compromise, or whatever it might be called to get that act through, this provision for dividing the balance among the several States was repealed; but it left the new States with their 10 per cent. for the time it had been going, and also (which is more important because the time was so short that the 10 per cent. would not amount to a great deal) it left unrepealed the five-hundred-thousand-acre provision for each one of the new States.

Now I beg to ask Senators who represent the States that are supposed to be benefited by this bill, and I ask them with the same freedom that I would ask any others because I am sure they will take a somewhat broader than a selfish view of this matter, if under such circumstances when there was then no claim that the Government was perverting the construction of these statutes by not giving over 5 per cent. of all that ought to be given over, or if there was, if Congress not doing it said to these various States "now we will give you for these same general objects, internal improvements, &c., in your borders, five hundred thousand acres apiece," which would make at this dollar-and-a-quarter valuation $625,000 in cash; if each State takes it without any protest or limitation or reservation of the right now to get 5 per cent. on the military bounty lands or the railroad lands or the homestead lands, is it just, is it honorable, is it that kind of conduct which should exist between man and man and friend and friend, to lie by for fifteen or twenty years and take these enormous grants and then come back and say, "why here all this time there has been a misconstruction of the original contract of fifty years ago, and under that construction at the time you gave me five hundred thousand acres of land, at the time you gave me $625,000 in cash or more, I had a right to demand 5 per cent. of the military bounty land warrants that you have given to your soldiers in most instances as an act of gratitude for past services, in some it is true as an inducement to enlist, and now after I have pocketed so that you cannot get it back this half million acres of land I will come forward with this claim that I said nothing about then, and ask you to pay me that debt?" Why, Mr. President, it does seem to me that it only needs to put such a question to find its answer.

Besides that, you will find that from year to year and from time to time there were special grants to various of these States, perhaps to all of them,—but I am not now speaking of specific States, I am speaking of the whole subject in its general aspect—for special improvements, to Indiana for canals, to Mississippi for levees, to Alabama for the improvement of rivers, and so on. And then the acts which gave these lands from time to time required that they should be faithfully devoted to these objects, which made a trust, and the State could not give a good title until it showed that it had executed the trust. What happened next? Then came an act of Congress, undoubtedly agreeable to if not solicited by these States, which said that we would not mind that, but that all the titles which had been granted for either of these objects should convey a fee-simple to the States, so that they could make a perfect title and could lawfully dispose of the lands without any duty upon the part of anybody except the general duty of the State in its sovereign capacity to see to the application of the trust-money derived from the sales. Congress passed that; and yet when this enormous benefit to these States was obtained, no Senator or Representative rose in his place and said, "Now bear in mind when you are conferring all these benefits upon us at our suggestion, when you are making all these special grants for the objects named in our original act of admission, but which you are not bound to make—the same objects that you agreed to give 5 per cent. for you now give 50—bear in mind that we claim that the true construction of these original acts is that the 5 per cent. is to be cast upon all bounty lands and all other dispositions by the United States not for money." Not at all; they were silent; they took the benefit without disclosing that they had any claim lying back, of the same nature, which they proposed to enforce afterward.

Mr. President, I may say here, to avoid an implication, that I do not think any Senator or Representative failed to do his duty, because I do not think any Senator or Representative ever had it enter into his mind that under any possible construction of these compacts of admission could the sovereign power of disposition by the United States of its lands for other objects than sales for cash affect any equity or justice or law growing out of these existing compacts. They did not think the law meant that. They knew that the bounty lands were being disposed of. They were part and parcel of the representation in this Chamber and in the other when we disposed of them, and in many of the acts of admission, as I have stated, they are specifically referred to as not falling under the head of sales.

Then these very acts of admission provide for the reservation under special objects and with severe limitations of all the salt springs, a certain number to the State, and other salt springs were reserved to the United States. What came next? Wherever there was a salt spring, in a few years on somebody's application Congress released all that liability and duty, gave up the salt springs to the States. Wherever it turned out apparently that there were not any salt springs, then on the application of the States Congress gave them seventy-two sections—I think I am right in the number—of other lands in the place of a salt spring that did not exist that was reserved to the State in the act of admission.

And yet gentlemen seem to say that there is some overpowering equity and justice that we have not done freely, and nobly, and dutifully by these States in respect of this matter of the 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the public lands within their borders for these objects; but nobody said then, "there is still lying back a claim for 5 per cent. on everything that is disposed of that is not disposed of for cash."

Then we come to the swamp lands, which in many of these States are of enormous extent, and some of them, I have been told—not in connection with this affair, but some others—of such a character that it is absolutely impossible to drain them at all, not because of the water, but because of the want of water; that you may dig just as many ditches as you like, but there is no water to run in them; and which lands have been allotted to the States and selected by them as swamp lands and confirmed, on their application, by acts of Congress. There is in a report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office before me a statement of the number of acres of swamp lands which have been selected by these States, which it may be worth while to look at. In the report for 1878—that of 1879 is not yet in print—at page 167 is a condensed statement, No. 5, exhibiting the quantity of land patented to the several States under the acts of Congress approved, &c., giving a list of them.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the Senator reading from now?

Mr. EDMUNDS. From the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the year 1878, and it is embodied in the report of the Secretary of the Interior to Congress, House of Representatives, Forty-fifth Congress, third session, Executive Document No. 1, part 5. It there appears that since the date the grants began in 1849 to the State of Louisiana and going on to the 28th of September, 1850, and to March 12, 1860, and so on, that the total quantity patented to the several States amounts to 48,119,956.78 acres. There, leaving off the quarter of a dollar, are $48,000,000. Of course it may be said and justly that many of these lands are not worth a dollar an acre; they may be incapable of reclamation. That may be so; but of the public lands vast quantities of which we all know are among the finest lands in any of the States, those that are called swamp lands will raise the most rice, the most cotton, the most corn, the most everything that goes to the benefit of man and the prosperity of the commonwealth; and yet Congress, with this so-called liability to pay 5 per cent. on the disposition of these public lands not for cash that is embodied in the principle of this bill, has on application of these new States and by the votes of their representatives, and without reminding anybody that there was anything lying back about this business that would have to be paid for afterward, taken forty-eight million acres of the public lands into their own property and at their entire free disposition. Is there any ground in the light of such a circumstance to endeavor by some sort of construction that never has been successful for fifty years if it has ever been tried, and that I cannot learn has ever been definitively tried,—is it quite right after fifty years to say that any principle of justice or equity or breadth of construction calls upon the Congress of the United States to pay 5 per cent. into the treasuries of these States on account of this long misconstruction of the acts of admission? I have some confidence, great confidence, that when Senators from these States themselves that are supposed to be the beneficiaries of it come to examine this question, they will be free to say that there is no justification in insisting upon such a further application of the public funds of the United States.

Then, Mr. President, to say nothing of the special grants for roads, canals, &c., what have we granted to States for the benefit of railroads and for which we got a certain kind of consideration, quite as much as we did for the bounty lands that we disposed of, because in almost all of them we made a special arrangement about the transmission of the mails and public supplies? Let us see how much has been given to railroads and to the States for railroads.

But before I come to that I must correct what I have said about the swamp lands. I did not state correctly the quantity that the States had become entitled to. I only stated the quantity for which patents had actually issued. I now turn to the preceding page of the report to which I before referred and state the quantity which has been selected by the States and to which they are entitled, and that instead of being forty-eight millions is 68,533,755.25 acres, twenty million acres more than that for which patents had been actually issued at the date of this report, and I apologize to my friend from Indiana for having apparently misled him in the statement of a fact upon which I rely.

Now I come to the railroads. There has been conceded to the States for the benefit of railways and to the railways in the States authorized by the States to take them—I will leave out the Pacific Railroad to begin with, for that grant was said to be a national affair though many of its branches are within the States and I will take the railroad lines covering the States of Illinois, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, Iowa, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Kansas. Of the Pacific States Oregon does not appear to be in this particular statement, which ought to be added. For these purposes the grants of land reach 34,125,446.44 acres. Add the Pacific railroads which are in a large part owing to their many spreading branches corporations in the States and in regard to which the States get the benefit of these dispositions, 9,017,981.7 acres. Then the grants for wagon roads are, Wisconsin, 302,930.36 acres; Michigan, 221,013.35; Oregon, 744,712.93. Thus there is a total, after deducting lands declared forfeited by Congress because the public works were not built, of 43,744,342.39 acres granted to the States, not to corporations. If I stated corporations before I stated wrong. This amount has been granted to States for the benefit of these roads.

Then there are rights of way granted to railway companies in the States and Territories, chartered by the States, too numerous for me to read here.

Next we come to the bounty lands which of course are not granted to the States, and I only put them in so that this statement of sums may all go together. Under the acts of 1847, 1850, 1852, and 1855 down to the 30th of June, 1878, the issues and locations of bounty land warrants had been: land warrants for 60,986,070 acres of land had been issued, and there had been located 58,357,090 acres of land. This near sixty-one million acres at a dollar and a quarter an acre would make about $75,000,000, and 5 per cent. of that, as anybody can see, is in round numbers about $4,000,000.

Mr. McDONALD. I can give the Senator the exact figures of the land-warrant entries according to a statement furnished by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will pardon me, I have the exact statement myself, furnished by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. McDONALD. Perhaps this is more correct information.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator can put it in his speech. I take the Commissioner's printed report for 1878.

Mr. McDONALD. This statement covers that year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If they differ, I do not know which we shall follow. I am quoting the printed report for 1878, found in the document I have named, at the page I have stated, and that number of acres, at $1.25 an acre would produce, at 5 per cent., which is the operation of this bill, to be exact about it, the sum of $3,811,629.30, which is exactly the sum, according to this printed report, that is to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States or that we are to create a public debt for, for the benefit of the treasuries of these several States according to their respective locations.

Mr. CONKLING. Is that the amount this bill allows?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the amount that is covered by the land warrants located under the act of 1847 and subsequent acts. Besides, there are the revolutionary land warrants, the Virginia land warrants, the land warrants of the war of 1812 under statutes existing before the acts of 1847 and 1850 and 1852 and 1855, which were mere increases of the amount of military locations to other persons who did not come in under the former laws. I have endeavored to find, but I could not lay my hands upon it, some report that would show the total amount of land warrants that had been issued under laws prior to the act of 1847.

Mr. McDONALD. The Senator does not wish to be inaccurate, of course?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not inaccurate in the statement. I have merely stated that I have hunted for it and could not find it.

Mr. McDONALD. I have the statement of the Commissioner that from the commencement of the operations under the several acts to December, 1879, warrants for 63,170,764.74 acres have been issued.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us see what we have got here. With the permission of my honorable friend from Indiana, I will read the context of the paper he has handed me, so as to be sure, and see what the Commissioner does say:

GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 26, 1880.

Gov. R. P. LOWE,
Washington, D. C.:

SIR: In reply to your verbal inquiry relative to the quantity of land located with military bounty land warrants up to date in all the States, I have to inform you that the records of this office show an aggregate location from the commencement of the operations under the several acts to December, 1879, of 63,170,764.74 acres, distributed as follows.

And then he gives the distribution. I should like to know from the Senator, who perhaps can tell me, what the Commissioner means by the words "several acts?" You will see that in his official report all that he chooses to give Congress or the Secretary of the Interior, and it is so running back, is the operations under the acts of 1847, 1850, 1852, and 1855, up to a certain time, and there he makes the issue 60,986,070 acres, which was a year ago. Now, he makes it 63,170,764, which would only account for another year's locations possibly, and I should be glad to know definitely from somebody who wishes to convince the Senate that this bill ought to pass,—although to be sure if it rests on solid principles of justice the quantity of money taken from the Treasury has nothing to do with it; if it bankrupts the Treasury in the name of justice and honor we must strip ourselves and stop our own salaries and so forth in order to perform this high and solemn act of public duty; that is clear enough; but at the same time the sentimental part of it may be affected by its practical effect on the poor tax-payer who has to pay this money; and so I should be glad to know how much, under all the acts that preceded 1847, has been summed up by the issue of military land warrants. That does not appear from this statement. Perhaps it is included in it, but I should doubt it very much.

Mr. McDONALD. I understand that it covers all embraced in this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let me understand the Senator. Does he mean by that to say that it covers all the military bounty land warrants ever issued by the United States or under its authority?

Mr. McDONALD. All the military bounty land warrants that have been located within these States, issued by the Government at any time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If that is correct, that being the Senator's opinion——

Mr. McDONALD. And all military scrip that has been issued for the payment of soldiers by the Government at any time and located within these States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. "Military scrip" is merely another name of saying military bounty land warrant; the scrip results in a land warrant; it all comes to the same thing. It is the bounty given to the soldier for the service which he has performed. If the Senator is right about that, then the amount of military scrip, as he calls it, of bounty lands, as I call them, that were given to the soldiers of the Revolution under the acts of Virginia and Georgia, and under the acts of the Continental Congress and under the acts of the Congress of the United States, and to the soldiers of the war of 1812 by acts previous to 1847, and in respect of all the Indian wars occurring between that time as well, I must say is amazingly small.

Mr. McDONALD. I have not said that it embraced any bounties granted by the State of Virginia when she owned the Northwest Territory, nor any State bounties of any kind; but I say that it embraces all, as I understand, issued by the United States, either in the form of military scrip or bounty land warrants that have been located within the States named in this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That may be so, and it may not. The Senator so understands it, but he understands it so from this letter that I have read. I do not understand it so from this letter. The letter is much more difficult of construction than the act admitting the State of Indiana is, and it is a singular thing—undoubtedly it can be explained by the committee or by the Commissioner of the General Land Office—that we are given in none of these reports that I have been able to lay my hand upon, a statement of the military bounty land business and the military scrip business, except under the operation of acts of Congress beginning in 1847, which is a half a century after the origin of bounty land warrants and their location. How many acres of land that half century covers I do not know; but this bill covers all the military scrip and land warrants in these eighteen States under any authority whatever, because it says "to ascertain the amount of public lands entered by the location of military scrip and land warrants" in the States named. It does not limit it even to lands located under the authority of the United States and by its grace or bounty or debt, whatever you call it, but it is every land warrant and every piece of military scrip, whether it came from the original proprietor of these lands, the State of Virginia, or whether it came from the Congress of the United States in the half century that elapsed after that gift was made. So, Mr. President, we are in the dark as to how much is covered really by this bill, but what is covered by it certainly is about $4,000,000 at this present moment on operations arising since the year 1847.

Now I come to another point that I should be glad to have the attention of Senators to. I have shown, what is not capable I suppose of contradiction, that every particle of this 5 per cent., whatever it covered, was money to be devoted to certain public uses which would be for the benefit of the people of all the United States. Has the 5 per cent. that has been paid over to these States for these public uses been applied to these objects, or are these States themselves in default in respect of the execution of this trust? And if they have taken the 5 per cent. on sales and have not applied it in the way that the acts of admission required that they should, is there any grace or justice in their coming to the Treasury and saying "Give us more on other items?"

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Is there any information showing that the States have not appropriated this fund in the way prescribed by Congress? In the case of my State it was distinctly stipulated, I think, that the 5 per cent. should be appropriated for educational purposes, and I presume that it has been appropriated in that way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That might be a good presumption in point of law, but it would be a very violent presumption in point of fact; and the Senator, with his keen knowledge of the difference between law and fact sometimes in presumptions, is very careful to state it the law way. My information is, derived in part from a perusal of public documents where attention has been called to the subject, that the States did not account for and apply this money as the compacts required; and debates in Congress and private information received from Senators lead me to state plainly and explicitly that I have good reason to believe and do believe that in a great many instances and in a great many ways the States which received the 3 per cent. or the 5 per cent., as the case may be, have not devoted it within the letter or the spirit of the compacts of their admission. I do not mean to say that these States have undertaken——

Mr. McDONALD rose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator will be good enough to wait a moment. He will excuse me until I finish this sentence. I do not mean to say that these States have undertaken to steal this money, but I say it is the natural course that might perhaps be expected to happen, that where money is paid over into the treasury of a State to be devoted to such objects of internal improvement as the Legislature should direct, which is about the substance of the language in some of the cases, the 3 per cent. that is to be paid, the 2 being to be spent by Congress, if it happened that the Legislature could not for ten or a dozen years find out exactly which turnpike or exactly which canal corporation should be benefited by having an aid out of this money, which would not be thought to be a very unjust and iniquitous performance, being simply non-action, by and by the thing is lost sight of, as things are in the Senate, as we know day after day and session after session, and it goes by, and the money goes into the common fund and the taxpayer gets the benefit of it. If we had an account stated by these claiming States, just as they would be obliged to do if they were a private party and came forward against the United States by a bill in equity to compel the further execution of this trust upon the principle that the 5 per cent. had not been computed on the whole subject that it ought to have been,—in such a bill the State would have been obliged to state that acting as a trustee and claiming more it had devoted the funds it had got to the objects named in the original foundation of the trust, and how, and to render an account. If we had such an account from these States, we should be able to judge then how it was.

Now I will listen to my friend from Indiana.

Mr. McDONALD. I simply desire to state, as to the 3 per cent. of the 5 per cent. reserved to the State of Indiana to be devoted to constructing works of internal improvement, my State has expended over $15,000,000 in that way. If the Senator insists that this 3 per cent. when received should be put upon a particular turnpike by an act of the Legislature, that a specific appropriation should be made of it to build a turnpike from A to B, or a railroad, or to go into some particular canal, or to construct a lock or something of that kind, I can tell him that has never been done in my State, and I suppose not in any other State. But I again repeat that the State has raised and expended—using this money, as a matter of course, in common with other funds—an amount over $15,000,000 in constructing works of improvement within our State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In the next place, Mr. President, supposing that the theory of original compact is right as claimed in this bill and that by a true construction, an equitable construction of the compact with these States, it was the duty of Congress to provide for computing 5 per cent. of the military bounty lands, for what objects was it to be? It was for objects of internal improvement or education, special trusts of some kind in every one of these States. As to 2 per cent. of it, in almost all the cases the internal improvements, &c., were not to be constructed in the State at all. If the Government fails to do its duty to provide this fund, what is the consequence? Does it follow from that that the State has a right to the money? By no means. Its right would be the specific performance of a particular trust that I repeat appears everywhere as a trust in favor of all the people of the United States and not the corporation that, in a technical sense exists within the boundaries of a State and constitutes the State. There is not a single dollar of this money on any theory that has ever been advanced on these acts, or can be, that belongs to the State of Indiana——

Mr. McDONALD. The Senator will remember that there was an act passed at the last session of Congress by the Senate enabling the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois to bring suit for that 2 per cent. It did not pass into a law, for want of sufficient time, but the Senator will have an opportunity of discussing when that bill comes up the question he is upon now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I propose to discuss now the question I am now upon. That is exactly the question in point.

Mr. McDONALD. If the Senator entertains the same opinion then that he does now, he will certainly give us that law and enable us to try in the highest court of the country our title to that fund.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am very glad my honorable friend from Indiana feels encouraged that, as I am not for this bill, I shall be for some other. Very likely I shall. Whenever the Senator brings forward a bill that I think I ought to go for, I will do so with the greatest pleasure.

Now, after he has put in a little petition for the other little bill, as it might be called, the 2 per cent. bill, I will return to this and repeat so that nobody shall misunderstand it, that there is not a dollar of this 5 per cent. or 2 per cent. or 3 per cent. that by force of these original compacts belongs to any one of these States or ever did, because there is a specific and special trust declared as to the devotion of the money to public objects; and with what faith is it that the guardian of the Treasury of the United States, the tribunal, the Senate, that stands between the tax-payer and claimants impartial and just can say, even if it were true that this trust is not executed, that this money is to be paid over to the treasuries of these States as this bill provides? If there is any duty upon the Government of the United States, it is the duty to see to it that some further 5 per cent. on the bounty lands, which is now the entering wedge in this business, shall be applied to the objects named in the original compacts. And what were those? Two per cent., two-fifths of it in general,—some of the later acts were in other language, but generally two-fifths of it to be applied to objects of internal improvement in the State, and three-fifths of it to be applied to objects of internal improvement exterior to the State. Does that give the State a right to come here and say, "You have not executed this trust as you ought to have done; you have not furnished us the means of executing the trust as far as it was our duty to execute it; now do it." Do it how? "Do it by giving us without any trust stated in the bill anywhere, as a final settlement and estoppel as it is called, or as an accord and satisfaction, wiping out everything, so much solid money into our treasuries." Is that right? Is that in accordance with the compacts? No, Mr. President; and if this were a case between private persons, if it were ever so clear that 5 per cent. ought to be computed on these lands, an account taken would not require the 5 per cent. to be paid over to the claimant. It would either require a specific execution of the trust by the expenditure of 3 per cent. of it in those cases by Congress for objects outside of the State, or require it to be consolidated by showing how much damage the State had suffered in dollars from the non-execution of the trust. One of those two courses would have to be followed; but yet it is proposed by this committee's bill to absolutely take $4,000,000, to begin with, on this mere hang-nail on principle and pay it out of the Treasury of the United States and into the treasuries of these respective States.

I do not think it ought to be done, Mr. President, and I believe now I have said for the present about all that I need to say except this, which is another subject I should like to hear from my friend from Indiana upon in connection with this business: The acts of admission of these various States, some if not all of them, provide only for paying 5 per cent. upon future sales of the public lands. Now suppose bounty lands come within the head of sales, then it is future locations of bounty lands as standing in the place of sales on which the 5 per cent. should be computed. The bill of the committee provides that past locations long before these States were admitted, in many of the later ones involving very large amounts, shall all be summed up and paid into the treasury of the State. Is that right on the Senator's own principle? He says the contract is that he shall have 5 per cent. on future sales after a certain date named in the act of admission. When he comes to provide for performing that contract he says there shall not be any such limitation of time at all, but all that has been disposed of before the State was admitted shall be computed also. Well, that is about as right as the rest of it. Perhaps I am presenting a distinction which is not worth noticing in the general aspect of this affair; but there it is, and the only State I think that would be entitled on this bill to go backward is the State of Nebraska. There I think for the first time through the patriotic kindness of Congress—I will put it in that way—the language is "past and future sales." The word "past" crept in in some way so that we should not forget that there had been a past I suppose; but as to all the other States, I suspect it is not there. But the bill covers all.

Mr. President, these are the grounds upon which I am unable to support this bill, and they can be summed up, stated in the briefest possible way, thus:

First. The bounty lands were clearly not within the contract as proceeds of sales.

Second. They were in many of the acts distinguished by name from lands sold, which merely fortifies the preceding proposition.

Third. The greater part of the bounty lands were bestowed as an act of gratitude for military service, and therefore do not fall within the argument of the committee even that they were given as a consideration, just as money might have been, for the performance of the service in the future, upon which great stress is laid by these acts. Even the one of 1847, the bounty land act for the Mexican war, was passed only a few months before the end of the war, and after which it is doubtful if there were five hundred soldiers enlisted.

Fourth. Although bounty lands have existed from the first, the States and Congress have always until recently and, as far as I am advised, by any bill or definite step until this moment, construed the compact as not embracing them or acquiesced in such a construction if the question has ever been raised.

Fifth. If bounty lands are within these compacts, so are all grants of every kind except the merest possible donation of a gift to some poor widow as a mere act of grace and generosity. Clearly the Senator from Florida is right in his amendment if this bill is right at all. Clearly some other Senator would be right in seeking to include every railroad grant, no matter whether it was made to the State or not. The committee say it would be rather hard-commons for the State to take a railroad grant and then say it is entitled to 5 per cent. on it. I do not see it if this bill is right. I do not see why it does not cover the whole thing if it does anything.

Sixth. The 5 per cent. and the 3 and the 2, parts of the 5 per cent., as the case may be, were always expressly devoted to some purpose of general welfare to all the people of the United States, and a failure by the United States to apply all as agreed upon can give no right to any State to take this money to herself.

Seventh. The United States has given, and these States have received without setting up this claim, gifts, grants, and donations of land many times greater than 5 per cent. of all the bounty lands and all the other lands which were ever disposed of by the United States, and for the same general and specific objects named in the acts of admission in these respective States, and they have therefore no claim in justice or equity to more.

Eighth. The States, or many of them, it is understood, have not applied the moneys they have received to the objects required by the acts, and so have no right, even if the trust did exist, to demand a performance by the United States.

This is all I wish to say at present, sir.

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. President, the bill under consideration is not before the Senate for the first time. At the last Congress a bill embracing the same general features and covering the same general purposes was reported by the Committee on Public Lands and placed upon the Calendar and to a certain extent considered. The subject is one that has been very frequently before the Land Committees of both Houses of Congress. Certainly, since I have had the honor of a seat in this body, it has been a subject that has engaged the attention of the Committee on Public Lands at every session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator tell me the first bill he remembers on this subject?

Mr. McDONALD. The first bill that I remember on this subject was the one I have just referred to, reported by the Committee on Public Lands at the last Congress, reported by the then chairman, the late Senator from Illinois, Mr. Oglesby, but the subject was not a new one when that bill was framed.

The committee have given quite earnest attention to the subject embraced in this bill, and have endeavored to arrive at what they believe to be right in the premises.

It surprised me yesterday to hear the Senator from Vermont question whether the States that are entitled to the benefits of this bill have ever made prior claims. I know that at least in one of the States involved in this question this has been a subject of frequent complaint. How far the complaints there have ever been made manifest here, I am unable to say, but mine being one of the States affected by the disabling provision in the ordinance in reference to the taxation of property, I know that there as long as that disqualification continued it was a subject of very general complaint. Being also one of the States in which large bodies of land were taken up by land-warrant entries, also claiming this exemption from taxation and securing it, if that complaint did not reach Washington City, it was certainly not because it was not intended to reach there. But Mr. President, in the report which the committee at this session have submitted in support of this bill, and which is substantially the report agreed to and submitted at the last Congress, the Senator from Vermont takes exception to the first statement contained in it, which is as follows:

The Government of the United States in receiving the Western and Southern States into the Union stipulated in their several acts of admission to pay them 5 per cent. upon the sales of the public lands situated therein.

He insists in the very outset that this declaration is not sustained by the laws and by the usage of the Government under those laws. I think I shall be able to show that this statement of the report is substantially correct. Whether it is critically correct, as the Senator has endeavored to show that it is not, I shall not stop to inquire. It will certainly be enough on a question of this kind if it shall be found that it is substantially true and substantially correct.

The enabling acts passed under which new States were admitted, beginning with the State of Ohio in 1802 and extending down to the admission of Missouri in 1820, as one of the conditions upon which this reservation of 5 per cent. rested, prohibited those States from taxing any of the lands sold until five years after entry. These States were admitted in the following order: Ohio in 1802, Indiana in 1816, Mississippi in 1817, Alabama March 2, 1819, and Missouri March 6, 1820, and these are the only States to which this particular restriction was applied.

There was, also, in the enabling acts for the admission of these States a division of this 5 per cent. With respect to Ohio and Indiana and Illinois 2 per cent. was reserved, to be expended in public improvements under the direction of Congress. The same reservation extended to the other three States as to the 2 per cent. With respect to the 3 per cent. Ohio and Indiana were required to expend that in public improvements, Illinois in encouraging education, Alabama and Mississippi in levee improvements, and Missouri in roads and canals.

The policy of the General Government with respect to the public lands within the new States that were organized, embracing the public domain, may be said to have been inaugurated by the enabling act under which the State of Ohio was admitted, and the purpose of favoring the new States with respect to these public lands was undoubtedly to put the State in a condition to begin to make this kind of improvements necessary for its development. The whole of the 5 per cent. was to be used in public improvements, a part of it by the State itself or under its direction, and the other under the direction of Congress, in the construction of a road or roads leading from the Atlantic seaboard to the State of Ohio, or through it. At that time the construction of the Cumberland road was in progress, and it was supposed then that it was to become a great thoroughfare of trade and travel. The improvements that have since displaced that kind of public highway for any such purpose as interstate commerce and trade had not been developed, and the best line of improvement it was supposed, so far as that country was concerned, was to construct a turnpike road, and the Cumberland road was projected to extend from Baltimore to the city of Jefferson in Missouri; and unquestionably the enabling act of the State of Ohio was more or less affected by that consideration in regard to the reservation of this percentage on the sales of public lands. The same influence, to a certain extent, undoubtedly affected the provisions under which the State of Indiana was admitted. It had less influence on the State of Illinois, because there 3 per cent. of the 5 the State was authorized to devote to educational purposes.

But almost immediately upon the passage of the act by which the State of Ohio was admitted into the Union the United States commenced a regular account with that State for 3 per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, and paid over at stated periods to the State of Ohio that 3 per cent. in money. It is true the act did not declare that this money should be paid over or that it should be a payment to the State; but in execution of the law, almost from the very beginning, commencing with the year 1804 and extending down as long as there were public lands in the State of Ohio for sale, the 3 per cent. of the 5 was paid over regularly at stated periods in money to the State of Ohio, and the Government did not complain that the State of Ohio was not investing that money in improvements in the State. The object and purpose of it was to stimulate such improvements. Certainly it was not to be a distinct improvement fund separate from any other that the State might desire to invest or find it necessary to invest; but it was to aid to stimulate the State to enter upon improvements that should develop the resources of the country, and it went into that fund. And now to say that the State of Ohio has not disposed of this five or six hundred thousand dollars that have been paid to her from the time of her admission in 1802 down until the last of the lands were sold in that State, according to the terms of the grant because an account is not rendered here for it, when it is a well-known fact that not merely this sum but millions of money in addition have been used in the State of Ohio in accomplishing the very purpose for which this fund was to be devoted, will not do. I do not suppose it will be claimed that in order to administer this fund the State shall be compelled to show that the 3 per cent. thus received was specifically appropriated to some specific work. If it went into the funds of the treasury of the State and those funds were paid out by millions in constructing these very works, in developing the country, in doing precisely what the object and purpose of this provision was, then I say there has been a complete performance of it; and the Government has never stopped to question it, but has paid over from quarter to quarter as the money was received into the Treasury down to the last acre of lands sold on cash sales.

I might say precisely the same of the State of Indiana and of the State of Illinois; and so far as the use by the State of Illinois of the 3 per cent. fund in behalf of the common schools is concerned, the magnificent endowment of the common schools in that State does not rest upon the mere pittance that the State received from the General Government. It may have gone into it as one block of marble in the structure, but that is all. The people of the State of Illinois, by taxation and by other resources provided by her constitution and laws, built up that educational structure in which this has formed some part; but is the State of Illinois called upon now to point out the particular corner in that structure that this 3 per cent. has gone into?

And with respect to my own State, and I say it with pride, although she is one of the young sisters of the Union, her endowment of her public schools exceeds to-day that of any State in the Union in proportion to her population. And is that all resting upon the two or three hundred thousand dollars we have received from this 3 per cent.? Not at all, but it rests upon the liberality of our people in building up an educational structure there and endowing it so that there need be no one in the State of Indiana that is not educated.

But, Mr. President, the six States in which was reserved the right to apply 2 per cent. of this fund under the direction of Congress in the construction of public works and improvements have never derived any benefit from that. With regard to Alabama, Mississippi, and Missouri there was not even a pretense or an effort in that direction, and in 1832 the attempt to construct the great thoroughfare known as the National Road came to an untimely end. It had been built, it is true, through the States of Maryland, Virginia, and Pennsylvania; it had reached the Ohio River; it was partially constructed through the State of Ohio, a section here and there; through Indiana no part of it was completed; a few bridges were built, a large amount of money expended in making embankments preparatory to the final completion of it by placing upon it the macadamization, and left there a mud heap; and in Illinois it was the same way. In 1835 the Government of the United States ceded to the States of Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania the completed line within their limits, and also authorized the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois to take control of the line within their limits such as it was; but the completed line, that portion of it that had been built out of the public Treasury, was ceded or granted by the General Government to the States within whose limits it lay; and thus this whole national enterprise was broken up and any further pretense of carrying it into execution was utterly abandoned. I suppose that consideration had its operation upon the minds of those who were then in Congress when they passed the acts I shall cite, that have not been referred to by the Senator from Vermont, the first, the act of March 2, 1855, entitled "An act to settle certain accounts between the United States and the State of Alabama:"

That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and is hereby, required to state an account between the United States and the State of Alabama, for the purpose of ascertaining what sum or sums of money are due to said State, heretofore unsettled, under the sixth section of the act of March 2, 1819, for the admission of Alabama into the Union; and that he be required to include in said account the several reservations under the various treaties with the Chickasaw, Choctaw, and Creek Indians within the limits of Alabama, and allow and pay to the said State 5 per cent. thereon, as in case of other sales.

And in 1857 the following act, "An act to settle certain accounts between the United States and the State of Mississippi and other States:"

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and is hereby, required to state an account between the United States and the State of Mississippi, for the purpose of ascertaining what sum or sums of money are due to said State, heretofore unsettled, on account of the public lands in said State, and upon the same principles of allowance and settlement as prescribed in the "act to settle certain accounts between the United States and the State of Alabama," approved March 2, 1855; and that he be required to include in said account the several reservations under the various treaties with the Chickasaw and Choctaw Indians within the limits of Mississippi, and allow and pay to the said State 5 per cent. thereon, as in case of other sales, estimating the lands at the value of $1.25 per acre.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said Commissioner shall also state an account between the United States and each of the other States upon the same principles, and shall allow and pay to each State such amount as shall thus be found due, estimating all lands and permanent reservations at $1.25 per acre.

An account was to be stated with all other States, and the other States thus referred to being in the same condition as Mississippi and Alabama are the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois. Thus in 1857 the Congress of the United States, in effect, declared that this 2 per cent. and the reservation of the right to appropriate it by Congress in works of improvement should no longer be followed as the policy of this Government, but that it should settle with the States and pay them 5 per cent. of the proceeds of public lands, and that in doing so it should reckon permanent Indian reservations as sales, and the price to be fixed was $1.25 per acre. The Government having in terms granted so much land to these particular tribes, for that is the language of the grants under which the reserves were made, these reservations were treated as sales.

So you will see that as early as 1857 the Government discovered the impracticability of Congress undertaking to act in conjunction with a State in disposing of this 5 per cent. fund for the purposes for which it was originally intended, and recognized the fact that the States themselves were the best administrators of the fund, that they were the proper authority to make application of it for the general benefit and common welfare of which we have heard so much from the Senator from Vermont. Therefore, from 1857 down to the present time, and beginning even back of that, but certainly from that time down to the present in every State which has been admitted into the Union, the 5 per cent. has been reserved to be paid over to the State, to be used for the purposes therein designated, but to be paid to the State. This obligation to pay the whole of the 5 per cent. over to the State was first embraced in the act by which the constitution of the State of Michigan was recognized, for it is known that the State of Michigan organized her constitution and State government, not by any specific enabling act, but claiming the right to do it under the terms of the ordinance of 1787, claiming that she possessed the right under that ordinance, that it required no previous enabling act by Congress. But when the State was recognized and admitted into the Union upon the constitution that she had formed under the authority as she conceived of the ordinance of 1787, then it was that Congress provided for the payment of the entire 5 per cent. over to the State, to be used it is true for these public purposes that have been spoken of, but the payment was to be made to the State.

Arkansas, it will be remembered, was admitted at the same time and by virtue almost of the same act by which the State of Michigan was admitted. Florida and Iowa came in together, and their enabling acts and the provisions and compacts between them and the Federal Government were of the same character.

From the time of the admission of the State of Michigan down to the present time there has never been in a single act any division of the fund, but each State has been allowed to use that fund for the purposes specified in it, for improvements if it was for improvements, or for common schools if it was for common schools, and there has never been any complaint on the part of the United States or anybody else that it has not been so used, and much more.

But the language of these enabling acts so far as this reservation is concerned is very much of the same character; it is 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of lands lying within the said Territory or State—the net proceeds of sales. Now this bill proposes—and that is all there is in it different from any other act that has ever been passed by Congress on this subject—to treat lands taken up by the location of land warrants issued to the soldiers of the United States, usually termed bounty warrants, as sales made by the Government.

Before taking up and discussing that question I wish to call the attention of the Senate for a moment to the language of the act under which the State of Indiana was admitted. After having set forth in five different specific provisions the terms and conditions under which the State of Indiana was to be admitted, it then goes on to say:

And provided always, That the five foregoing propositions, herein offered, are on the conditions that the convention of the said State shall provide by an ordinance, irrevocable without the consent of the United States, that every and each tract of land sold by the United States, from and after the 1st day of December next, shall be and remain exempt from any tax, laid by order or under any authority of the State, whether for State, county, or township, or any other purpose whatever, for the term of five years from and after the day of sale.

This does not by express terms exempt the public lands from taxation while they remain public lands, but it does by implication, because they are not to be taxed until five years after they have been entered, so that it by implication embraces the clause that is expressly contained in the enabling acts of those States which have omitted this exemption of the taxation of private property. As appears by the act under which the State of Iowa was admitted she expressly stipulates that she will not tax the public lands, nor will she in any manner interfere with the right of disposal of the same by the General Government or the making of titles to them to any person who may acquire them from the General Government.

A proposition was raised yesterday by a question asked by the Senator from Florida of the Senator from Vermont as to whether the power existed in the State government to tax the public lands held by the General Government within the limits of the State. The distinguished Senator from Vermont gave it as his unqualified opinion that no such power existed, and yet he admitted that it was a question. It was thought to be a question of such moment as to be embraced in the compact between the States and the General Government when they came to ask for admission—in almost every instance it was a question whether the General Government could be the proprietary owner of lands within a State that was claimed to be sovereign and hold them there exempt from taxation by its mere sovereign will and power, not holding them there in sovereign right as sovereign, but simply as a proprietary owner. It was an important question, and one that Congress thought it necessary to put at rest by entering into a solemn compact with the States to be admitted that they should not attempt to exercise that power.

The State of Ohio was the first State formed out of the Northwestern Territory, and the same implied reservation was contained in the act under which she was admitted. The title of that act is "An act to enable the people of the eastern division of the territory northwest of the river Ohio to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of such State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and for other purposes;" and the constitution formed by the people of Ohio and presented to Congress for its acceptance, and under which it was admitted as a State, declared:

We, the people of the eastern division of the territory of United States northwest of the river Ohio, having the right of admission into the General Government as a member of the Union, consistent with the Constitution of the United States, the ordinance of Congress of 1787, and the law of Congress entitled "An act to enable the people of the eastern division of the territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of such State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and for other purposes," in order to establish justice, promote the welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish the following constitution or form of government, and do mutually agree with each other to form ourselves into a free and independent State by the name of the State of Ohio.

"Into a free and independent State by the name of the State of Ohio." When Congress on the one hand and the people of the eastern division of the Northwestern Territory on the other were engaged in these solemn negotiations, and when the State of Ohio was to be admitted as a free and independent State, it became a matter of very considerable concern, it seems to me, to determine what powers and what rights the Federal Government, the United States, that other government that divided sovereignty with the people of the State of Ohio, could have over the lands within the limits of the State of Ohio. Therefore, when these States, beginning with the State of Ohio and extending on through, solemnly gave up this contested question, settled this dispute in reference to the right to tax all property—for there is no higher right of sovereignty, no one more necessary to be preserved than the right of taxation—gave up the right to control in any manner or to interfere in any manner with the United States in the disposition of almost the whole territory out of which these States were formed, and gave up the right also to tax it, not merely while it was in the hands of the Federal Government and while it was held by it as a proprietary owner, but to still continue that exemption for five years from the time it was sold, it seems to me that the very fact that there was such a question and it was thus settled disposed of the whole controversy. Now, as to whether these compacts stood upon any sufficient ground or not——

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator from Indiana, in that connection, allow me to read a short extract from Mr. Justice Woodbury?

Mr. McDONALD. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. He says:

Where the United States own land situated within the limits of any particular States, and over which they have no cession of jurisdiction, for objects either special or general, little doubt exists that the rights and remedies in relation to it are usually such as apply to other landholders within the State.

Mr. McDONALD. I do not pretend on this occasion to undertake to settle that question. I say that the people of the several States that have been admitted into the Union under these compacts settled the question with the Federal Government by compact and agreement, and when they gave up this right the Government agreed that on the sales of these public lands, thus having the right to dispose of them unobstructed and untrammeled by State legislation, 5 per cent. should be devoted to the benefit of the people of the State. There is where the benefit was to go, to the people of the State. It is true that the improvements they were required to invest the money in, the educational institutions they were called upon to establish, might be participated in by the citizens of other States when they came to travel within those States, or if they should be domiciled there for the purpose of receiving the superior educational advantages held out to them, precisely as the people of the older States have always benefited by these new and young and growing States. It was no bad advice, an advice that has often been followed, that Horace Greeley gave to the young man who consulted him, "Go West, young man, and grow up with the country."

These Territories had to be peopled; the slow process of the mere increase of population within a particular settlement or community was not rapid enough; and if any section of this country derived any special benefit from these unoccupied public lands, from the wide field that was opened in the West for enterprise and energy, it has been our friends in the Eastern States; and it seems to me that it is not very just for them to undertake to tax us now because we desire to have the compact that we entered into fairly executed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. With the consent of the Senator from Indiana, who gives way for the purpose, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and fifty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and forty-seven minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. O'CONNOR, by unanimous consent, reported back, with amendments, from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, the bill (H. R. No. 1513) providing for the judicial ascertainment of claims against the United States; which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed and recommitted, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

PLEURO-PNEUMONIA.

Mr. ROBINSON, by unanimous consent, presented resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts, concerning the extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. They are as follows:

Whereas the business of raising, transporting through the States, and shipping to foreign ports of cattle is already one of the most important industries of this country, and a source of wealth and profit to the citizens of all portions of the Union, to the agricultural States, to the States in which through lines of railroad run, and to the seaboard States, where commerce is greatly increased by the export of live stock and beef products, and whatever interferes with such demand in foreign markets produces a direct and incalculable injury to every portion of the country; and

Whereas the disease known as pleuro-pneumonia, a most pestilent, contagious, and fatal disease, prevails at the present time among the neat stock in no less than five States on the Atlantic seaboard, menacing the entire Middle and Eastern States, and ultimately the unfenced stock-ranges of the South and West, where its extermination would be utterly impossible, thereby interfering with the exportation of cattle and destroying one of our most valuable industries; and

Whereas the State authorities have not sufficient power to control the intercommunication between different States, and consequent spread of the disease, or may not be fully awake to the importance of its utter and entire extermination; and

Whereas the Commonwealth of Massachusetts having in former years expended many thousands of dollars in extirpating this plague among the cattle in her own borders, whereby this disease within her territory was entirely exterminated: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Legislature of Massachusetts pray the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled to devise such measures of law as regards quarantine and transportation of cattle between the several States, and also grant such financial aid to the States where it now exists, as in your wisdom may be deemed best calculated to eradicate in the present and prevent in the future this dangerous and threatening pestilence, and thereby avert a national calamity.

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be transmitted by the Secretary of this Commonwealth to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

SENATE, January 27, 1880.

OCEAN NATIONAL BANK OF NEW YORK.

Mr. BUCKNER. I ask unanimous consent that the evidence taken by the Committee on Banking and Currency in the investigation of the affairs of the Ocean National Bank of New York be printed for the use of that committee.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

GERMAN NATIONAL BANK OF CHICAGO.

Mr. PRICE, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted the following report; which was read, and, on motion of Mr. PRICE, ordered to be printed and laid on the table:

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom the subject was referred, submitted the following report:

On the 4th day of June, 1879, the House adopted the following:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be, and they are hereby, instructed and directed to investigate the affairs of the Ocean National Bank of New York and of the German National Bank of Chicago, and especially to inquire into the management of the assets of the respective receivers of said banks and the conduct of any officer of the Government touching the said receiverships, or the disposition of the assets of said banks, respectively, and for that purpose that the said committee, or any sub-committee it may appoint, shall have power to send for persons and papers, reduce the testimony of witnesses to writing, employ a clerk and stenographer, to sit during the recess of Congress at Chicago and New York, and report by bill or otherwise; and the sum of $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of the contingent fund of the House to defray the expenses of said investigation."

In compliance with which resolution a sub-committee consisting of Mr. BUCKNER, (chairman,) Mr. LOUNSBERY, and Mr. PRICE visited Chicago on the 16th day of October, 1879.

Mr. Edmund Jessen appeared as attorney for the petitioners at whose instance the investigation was asked for. Mr. James M. Flower, the receiver of the German National Bank of Chicago, and Mr. Henry Greenebaum, who was the president of said bank before and at the time of the failure, were also present.

The committee remained in session for several days, examining witnesses in reference to all the matters complained of, and also in examining the books of the bank; in which examination of the books the committee were assisted by an expert accountant. The testimony of all the witnesses demonstrated very conclusively that great irregularity had been practiced in conducting the affairs of the bank, and that the manner of keeping the books had been of such a character as to make it very difficult for even an expert accountant to ascertain the nature of the transactions. These irregularities were so numerous and so great as to impress the minds of your committee with a suspicion that possibly they were intentional. The language of one of the witnesses, who was introduced as an expert bookkeeper, is, "I think they have been kept in a very loose manner; in making the examination we have found many entries of a blank character;" and again he says, "only a party familiar with the books could trace many of the entries;" and again he says, "as a rule the entries are of such a blind character that it is with great difficulty that anything can be traced to its true origin." Your committee also find that good assets were used, after the failure of the bank, to pay preferred creditors, which is clearly in violation of law.

So far as the acts of the Comptroller of the Currency and of the receiver are concerned, the letters put in evidence and the testimony of the witnesses on the stand indicate a disposition on the part of these officers to protect the rights of the stockholders and creditors of the bank. Possibly a little more vigilance and energy might have been exercised to good purpose, and in the opinion of your committee a fair construction of the law would have authorized and justified these officers in adopting more stringent measures toward the directors and managing officers of the bank; for the testimony discloses the fact that transfers were made on the books of the bank by which good assets were used to pay preferred creditors of the bank. Such transfers are clearly, under the law, not only voidable, but absolutely void.

At the time of the failure of the bank in December, 1877, its affairs, as appears from the testimony, were put into the hands of a managing committee consisting of Henry Greenebaum, the president, with the vice-president and cashier of the bank, and this committee had entire control of its affairs until December, 1878, and during all of this year, as appears from the testimony, Henry Greenebaum was really the managing man and controlled the assets of the bank, and it was during this time that the assets of the bank shrunk from what he said was 80 or 90 per cent. of its par value to nearly nothing. In one instance the testimony of Mr. Flower is that the bank lost $20,000 and that Henry Greenebaum got the money.

The overdrafts of the persons doing business with the bank were allowed to run up sometimes to nearly $100,000, for which there was no security, and in addition to this memorandums on slips of paper, made by Henry Greenebaum, amounting to $15,000, were counted as cash.

The whole secret of the trouble with the German National Bank of Chicago, as disclosed by the testimony, has arisen from the fact that the directors whose sworn duty it was to watch over and guard the interests of the stockholders and creditors of the bank have utterly failed to attend to their duty, but have allowed one or two men to manage its affairs and handle its funds as they saw proper; and if the creditors of a national bank have not now the right of action at common law, or in equity, against a board of directors who by wrong action or neglect of duty cause loss to shareholder or creditor, then the law should be so changed as to give that remedy.

As an evidence that there was gross negligence on the part of those whose sworn duty it was to see that the bank was conducted according to law, if indeed it did not amount to a criminal wrong, your committee call attention to the fact that on the 6th of December, 1877, the books of the bank did not show any overdrafts, while a balance-sheet or statement of the affairs of the bank on the same day showed an overdraft of $92,032.52.

The grounds for asking this investigation by Congress, as disclosed by the petition presented to the House, presupposed mismanagement if not criminal management of the affairs of the bank by some of its officers, as well as a charge of failure on the part of the Comptroller of the Currency to initiate a criminal prosecution of the alleged delinquents, and an indisposition on the part of the receiver to do his duty in the premises.

It appears that when application was made to the Comptroller, embodying the charges against officers of the bank, that he promptly referred the matter to the Solicitor of the Treasury, and that he, with the assent of the Attorney-General, directed the United States attorney for the northern district of Illinois to lay the matter before the grand jury; but at the time this order was made there was no grand jury in session, and shortly thereafter the attorney for the Government resigned his position and a successor had been appointed but a short time before the committee met at Chicago. No preliminary examination of the charges against the bank officers had been made nor had any arrests been made with a view to such preliminary examination. But your committee have learned that since the investigation these charges against the late president have been presented to the first grand jury impaneled after the order of the Solicitor of the Treasury was received, and that an indictment has been found and the officer thus indicted has been held to bail and his case will be ready for trial at the next term of the court.

Your committee reaffirm that the leading and principal cause of the failure of this bank is found in the fact that the directors utterly failed in their duty to watch over the affairs of the bank, and we recommend that the national bank act be so amended as to hold to a more strict accountability all directors, and also that the stockholders, whose business it is to elect directors, should in no case be relieved from personal responsibility to the creditors of their bank until they shall have paid, not only the amount of stock held by them, but also an additional sum equal to said stock.

JOSEPH CLYMER.

Mr. BRIGHT, by unanimous consent, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, from the Committee of Claims, the bill (H. R. No. 2705) for the relief of Joseph Clymer, of Texas; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

E. J. GURLEY.

Mr. BRIGHT also, by unanimous consent, reported, from the same committee, a bill (H. R. No. 4418) for the relief of E. J. Gurley, of McLennan County, Texas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DIMICK BUTLER.

Mr. BURROWS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4419) granting a pension to Dimick Butler, late private Company K, Thirteenth Michigan Infantry Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

BEAUFORT C. LEE.

Mr. BURROWS also, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee of Claims:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Beaufort C. Lee the sum of $150 for services rendered in the Doorkeeper's department from October 15, 1877, to December 31, 1877, the above sum to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

TERM OF COURT AT LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.

Mr. VALENTINE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4420) to provide for the holding of terms of courts at Lincoln,

Nebraska, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE ZACHARIAH CHANDLER.

Mr. HAYES, from the Committee on Printing, reported back a joint resolution (H. R. No. 75) to print the eulogies delivered in the two Houses of Congress on the late Zachariah Chandler, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The joint resolution, which was read, provides that 12,000 copies of the eulogies delivered in the two Houses of Congress upon the late Zachariah Chandler be printed, 8,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives and 4,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall have printed the portrait of Mr. Chandler to accompany the same; and that for defraying the expense of procuring the said portrait the sum of $500 is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAYES moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE RUSH CLARK.

Mr. HAYES also, from the same committee, reported back a joint resolution (H. R. No. 200) for printing the eulogies delivered in the House of Representatives upon Hon. Rush Clark, deceased, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The joint resolution, which was read, provides that 9,000 copies of the eulogies delivered in the two Houses of Congress upon the late Rush Clark be printed, 6,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives and 3,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and the Secretary of the Treasury have printed the portrait of Mr. Clark to accompany the same; and for the defraying the expense of procuring the said portrait the sum of $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAYES moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ASCERTAINMENT OF VALUE OF FOREIGN COINS.

Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported back, as a substitute for House bill No. 3846, a bill (H. R. No. 4421) to amend section 3564 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

MONETARY COMMISSION REPORT.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Printing, reported back adversely a resolution to print 5,000 extra copies of the United States Monetary Commission Report; which was laid upon the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES FROM STATE COURTS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business being demanded, the morning hour begins at twelve o'clock and thirty minutes. The unfinished business is the bill (H. R. No. 4219) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875, on which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. NEW] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. NEW. Mr. Speaker, I shall not occupy much time with my remarks, but I am so partial to the provisions of the bill now before the House that I am unwilling that its consideration should be concluded without saying something in favor of its passage. That there should be some change made in existing laws affecting the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States is, I believe, conceded. What alterations can be wisely made is the question and inquiry with all who feel any considerable interest in the subject. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this bill will be found to go very far toward remedying some of the more conspicuous evils and that there will be but little opposition to it when fully understood.

As we all know, the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States, as also its power to receive appellate jurisdiction, is created by the Constitution; while the jurisdiction and judicial power of the inferior Federal courts do not come immediately from the Constitution, but are conferred by Congress by virtue of the authority given to Congress by the Constitution to ordain and establish courts inferior to the Supreme Court. It follows, therefore, that the extent, so to speak, of the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and the jurisdiction of the inferior Federal courts, whether original or acquired indirectly by removal from the State courts, is all defined and regulated by Congress. Congress must, by its laws, say how much of the judicial power not vested by the Constitution in the Supreme Court shall be exercised by the inferior Federal courts.

The principal acts of Congress affecting the jurisdiction of the circuit court of the United States, so far as the same are of interest or importance in connection with this bill, are the acts of September 24, 1789, July 27, 1866, March 2, 1867, section 640 of the Revised Statutes, and the act of March 3, 1875. I do not include or speak of the enlarged jurisdiction of the circuit court of the United States, resulting from the right to remove causes from the State courts, arising under the civil-rights and elective-franchise laws, or the removal of causes from the State courts in cases of prosecution against revenue officers of the United States and against officers and other persons acting under the registration laws, &c. These laws I shall not speak of, because they are in no wise affected by the bill under consideration.

The bill makes no change whatever in the criminal jurisdiction of the circuit court of the United States as it was under the act of 1789 and as it is now under the act of March 3, 1875.

Gentlemen are well informed, no doubt, as to the very great additional original civil jurisdiction conferred by the act of 1875 upon the circuit court of the United States. The civil jurisdiction of that court prior to the act of 1875, was original cognizance concurrent with the courts of the several States of all suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity, where the matter in dispute exceeded, exclusive of costs, the sum or value of $500, and the United States were plaintiffs or petitioners; or a suit in which an alien was a party, or where the suit was between a citizen of the State where the suit was brought and a citizen of another State. The five-hundred-dollar clause applied as well to suits in which the United States were plaintiffs or petitioners as to suits in which aliens or citizens of different States were parties.

But by the act of 1875 this original civil jurisdiction of the circuit court has been enlarged to the very limit of the power vested in Congress in that regard by the Constitution. Besides the jurisdiction already named, the act of 1875 extends the jurisdiction of the circuit court to all cases arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or treaties made, or which shall be made under their authority; also to all suits in which there shall be a controversy between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants from different States; as also to suits where there is a controversy between citizens of a State and foreign states, citizens or subjects. And unlike the act of 1789, it does not require in suits between citizens of different States that one of the parties shall be a citizen of the State in which suit is brought. On the contrary, it permits a suit between citizens of different States to be brought in a circuit court of the United States in a State of which neither party is a citizen; and provision is made for the removal from the State courts to the circuit courts of the United States of all suits or controversies of which the latter courts have concurrent jurisdiction with the State courts; and the removal may be by either plaintiff or defendant.

It will be observed that under this bill, as by the act of 1875, the United States can sue in its own courts for any amount.

The first change proposed to be made by this bill in the act of 1875 is to require the sum or value of the matter in dispute to exceed, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum of $2,000 instead of $500 exclusive of costs. I believe this increase of the sum or value in dispute to be one of the best provisions in the bill. No good reason in my judgment can be urged against it. The increase from five hundred to two thousand dollars should be made for the same reason that caused the same Congress that passed the act of 1875 to pass another act at the same session, which provided that an appeal should not be had from the circuit to the Supreme Court, unless the amount involved exceeded $5,000. The minimum amount before that was $2,000.

The change from five hundred to two thousand dollars is not out of proportion to the growth of our population and wealth since 1789. Within the last two decades the history of the jurisdiction of the Federal courts has been one of constant and rapid growth; so much so that you hear from judges of all those courts the opinion expressed that the districts, circuits, and judicial force must be multiplied, and an intermediate appellate court created, unless something can be done to check the surging tide of litigation with which these courts are being overflowed.

Although our population has increased more perhaps than fifteen-fold since 1789, our wealth still more, and litigation in even greater proportion, yet the three circuits of 1789 have been added to by only six. It is true that the districts and district courts have been increased in a larger proportion. But those courts have had all they could do, the district judges doing largely circuit court duty in addition to holding their own courts. This has come from the overloaded condition of the circuit court dockets, and also from the strong desire on the part of the people and Congress not to enlarge the Federal judicial force beyond the strictest necessity.

It has also come from the fact that the large litigations of the country have been in the circuit courts of the United States, and the judges of those courts have had their time mostly occupied in the trial of those causes. I know that the number of cases on the circuit court dockets have been reduced by the repeal of the bankrupt law. But the actual work of the judges has not been lightened in anything like the same ratio, for as we all know most of the bankrupt work was done by the registers in bankruptcy.

If this bill becomes a law, it will be found very soon afterward that the very best results have followed its enactment. Our State courts will be able to dispose of the additional labor imposed upon them, and even if after a time it should result in an increase of the State judicial force, the people would gladly consent, so burdened, harassed, and oppressed have they been by the inconvenience, delays, and increased expense incident to trials in the Federal courts. Worse than this, sir, the citizen often abandoning outright or surrendering a just demand or paying a fraudulent one rather than employ expensive counsel through long and vexatious litigation in a Federal court, frequently more than one hundred miles from his home, and among strangers. And here I may say that which will not be denied: the very best and highest order of legal ability can be found in all the State courts, not only on the bench but at the bar. The decisions of the highest courts in the States are gladly consulted and cited as authority by the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States. Law books, including reports both State and national, have so multiplied and are so cheap and easy of access, that you will scarcely find a county seat in the Union, where, with the industry that characterizes the American bench and bar, the law and latest authority cannot be produced on the trial of any cause.

I have already referred to the removal of causes from the State courts to the circuit court of the United States, as one of the sources of the enlargement of the jurisdiction of the latter court, and I would be glad, before finishing my remarks as to other features of the bill, to have the attention of the House while I speak more definitely now to that part of the bill which relates to the removal of suits from State courts.

As I have already said, the bill does not disturb existing laws as to the removal of causes from the State courts arising under laws relating to civil rights, the elective franchise, revenue officers, or other officers of the United States.

By the act of 1789 the right of removal was limited to defendants who were citizens of States other than those in which the suit was brought, and the petition for removal was required to be filed at the time of appearing to the suit. And this act was always construed by the Supreme Court to mean that there could be no removal unless all the plaintiffs were citizens of the State in which the suit was brought and all the defendants citizens of another State or States.

The act of 1866 amended that of 1789, so as to allow a non-resident defendant to remove the suit as to himself, even if there were other defendants in the suit who were citizens of the State in which the suit was brought, provided it was a suit instituted or prosecuted for the purpose of restraining or enjoining him; or if the suit was one in which there could be a final determination of the controversy so far as it concerned him, without the presence of the other defendants. By this act the petition for removal could be filed at any time before the trial or final hearing of the cause. And the plaintiffs were allowed to proceed without prejudice in the State courts against the other defendants.

The act of 1866 is probably still in force, for it does not seem to be in conflict with that part of the act of 1875, which says, that where there shall be a controversy which is wholly between citizens of different States and which can be fully determined as between them, then either one or more of the plaintiffs or defendants, actually interested in such controversy may remove such suit into the circuit court of the United States. In other words, if a case should arise such as is described and provided for by the act of 1866, but not within the letter of that part of the act of 1875 to which I have just referred, removal by a defendant could probably yet be had as to himself alone under the act of 1866, and if that right under the act of 1866 was not taken away by the act of 1875, it would seem to remain under this bill, although it will be observed that the bill now under consideration alters the language which I have quoted from the act of 1875 by dropping the word "plaintiffs."

The act of 1867 also limited the right of removal to actions between a citizen of a State where the suit was brought and a citizen of another State. But it made a radical change in one other respect. Before that the right of removal was restricted to the non-resident defendant upon the theory that the plaintiff having selected his forum should abide by it. The act, however, provided that a citizen of another State than that in which the suit was brought, whether plaintiff or defendant, might have a removal of the cause if he made affidavit that he had reason to believe and did believe that from prejudice or local influence he would not be able to obtain justice in such State court and filed his petition for removal on that ground at any time before the trial or final hearing of the suit.

The bill now under consideration contains a similar provision as to prejudice or local influence. It thus appears, Mr. Speaker, that prior to the act of 1875, with the exception of the removal allowed to either party on account of prejudice or local influence, under the act of 1867, the right of removal was limited to non-residents who were defendants in suits instituted by citizens of the States in which the suit was brought.

This brings me to speak more particularly of removal of causes from the State courts under the act of 1875. By it removal is coextensive with the civil jurisdiction of the circuit court, and the privilege is not limited in any instance to defendants, but exists in favor of plaintiffs as well. By this bill the plaintiff can in no case remove his suit except on account of prejudice or local influence as already explained. If the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] shall be adopted, as I assume it will be and ought to be, then there may be removal by resident as well as non-resident defendants whenever it is made to appear from the application for removal that the defense depends in whole or in part upon a correct construction of some provision of the Constitution or law of the United States or treaty made by their authority.

The act of 1875 provides that the petition for removal can be filed before or at the term at which the cause can be first tried and before the trial, while this bill requires the petition to be filed at any time before the defendant is required by the laws of the State or the rule of the State court in which the suit is brought to answer or plead to the declaration or complaint of the plaintiff.

It is the unanimous judgment, I believe, of the Judiciary Committee that the privilege of removing a suit from the State to the Federal court ought to be, from every consideration of reason and fair play, allowed to the defendant only; and that whether it be the General Government, a corporation, a private citizen, or an alien, they having once as plaintiffs selected the forum, should be held to the choice made with the exception already stated. And such has been the judgment of Congress also, from the 24th of September, 1789, the date of the judiciary act, to March 3, 1875.

The departure from that rule allowed by the latter act, has been the most fruitful source that the ingenuity of the law-maker could devise, although not so intended, for the bringing of suits without merit, the delay of trials without good cause, and the oppression of the people.

For the first time since the foundation of the Government, the plaintiff, by the act of 1875, is permitted to bring his suit in the circuit court of the United States in a State of which neither he nor the defendant is a citizen. This bill requires that, in all controversies between citizens of different States, suits shall be brought only in the district of the residence of either the plaintiff or defendant, and this is precisely as it should be.

The act of 1875 provides that no circuit or district court of the United States shall have cognizance of any suit founded on contract in favor of an assignee unless the suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover thereon if no assignment had been made, except suits on promissory notes negotiable by the law merchant and bills of exchange. This bill excepts only foreign bills of exchange, and the bill in that respect is like the act of 1789.

The evil that this modification is intended to and will remedy is so well understood, that I need not do more than call attention to the fact that hundreds of thousands of dollars of indebtedness, evidenced by promissory notes payable to order or bearer, and therefore negotiable by the law merchant, and which could not be sued on in the Federal courts by the payees if they were citizens of the same States with the makers, are transferred by indorsement, before maturity, to non-residents, who sue the makers in the Federal courts, well knowing that the defendants, however wronged, cheated, or defrauded in the making of the paper or contract sued on, will be less likely to defend in the Federal courts than in the State courts.

This bill further provides as follows:

That the circuit courts of the United States shall not take original cognizance of any suit of a civil nature, either at common law or in equity, between a corporation created or organized by or under the laws of any State and a citizen of any State in which such corporation, at the time the cause of action accrued, may have been carrying on any business authorized by the law creating it, except in like cases in which said courts are authorized by this act to take original cognizance of suits between citizens of the same State. Nor shall any such suit between such a corporation and a citizen or citizens of a State in which it may be doing business be removed to any circuit court of the United States, except in like cases in which such removal is authorized by the foregoing provision in suits between citizens of the same State.

That is to say, in a case such as is here named the corporation would, for the purposes of that suit, be deemed to be a citizen of the State in which it had been carrying on business, and of which the defendant was a citizen. I cannot doubt but this provision will commend itself to all. Gentlemen will see that this is of the utmost importance to fair dealing and an impartial administration of justice. It will have the effect to make all kinds of corporations careful to contract fairly and squarely with the people. I say it will tend to the impartial administration of justice also, because the corporation, having found it to be the best policy to take no unconscionable advantage of the citizen in the beginning, will not regard it necessary to have unfair advantage upon the trial in order that it may secure a just finding or verdict, and the people thereafter having been dealt with honorably in the main by corporations, and having equal advantages in the forum of trial, will rapidly divest themselves of the bias and prejudice now so strong against corporations.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Would it interrupt my friend if I were to ask him a question?

Mr. NEW. I would prefer not to be interrupted.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe there can be any serious doubt as to the constitutionality of that part of the bill which I have just quoted. I know, sir, that the Supreme Court has held that a corporation was a citizen of the State that created it, and therefore within the clause of the Constitution which extends the judicial power of the Federal courts to controversies between citizens of different States. But it does not follow by any means that Congress may not constitutionally require a corporation organized under the laws of any State to sue in the State courts, under the circumstances named in that part of the bill which I have just read. With as much and more plausibility, reason, and force might it be said that that part of section 11 of the act of 1789 is unconstitutional, which provided that no district or circuit court of the United States should have cognizance of any suit to recover the contents of any promissory note or other chose in action in favor of an assignee, unless suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover thereon if no assignment had been made. The purpose and effect of that restriction was to compel the assignee to sue the maker of the note in the State courts of the latter, unless the payee could have sued in the Federal courts. If the payee and maker were citizens of the same State, the latter could not be sued by the former in the Federal courts, and under the act of 1789 the assignee, although a citizen of another State, could not sue in the Federal courts if his indorsor or assignor could not. The fact that a suit between the assignee and the maker of the note was a suit "between a citizen of the State where the suit was brought and a citizen of another State," gave to the assignee no right that the payee did not have.

This illustration presents the constitutional question fairly; for in a suit against the maker of a note, the cause of action, amount to be recovered, and all else involved, so far as he was concerned, was precisely the same whether sued by the payee or the assignee. The only difference would be that if sued by the payee the suit would be by a citizen of his own State, and if sued by the assignee the suit would be by a citizen of another State.

The Supreme Court, in the case of Sheldon et al. vs. Sill, 8. Howard, page 441, held that portion of the act of 1789 to which I have referred, to be constitutional.

I quote from the opinion as follows:

The only question which it will be necessary to notice in this case is whether the circuit court had jurisdiction. Sill, the complainant below, a citizen of New York, filed his bill in the circuit court of the United States for Michigan against Sheldon, claiming to recover the amount of a bond and mortgage which had been assigned to him by Hastings, the president of the Bank of Michigan. Sheldon in his answer, among other things, pleaded that the bond and mortgage in controversy, having been originally given by a citizen of Michigan to another citizen of the same State, and the complainant being assignee of them, the circuit court had no jurisdiction. The eleventh section of the judiciary act, which defines the jurisdiction of the circuit courts, restrains them from taking "cognizance of any suit to recover the contents of any promissory note or other chose in action in favor of an assignee, unless a suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover the contents, if no assignment had been made, except in cases of foreign bills of exchange." The third article of the Constitution declares that "the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish." The second section of the same article enumerates the cases and controversies of which the judicial power shall have cognizance, and, among others, it specifies "controversies between citizens of different States." It has been alleged that this restriction of the judiciary act with regard to assignees of choses in action is in conflict with this provision of the Constitution, and therefore void. It must be admitted that if the Constitution had ordained and established the inferior courts and distributed to them their respective powers they could not be restricted or divested by Congress; but as it has made no such distribution, one of two consequences must result—either that each inferior court created by Congress must exercise all the judicial powers not given to the Supreme Court, or that Congress, having the power to establish the courts, must define their respective jurisdictions. The first of these inferences has never been asserted and could not be defended with any show of reason; and if not, the latter would seem to follow as a necessary consequence; and it would seem to follow also that, having a right to prescribe, Congress may withhold from any court of its creation jurisdiction of any of the enumerated controversies. Courts created by statute can have no jurisdiction but such as the statute confers. No one of them can assert a just claim to jurisdiction exclusively conferred on another or withheld from all. The Constitution has defined the limits of the judicial power of the United States, but has not prescribed how much of it shall be exercised by the circuit court; consequently the statute which does prescribe the limits of their jurisdiction cannot be in conflict with the Constitution, unless it confers powers not enumerated therein. Such has been the doctrine held by this court since its first establishment. To enumerate all the cases in which it has been either directly advanced or tacitly assumed would be tedious and unnecessary. In the case of Turner vs. Bank of North America, 4 Dallas, 10, it was contended, as in this case, that, as it was a controversy between citizens of different States, the Constitution gave the plaintiff a right to sue in the circuit court, notwithstanding he was an assignee within the restriction of the eleventh section of the judiciary act. But the court said: "The political truth is that the disposal of the judicial power (except in a few specified instances) belongs to Congress; and Congress is not bound to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Federal courts to every subject in every form which the Constitution might warrant." This decision was made in 1799. Since that time the same doctrine has been frequently asserted by this court, as may be seen in McIntire vs. Wood, 7 Cranch, 506; Kendall vs. United States, 12 Peters, 616; Cary vs. Curtis, 3 Howard, 245.

I need not comment upon or further refer to the opinion just read from to show how exactly it meets in every respect the constitutional question of which I have been speaking.

I now wish to read from 3 Howard, page 245, one of the authorities referred to in the case from which I have read in 8 Howard:

Secondly, in the doctrine so often ruled in this court, that the judicial power of the United States, although it has its origin in the Constitution, is (except in enumerated instances, applicable exclusively to this court) dependent for its distribution and organization, and for the modes of its exercise, entirely upon the action of Congress, who possess the sole power of creating the tribunals (inferior to the Supreme Court) for the exercise of the judicial power, and of investing them with jurisdiction either limited, concurrent, or exclusive, and of withholding jurisdiction from them in the exact degrees and character which to Congress may seem proper for the public good. To deny this position would be to elevate the judicial over the legislative branch of the Government and to give to the former powers limited by its own discretion merely. It follows, then, that the courts created by statute must look to the statute as the warrant for their authority; certainly they cannot go beyond the statute and assert an authority with which they may not be invested by it, or which may be clearly denied to them. This argument is in no wise impaired by admitting that the judicial power shall extend to all cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States. Perfectly consistent with such an admission is the truth that the organization of the judicial power, the definition and distribution of the subjects of jurisdiction in the Federal tribunals, and the modes of their action and authority have been, and of right must be, the work of the Legislature. The existence of the judicial act itself, with its several supplements, furnishes proof unanswerable on this point. The courts of the United States are all limited in their nature and constitution, and have not the powers inherent in courts existing by prescription or by the common law.

I will now read from the case of Turner vs. Bank of North America, 4 Dallas, page 10:

A circuit court, however, is of limited jurisdiction, and has cognizance, not of cases generally, but only of a few specially circumstanced, amounting to a small proportion of the cases which an unlimited jurisdiction would embrace. And the fair presumption is not as with regard to a court of general jurisdiction, that a cause is within its jurisdiction unless the contrary appears, but rather that a cause is without its jurisdiction till the contrary appears.

During argument of this case Chase, Justice, interrupted counsel and said:

The notion has frequently been entertained that the Federal courts derived their judicial power immediately from the Constitution; but the political truth is, that the disposal of the judicial power (except in a few specified instances) belongs to Congress. If Congress has given the power to this court we possess it, not otherwise; and if Congress has not given the power to us or to any other court, it still remains at the legislative disposal. Besides, Congress is not bound, and it would perhaps be inexpedient to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Federal courts to every subject, in every form which the Constitution might warrant.

See also 2 Paine, 501.

The case of the Insurance Company vs. Morse, reported in 20 Wallace, page 445, which is sometimes cited as bearing on this question, is not at all in point.

A statute of the State of Wisconsin enacted, that any insurance company organized or incorporated under the laws of any other State should not do business in that State, unless such company would agree not to remove from the courts of that State to the Federal courts, suits to which it was a party. The insurance company so agreed, but afterward violated the agreement, and the Supreme Court held that both the statute and agreement were void. The State of Wisconsin undertook to contract with the insurance company that the latter should not take the benefit of a law of Congress which gave the company the right of removal. The Supreme Court liken it to a case of a citizen of New York entering into an agreement with the State of Wisconsin that in no event would he resort to the courts of that State or the Federal courts within it to protect his rights of property. They say that a man cannot barter away his life, or his freedom, or his substantial rights. That he cannot bind himself in advance by an agreement to forfeit his rights at all times and on all occasions whenever the case may be presented.

In the case referred to, the insurance company derived its right of removal from an act of Congress, and would have had no such privilege without it. Congress had the power to give or withhold it. It was not a right given by the Constitution, except in so far as Congress had the constitutional power to grant or deny it. That provision of the bill which I am now considering takes away a privilege now existing; but it must be remembered that the change is made by Congress, the power which granted the privilege in the first place.

The acts of 1789 and 1875 have both required that the amount in controversy should exceed $500 before the circuit court could have jurisdiction concurrent with the State courts, and yet it is not pretended that this is an unconstitutional limitation or restriction of the right of the citizen to sue in that court.

Section 640 is repealed by this bill. It is a part of the act of July 27, 1868, and reads as follows:

Any suit commenced in any court other than a circuit or district court of the United States against any corporation other than a banking corporation, organized under a law of the United States, or against any member thereof as such member for any alleged liability of such corporation, or of such member as a member thereof, may be removed, for trial, in the circuit court for the district where such suit is pending, upon the petition of such defendant, verified by oath, stating that such defendant has a defense arising under or by virtue of the Constitution or of any treaty or law of the United States. Such removal, in all other respects, shall be governed by the provisions of the preceding section.

If the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is adopted, corporations as well as natural persons, including national-banking associations, will have the right of removal from the State courts, if it be made to appear from the application for removal that the defense in whole or in part, depends upon a correct construction of some provision of the Constitution, or law of the United States or treaty made by their authority; provided, of course, that the sum or value in dispute exceeds $2,000 exclusive of interest and costs.

Section 640 should be repealed, therefore—first, because the present bill, with the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, will provide for removal by corporations, whether resident or non-resident, where the defense is of the kind named in that section; second, because that section permits removal by the plaintiff as well as defendant, and without regard to the amount in dispute, and therefore would be in conflict with this bill in that respect.

There can be no unfairness or hardship to corporations organized under the laws of the United States, in the repeal of section 640; for under section 709 of the Revised Statutes the Supreme Court of the United States may reverse, affirm, or modify, upon writ of error, the judgment or decree of the highest State court, without regard to the sum or value in dispute, where any right is involved under the Constitution, or laws, or treaties of the United States. That section is in the following words:

A final judgment or decree in any suit in the highest court of a State in which a decision in the suit could be had, where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of, or an authority exercised under, the United States, and the decision is against their validity; or where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of, or an authority exercised under any State, on the ground of their being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision is in favor of their validity; or where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the Constitution, or any treaty or statute of, or commission held or authority exercised under, the United States, and the decision is against the title, right, privilege, or immunity specially set up or claimed, by either party, under such Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority, may be re-examined and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court upon a writ of error. The writ shall have the same effect as if the judgment or decree complained of had been rendered or passed in a court of the United States; and the proceeding upon the reversal shall be the same, except that the Supreme Court may, at their discretion, proceed to a final decision of the case, and award execution, or remand the same to the court from which it was so removed.

The Supreme Court may reaffirm, reverse, modify, or affirm the judgment or decree of such State court, and may, at their discretion, award execution, or remand the same to the court from which it was removed by the writ.

It certainly is as fair to corporations organized under the laws of the United States to be permitted to go from the highest State court to the Supreme Court of the United States, without regard to the sum or value in dispute, as to be prohibited from appealing from the circuit court of the United States to the Supreme Court, unless the amount involved exceeds $5,000.

I have attempted with the fewest and in the plainest words possible, to explain to the House the provisions of the bill under consideration, and to suggest some of the reasons which have operated upon my own mind and caused me to look upon the bill with great favor. I am not much given in my utterances to bitterness, and I have had no words of unkindness or denunciation for corporations or any other class of litigants. I assume that this body would not be largely influenced by anything of that kind, but that every member will prefer to record his vote in such way as may be advised by his own dispassionate judgment.

Mr. PHILIPS. In the very limited time allotted to me I shall not attempt to speak of the general provisions of this bill; and I should not have obtruded any remarks upon the House at so early a period after my entry into it but for the experience I have had under the administration of this law of 1875. Its general purpose has my unqualified sympathy, for it strikes at an evil in the administration of justice which no man not fresh from the practice of the law can fully appreciate. Step by step has the jurisdiction of the Federal courts been extended by positive statutory enactment and the construction of the judge on the bench, until these courts have in a large measure taken to themselves the control and trial of cases which in the opinion of the statesmen and jurists of the best epoch of the Republic belonged exclusively to the domestic courts of the States. "This ravenous expilation of the State" has been accomplished by an insidious process, silent in its operations, stealthy in its approach, and most dangerous in its tendency; for a more cunning and surreptitious method of taking from the citizen his self-government could scarcely be devised. A more effectual instrumentality of despoiling the weak and the timid, and oppressing the poor man, could scarcely suggest itself to the most selfish of governments. The practitioner who a few years ago brought and tried his causes in his home courts, with whose methods of procedure he and his clients were familiar, where he tried his causes before a jury of the vicinage, where the common law and the bill of rights gave him a right to be heard, to-day, in the pursuit of his causes, is dragged hundreds of miles from his home to try his cases before a jury who are strangers to him, where the litigant does not get the benefit of his good character, and, while often before judges who are most accomplished jurists and who administer the laws with impartiality, he too frequently finds himself before judges on the bench who, something like the heathen, are a law unto themselves.

Under the second section of the act of 1875 the United States circuit court of the district of Missouri has held, in effect, that a simple action of ejectment brought for the recovery of a tract of land in the State is transferable to the United States circuit court under the provision of that section which provides for the removal of causes arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States.

In that case the plaintiff claimed title to land under a patent; the defendant claimed title under a prior entry made with a land warrant issued under the act of 1847, providing for bounties to the soldiers engaged in the Mexican war. The suit in no manner involved the legality of the patent. It in no manner involved the validity of the act of 1847. But the defendant claimed simply that his being a prior entry under a valid claim, the plaintiff had notice of that prior entry and held the legal title as trustee for the defendant. It was therefore only sought to divest this legal title of the patentee, and to invest it in the owner of the equitable title. The motion to remand was refused on the ground that the cause of action arose under an act of the Congress of the United States.

Why, Mr. Speaker, under such a ruling as that, (and it has been made as I understand in other States,) every action of ejectment brought in the State of Missouri for the recovery of a foot of land would be transferable to the United States circuit court; for all her land came under the Louisiana purchase, and all the title to the land has come from or through the Government of the United States. I thought then, as I believe to-day, that this rule carried the act in question far beyond its reasonable construction and probably beyond the intendment of Congress itself.

It was never the purpose nor the desire of the framers of our federative system of Government, nor was it the purpose of those who passed the original judiciary act of 1780, to give to the Federal courts jurisdiction over causes unless the claim or defense brought under review some principle of the Constitution, some Federal statute, and the question of the right of recovery or the matter of defense depended upon the proper construction of that law.

Such was the holding of the Supreme Court in its early history; and the majority of the present Supreme Court are struggling to bring back the law to its original foundation. I beg for one moment to call the attention of the House to two or three decisions of the Supreme Court, for the purpose of showing that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is no innovation upon the Constitution and in no manner interferes with the rightful jurisdiction of the United States circuit courts, but is in accord with the earlier and the later decisions of the Supreme Court. In the case of Cohens against Virginia, 6 Wheaton, decided by Chief-Justice Marshall, the following language is used:

A case may truly be said to arise under the Constitution or a law of the United States whenever its correct decision depends upon the construction of either. The title or right set up by a party may be defeated by one construction of the Constitution or law of the United States, or sustained by an opposite construction. In either of these cases the jurisdiction of the Federal court may rightfully attach.

In G. W. & W. Co. vs. Keyes, 6 Otto, a majority of the present Supreme Court say:

A cause cannot be removed from a State court simply because in the progress of the litigation it may become necessary to give a construction to the Constitution or a law of the United States. The decision of the case must depend upon that construction; the suit must in part, at least, arise out of a controversy between the parties in regard to the operation and effect of the Constitution or the law upon the facts involved.

So in a late case in 9th Otto, of Hartell vs. Tighlman. That was merely a case arising upon a common-law contract between the patentee and a third party. It was claimed that because the patent had issued under the patent laws of the United States, therefore the Federal court had jurisdiction to try the matter of contract between the parties, which in no manner involved the validity of the patent. Strange to say, a very respectable and large minority of the Supreme Court delivered a minority opinion in that case, holding that the United States circuit court should take jurisdiction over the case simply because the patent originally emanated from the Government.

Now, it may be said that there is no necessity for the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] in view of these decisions of the Supreme Court. The answer to that is this: the nisi judge upon the bench after all is human. As such he loves power, and he loves that dignity which as he thinks adheres to enlarged jurisdiction; and where that jurisdiction, under a proper interpretation, is wanting, he too often secures it by the liberality of construction.

It may be said that the injured party has the right of appeal. He has not this right in some cases on account of the amount involved, but even if he had, Mr. Speaker, the moneyless, timid litigant ought not to be driven to the necessity of incurring the extraordinary and ruinous expense and delay of prosecuting his case to the Supreme Court of the land. It would amount practically to a denial of justice. This Congress as the law-making power of the land should send out its law with its own interpretation, with its just limitation and cure incorporated in the act itself, so that it may be a shield of protection to the citizen instead of a mere instrument for oppressing, and a snare for despoiling, harassing, and annoying him.

The bill and amendment under consideration hits the blot, and I trust we have the wisdom and courage to enact it into a law.

The only criticism to which, in my humble opinion, the amendment of the gentleman from Texas is justly subject, is that it does not go far enough in its safeguards. It provides that the defendant may have the right of removal by simply stating in his application and making affidavit to the fact that his cause of action arises under the Constitution or law of the United States, and in whole or part involves its proper construction. Now suppose, as the history of litigation under the act of 1875 shows has frequently been the case, and as will be the case in the future, the applicant falsely makes this statement for the purpose of obtaining delay and getting his cause transferred to the Federal court. The remedy should go one step further and provide that if, upon the trial of the cause in the court to which it is removed, it should be disclosed that in truth the defense or the right of recovery does not in fact depend upon the proper construction of the Constitution or law of the United States, the United States circuit court should eo instanti discontinue the trial of the cause and remand it to the State court, at the cost, of course, of the party who has improperly had it transferred. I send to the Clerk to be read, simply for information, an amendment which I propose to offer to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas at the proper time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the word "authority," at the end of the first clause, the following:

And if after the removal of such cause it shall appear, on trial thereof, that the defense does not in fact so depend upon such construction, it shall be the duty of the court to discontinue the further trial thereof, and forthwith remand the cause at the cost of the defendant.

The SPEAKER. Is this amendment to be regarded as pending?

Mr. PHILIPS. I have simply had it read for information.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I favor the bill now before the House, and the amendment thereto proposed by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. CULBERSON.] Not only ought there to be legislation going as far as this bill proposes, but I favor also the bill introduced by Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, which has been favorably reported to the House.

The gentleman in charge of the bill has already explained fully the changes which its adoption will make in the law. I shall therefore not go into a detailed comment on the provisions of the bill, but direct my remarks to the evils of the present law—the encroachments of the United States courts upon the judiciary of the States.

There are but few questions of more importance than the one we now have under consideration. It pertains to a speedy and impartial trial by a judicial tribunal near parties concerned. It involves the respective rights and powers of the General Government and of the States, and hence the dearest interests of the citizen.

From the organization of our Government it has been thought that two dangers threatened it. They might appropriately be compared to the centrifugal and centripetal forces in philosophy. One was the tendency of the States to separate and set up for themselves or form new alliances; the other, the tendency on the part of the General Government to usurp or absorb the authority of the States, thereby virtually obliterating their lines and converting the Government from one of limited to one of unlimited powers. Scylla on the one hand and Charybdis on the other never gave more just cause of alarm to the mariner than these have given the sages and patriots who founded and maintained our institutions. But one of these dangers is passed. The question of dissolving the Union of the States has been submitted to that tribunal from the decisions of which no appeal can be taken—to the arbitrament of war; but has the other peril—that of the destruction of our form of government by consolidation—ceased to exist? Unfortunately it has not. No million of men have marched forth to impede its progress and crush it. "No braying horn and screaming fife" have given notice that the march of the Federal Government against the reserved rights of the States was to be stopped; and no booming salute has announced to us that it is ended. On the contrary, the Government of the United States has gradually assumed authority which of right belongs to the States, until they are left the mere skeletons of what they were under the Constitution, and of what it was intended by those who framed that instrument they should be.

Of all the means employed by those who have either designedly or inadvertently participated in this attempted and partially successful wreck of the States and of their reserved rights, the most efficient have been the Federal judiciary and congressional legislation increasing its power and jurisdiction. And in saying this I mean no reflection upon the integrity of the individuals who compose the judicial department of our Government. I am glad to bear testimony to the fact that in many instances our Supreme Court has stood as a bulwark against passionate and inconsiderate legislation. The trouble arises in a great measure from congressional interference and from too great an increase of the jurisdiction of the inferior United States courts.

That the tendency of Federal legislation for the last fifteen years has been toward the concentration of too much power in the Federal judiciary and to an unwarranted interference with the judicial authority of the States no candid man acquainted with the history of the country will deny. I am glad to see that Representatives on both sides of this Chamber realize this fact. I was pleased to hear the gentleman from Maine, Mr. FRYE, when speaking on this subject say:

> I agree with the gentleman entirely in the view that in the past we have gone too far in extending the jurisdiction of the Federal courts and allowing the transfer of causes from the State courts. I think that the time has now come when we can and ought to correct this matter.

To remedy this evil the bill before us was introduced and has been recommended by the committee. It is not and cannot be made a sectional question. It is equally important to Maine and California, to Michigan and Louisiana.

PROPHECIES OF THOMAS JEFFERSON.

Before coming directly to the sections to be repealed let us examine what has been said by some of the founders of our Government, and see whether or not they thought there was danger in our situation. Among the signers of the Declaration of Independence was the man who wrote that great charter of liberty; who conceived our form of government and was chief of those who kept it up during the struggle for independence; who presided over the young Republic for eight years as Chief Magistrate; and who was spared to witness the operation of our system for half a century. Firm and honest in his convictions, he was not moved by passion nor terrified by peril. He saw the dangers ahead, and, like the faithful sentinel on the watch-tower, warned his people against them. My limited time will not permit me to produce all he has said on the subject, but I quote a few of his utterances.

Mr. Jefferson wrote to Judge Roan, March 9, 1821:

> The great object of my fear is the Federal judiciary. That body, like gravity, ever acting, with noiseless foot and unalarming advance, gaining ground step by step, and holding what it gains, is ingulfing insidiously the special governments into the jaws of that which feeds them. The recent recall to first principles, however, by Colonel Taylor, by yourself, and now by Alexander Smith, will, I hope, be heard and obeyed, and that a temporary check will be effected. Yet be not weary of well-doing. Let the eye of vigilance never be closed.—Jefferson's Works, volume 7, page 212.

On November 21, 1821, he wrote Nathaniel Macon:

> Our Government is now taking so steady a course as to show by what road it will pass to destruction, to wit, by consolidation first, and then corruption, its necessary consequence. The engine of consolidation will be the Federal judiciary; the two other branches the corrupting and corrupted instruments.

He wrote to Mr. Nicholas on the 11th of December, 1821, as follows:

> I fear, dear sir, we are now in such another crisis, with this difference only, that the judiciary branch is alone and single-handed in the present assaults on the Constitution. But its assaults are more sure and deadly as from an agent seemingly passive and unassuming. May you and your contemporaries meet them with the same determination and effect as your father and his did the alien and sedition laws, and preserve inviolate a Constitution which, cherished in all its chastity and purity, will prove in the end a blessing to all the nations of the earth.

Still later, on the 25th of March, 1825, after (to use Mr. Jefferson's own language) "chilling winters had rolled over his head and whitened every hair on it," he wrote to Mr. Edward Livingston:

> One single object, if your provision attains it, will entitle you to the endless gratitude of society—that of restraining judges from usurping legislation. And with no body of men is this restraint more wanting than with the judges of what is commonly called our General Government. * * * They are practicing on the Constitution by inferences, analogies, and sophisms as they would on an ordinary law.
> They do not seem aware that it is not even a constitution formed by a single authority and subject to a single superintendence and control, but that it is a compact of many independent powers, every single one of which claims an equal right to understand it and to require its observance. * * * This member of the Government was at first considered as the most harmless and helpless of all its organs. But it has proved that the power of declaring what the law is, ad libitum, by sapping and mining slily and without alarm the foundations of the Constitution can do what open force would not dare to attempt.

These are a few of the prophecies of the immortal Sage of Monticello touching the danger to our institutions from the Federal judiciary. They are the predictions of one whose "Declaration" has controlled the destiny of a hemisphere, turning the tide of the world from the darkness of despotism to the delights of freedom, and whose

As long as man loves to be free.

We would do well to pause and ponder his admonitions, and not pass by in silence and unheeded the warnings of the greatest political philosopher and prophet of all countries and all times.

Mr. Speaker, I have said that unwarranted encroachments have been made upon the State courts by Federal tribunals. We have only to look at the United States statutes and the judicial construction of them for painful proof of this fact. Let us first examine the law as to civil cases. By the judiciary act of 1789, Revised Statutes, section 639, sub-section 1, it is provided that—

> When the suit is against an alien, or is by a citizen of the State wherein it is brought, and against a citizen of another State, it may be removed on the petition of such defendant filed in such State court at the time of entering his appearance in such State court.

It will be observed that before the cause could be removed under this act the party removing must be a defendant, must also be an alien or a non-resident of the State in which the cause is pending, and must make his application for removal at the time of entering his appearance. These requirements tended to restrict the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. But in 1866 and since that a tide of litigation sufficient to arouse the gravest apprehension has flowed continuously into the United States courts. By the act of 1866 aliens and citizens of other States than that in which the suit was brought are authorized to divide the suit under certain circumstances, removing a portion to the United States courts and leaving it as to part of the defendants in the State courts, a thing unheard of in former times, and an innovation which should never have been tolerated.

The next step taken to degrade the State courts was the act of 1869, which authorized either the plaintiff or the defendant to remove the cause, and at any time before final hearing. In other words, a party might select his court, and commence his suit therein, and after experimenting he might turn his back upon the forum of his choice, and upon his own petition have the cause removed to the United States courts, and there still further harass his victim, till, from exhaustion or want of means to defend his rights, he yielded the matter in controversy. What justice is there in allowing the party bringing a suit to abandon and fly from the forum of his choice? What justice in permitting him to vex his victim by requiring him to dance attendance on every court known to our complex system?

THE FEDERAL COURT TAKES JURISDICTION OF THE NAVIGABLE RIVERS.

What more? The Federal judiciary have not only had their jurisdiction extended over the lands of the United States, but over the waters also. In the earlier history of our Government the Federal court assumed jurisdiction over the waters only so far as tide-water extended. But in this, as in everything else, the jurisdiction of these courts has been enlarged till it extends now over all of our navigable rivers. It is true that thus far the courts have only exercised jurisdiction of civil causes on the water courses; but how long will it be, at their present rate, till they take jurisdiction of crimes committed there?

THE CIVIL RIGHTS BILL

was passed and jurisdiction given to the United States courts of causes arising under it, without any regard to whether the parties to the suit were citizens of the same or of different States, and without any limitation of time within which the application for transfer shall be made. By this legislation, for the first time in the history of this or, so far as I know, any other country, the complexion of the suitor determined the court that should administer justice to him, and we had established one court for one color, and a different tribunal for the other, when all the parties were citizens with equal rights and privileges under the Constitution.

THE FEDERAL COURT ASSUMES CONTROL OF GUARDIANS.

Mr. Speaker, this all-pervading Federal judiciary, by virtue of section 5486, assumes the right to go into our county courts under certain circumstances, take the ward's guardian therefrom, and carry him to the Federal court to be tried for not discharging the duties of his trust. The section is in these words:

If any guardian having the charge and custody of the pension of his ward shall embezzle the same in violation of his trust, or fraudulently convert the same to his own use, he shall be punished by fine not exceeding $2,000, or imprisonment at hard labor for a term not exceeding five years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

Is any man deluded enough to suppose that the founders of the Republic ever anticipated that this authority would be claimed by the Government or yielded by the States? If because the money came from the Government as a pension, the Government may follow up and punish the custodian for embezzlement, why may it not for the same reason follow it for all purposes and control the ward, guardian, and fund to the exclusion of the county courts of the States? If this assumption of authority goes unchallenged, who can tell but that ere long we shall have the General Government, through its judiciary, directing where the ward shall live, how much shall be paid for support, supervising settlements, directing the investment of the fund, and determining who shall inherit upon the death of the ward?

REMOVAL OF CAUSES BY CORPORATIONS.

But, Mr. Speaker, as if not content while a vestige of exclusive jurisdiction remained to the States, Congress in its wild career went further and provided that corporations and individual members of corporations might remove their causes from the State to the Federal court. This change is made by section 640 of the Revised Statutes, which is as follows:

Any suit commenced in any court other than a circuit or district court of the United States against any corporation other than a banking corporation organized under a law of the United States, or against any member thereof, as such member for any alleged liability of such corporation, or of such member as a member thereof, may be removed, for trial, in the circuit court for the district where such suit is pending, &c.

This is the law as to corporations organized under the laws of the United States.

As to corporations organized under the laws of any State, the courts have held that the residence of all of the persons owning or controlling the corporation within the State where the suit is instituted makes no difference. They are still entitled to the removal if the corporation was organized out of the State. Nor will the court hear evidence upon the question of residence of the individuals composing the corporation.

We have reached a point where the citizen is almost powerless in a litigated contest with an immense corporation, and yet we give foreign corporations, or those that are not wholly within a single State, an advantage over the resident citizen in the right to remove the cause to a distant court. Without the people, through their representatives, rise in their legal might and check them, I fear that the day is not far distant when individual property and constitutional liberty may both give way in the unequal contest. Let us take for an example. They are allowed the full protection of the law along their lines, as is the citizen, which is right. They even have the privilege of charging the resident on the line more per mile for carrying his freight than is charged for carrying freight the full length of the line. But when the citizen conceives himself aggrieved and sues he may find himself suddenly carried into the Federal court, to wait for years, and expend much in costs before he gets justice administered. Year after year the people pour out their treasures and build new roads, and year by year larger corporations swallow them up at reduced prices. They never die. If a small road ceases to exist under its charter name, it is only to begin a state of immortality as a branch of a large corporation. Daniel Webster and the Baltimore and Ohio Road were in Washington together. The great constitutional lawyer has been gathered to his fathers a quarter of a century, but the corporation which bore him to "the Monumental City" is yet in its infancy, and only strengthened by the years which have elapsed. When another century shall have passed, and the United States teem with two hundred millions of people, these roads will be more active and powerful than to-day by the increase of commerce from an increase of population.

Men may come and men may go,
But they flow on forever.

Where is the necessity for extending superior advantages to those so able to take care of themselves and so able to crush out the individual? Let favoritism for them cease. Let those who build or support corporations be placed on an equality before the law with them. Let corporations be subject to the judicial authority of the State where they do business. If there is no conflict between the citizen and the corporation, no injury can result from this course. If there is a conflict, let us give the people an equal chance in that conflict.

INSURANCE COMPANIES FREED FROM THEIR AGREEMENTS.

To illustrate the maternal care with which our Federal system hovers over and protects corporations, let us look to the decisions of the courts concerning them. An act was passed by the Legislature of Wisconsin in 1870 providing—

That any fire insurance company, association, or partnership, incorporated by or organized under the laws of any other State of the United States, desiring to transact any such business as aforesaid by any agent or agents in this State, shall first appoint an attorney in this State, on whom process of law can be served, containing an agreement that such company will not remove the suit for trial into the United States circuit court or Federal courts, and file in the office of the secretary of state a written instrument, duly signed and sealed, certifying such appointment, which shall continue until another attorney is substituted.

This statute being in force, the Home Insurance Company of New York, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York, established an agency in Wisconsin, complying with the requirements of the act quoted, and agreeing as follows:

And said company agrees that suits commenced in the State courts of Wisconsin shall not be removed by the acts of said company into the United States circuit or Federal courts.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of the Insurance Company vs. Moss, 20 Wallace, 445, have held that notwithstanding this State statute, notwithstanding the solemn agreement of the corporation to the contrary, it may remove the suit to the United States court. The same has been held in the case of the Hartford Fire Insurance Company vs. Doyle, reported in 3 Central Law Journal, 41.

It is not my purpose to enter into any argument concerning the soundness of these decisions. It is sufficient for us to know that they stand. They are a barrier over which no State Legislature or State constitution can pass and take hold of corporations. The people, after years of patient, hopeful, but unavailing forbearance, cry out for relief. There is but one tribunal on earth which can give it to them, and that is the Congress of the United States. I hope that this, their only city of refuge, will not close its gates against them. They ask nothing more than to be placed on an equality before the courts with corporations, and nothing less should be accorded them.

Congress cannot, and should not attempt to, interfere with the rightful and constitutional jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. There are also some classes of cases which are properly triable in the inferior United States courts. But Congress may regulate the jurisdiction and practice of such inferior courts, and should do so to the extent of relieving us of the hardships which the present system entails.

CRIMINAL JURISDICTION OF THESE COURTS.

The evil does not stop with civil causes. Congress has, by various acts which I will not delay the House by reading, given the district and circuit courts of the United States jurisdiction to remove criminal causes thereto, which arise in the State courts against internal-revenue officers and their assistants for offenses committed by them against the State laws. The gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. ORTH,] in a speech delivered here on this subject, defends the right and propriety of the giving of this jurisdiction to the inferior courts of the United States, and says:

Such jurisdiction of both civil and criminal cases carries with it as an inseparable incident the laws of the State so far as applicable and necessary, from whose courts such transfer has been made.

I insist that this is not in harmony with the genius of our institutions; is not consistent with reason or sound policy, and is in direct conflict with the law as decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. In proof of this position I read from the case of the United States vs. Hudson and Goodwin, 7 Cranch Reports:

The powers of the General Government are made up of concessions from the several States. Whatever is not expressly given to the former the latter expressly reserve. The judicial power of the United States is a constituent part of these concessions. That power is to be exercised by courts organized for the purpose, and brought into existence by an effort of the legislative power of the Union. Of all the courts which the United States may under their general powers constitute, one only—the Supreme Court—possesses jurisdiction derived immediately from the Constitution, and of which the legislative power cannot deprive it. All other courts created by the General Government possess no jurisdiction but what is given them by the power which created them, and can be vested with none but what the power ceded to the General Government will authorize them to confer. * * * The legislative authority of the Union must first make an act a crime, affix a punishment to it, and declare the court that shall have jurisdiction of the offense. * * * Certain implied powers must necessarily result to our courts of justice from the nature of their institution, but jurisdiction of crimes against the State is not among these powers. * * * To fine for contempt, &c., * * * are powers which cannot be dispensed with in a court; but all exercise of criminal jurisdiction in common-law cases we are of opinion is not within their implied powers.

This case is cited and approved in the case of The United States vs. Cooledge et al., 1 Wheaton, 415:

In the case of The United States vs. Burr, which arose in the circuit court of Virginia in 1807, the Chief-Justice of the United States declared that the laws of the several States could not be regarded as rules of decision in trials for offenses against the United States, because no man could be condemned or prosecuted in the Federal court on a statute law.—First Kent's Commentaries, section 334.

Further:

The great difficulty and danger is in leaving it to the courts to say what is an offense against the United States when the law has not sufficiently defined it. The safer course undoubtedly is to confine the jurisdiction in criminal cases to statute offenses duly defined and to cases within the express jurisdiction given by the Constitution.—First Kent's Commentaries, section 341.

Under these authorities the district and circuit courts of the United States cannot convict its officers after their causes are removed, Congress having never made their "act a crime" or "affixed a punishment to it." No such authority can result by mere implication. Life is not taken nor liberty destroyed in any such slip-shod way by implication and resultant criminal jurisdiction. And as these courts have no power to punish, they become merely tribunals to turn loose those who are charged with high crimes.

I presume it is not the purpose of any one to go back and change the mode of disposing of cases which are founded upon difficulties that occurred fifteen or twenty years ago. But for offenses committed recently, in times of profound peace, every man should be amenable to the law he has violated and to the tribunal authorized to vindicate that law.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] also says of a bill now before the House for the restriction of inferior Federal courts:

> But it goes further, and repeals all laws transferring criminal cases from the State to the Federal courts. That would be the effect of the law if passed.

The same position has been assumed by others who have spoken in opposition to this bill.

Mr. Speaker, no such consequence flows from the legislation proposed in this Congress. A complete, ay, the best, remedy for the transfer of all causes containing a Federal ingredient, or against parties on account of any act done as officers or representatives of the Government, is left. Section 709 of the Revised Statutes is not touched by the legislation, and provides for a transfer to the highest court in our Republic. I send it to the Clerk to be read, that members may see that we are not attempting any inroad upon constitutional rights nor to leave officers of the Government without an impartial hearing.

The Clerk read as follows:

> A final judgment or decree in any suit in the highest court of the State, in which a decision in the suit could be had, where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of, or an authority exercised under, the United States, and the decision is against their validity; or where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of, or an authority exercised under any State, on the ground of their being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision is in favor of their validity; or where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the Constitution, or any treaty or statute of, or commission held or authority exercised under, the United States, and the decision is against the title, right, privilege, or immunity specially set up or claimed, by either party, under such Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority, may be re-examined and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court upon a writ of error. The writ shall have the same effect as if the judgment or decree complained of had been rendered or passed in a court of the United States.
> The Supreme Court may reaffirm, reverse, modify, or affirm the judgment or decree of such State court, &c.

CONSEQUENCES OF THESE CHANGES.

And what are the consequences of these changes in the forums of justice? The expense of litigation is increased enormously. The trouble of attending to it is more than doubled. By the process of dividing the suit already mentioned there are two suits where there should be but one, and they probably hundreds of miles apart, and possibly standing for trial on the same day. Strong corporations and wealthy individuals are able to attend and litigate in these courts, while the poor are not, and are virtually deprived of their legal "right to a speedy * * * trial," on account of the crowded state of the dockets and the impossibility of reaching the courts.

One of the charges our fathers made against the King of England in the Declaration of Independence was that of "transporting us beyond seas to be tried for pretended offenses." We had as well be tried "beyond seas" as beyond our county, if in both instances we are alike deprived of the power of obtaining justice. The world has heaped anathemas upon the tyrant who placed his laws so high they could not be read. How much more blamable was he for placing his laws out of sight than we are when we place our courts (through which alone the laws can be enforced) out of reach?

Again, by the present judicial system the citizen may be twice tried for the same offense—once by the State and once by the Government, where the same act is made criminal by the statutes of both. It is true that this grows out of our anomalous dual system of government. But that fact should restrain us from extending the jurisdiction of Federal courts further than is absolutely necessary.

If there was one feature of our judicial system in the States held more sacred by our forefathers than all others, it was that which secured to parties a trial before an impartial jury of the county or vicinage where the cause of action arose. So sedulous were they in the protection of this right that most of the States ingrafted it into their constitutions. It is virtually destroyed in the Federal courts. There the juries are taken from remote parts of the State or district, and had almost as well come from a different State, being total strangers to the parties and their surroundings.

I have already spoken of the great cost to litigants from the administration of justice in the Federal courts. But this is not all; they are immensely costly to the Government. Under democratic rule, before the changes of which I have spoken, the cost of these courts was only a few hundred thousand dollars a year. Now it is millions, and increasing yearly. Too true is it, as stated by Judge Dillon in his work on the Removal of Causes, that "the small tide of litigation that formerly flowed in Federal channels has swollen into a mighty stream." He might have added "and that stream threatens to deluge the country with cost and bear away the dearest privileges of the citizen."

There is another great evil which flows from our present judicial practices. Deputy marshals and their posses may go through the States armed, shooting, destroying property, driving off hogs and cattle of the citizens, beating and killing citizens, and when arrested and prosecuted by the State officials they are permitted to file their petitions in the United States district courts and remove their causes thereto, away from those who witnessed the offense and suffered by it. What more? The district attorney and the Attorney-General for the United States are instructed by the Government to appear and defend the criminal and try to turn him loose. The people of the United States thereby pay officials to defend those who violate law. Is this right? Is it an effort to terrify criminals, or does it tend to encourage crime? I refer to this not as an evil in which the constituents I have the honor to represent are alone interested; for happily for them they have now administering revenue laws in their midst resident officials who are more observant of their rights than non-residents were; but I mention it as a question which affects all of our people alike.

The tendency to centralization is so ably described in an article recently published by a distinguished citizen of Indiana that I quote his language on the subject:

CENTRALIZATION TENDENCIES.

> The centralizing tendency of our national legislation is dangerous for another reason, namely: It is creating discontent, and poisoning the affections of the people toward the Government, thus weakening the spirit of patriotism, upon which exists the ultimate hope of that Government for its just authority and long-continued existence. The humble citizen who, for some technical violation of law, is arrested and taken two hundred or three hundred miles to be tried in a United States court, and after much delay is, perhaps, mulcted in the trifling sum of $10, and finds that the expenses attending the same have amounted to several hundred more, very likely causing the loss of his home and the impoverishment of his family, is painfully impressed with the idea that injustice has been done him, and he becomes from that moment a disaffected member of society. He sees in such treatment a wrong that forever after rankles in his bosom, and causes him to look upon the Government as his oppressor and enemy rather than his protector and friend. In vain may you talk to him of the necessity of a strong government. In vain may you explain that her shield covers him as one of her children. In vain may you point to the insignia of her power and the evidence of her wealth and magnificence. In vain may you contrast the splendor of those granite temples which lavish folly is so rapidly multiplying all over the land for the dispensation of Federal justice, with the modest court-house of his home, for to him, what are they all but the domed and turreted mausoleums of expiring liberty.
> Such courts are not the courts for the people. No matter how learned and impartial their judges may be; no matter how pure the ermine with which they are clothed; no matter how exalted the social position which they occupy, they are the creatures of encroaching power, and like the magnates of the Church of England are expected to "magnify their offices." Their rules are arbitrary and their predilections are in the line of absolutism. They live in the gilded sphere of power and luxurious splendor and their sympathies are not with the homely virtues of the masses. No system that takes the citizen a long distance from his home to be tried for general offenses can ever be satisfactory to a people imbued with a proper spirit of liberty.

These are words of warning from a man who is of the political party which has been most instrumental in passing these laws. Surely he cannot be accused of political bias. I have seen some of the citizens whom I have the honor to represent arrested and carried more than one hundred miles to be tried in a Federal court for a simple misdemeanor. I have seen them required to attend term after term when there was either no case ever made out against them, or so light a case that a mere nominal fine only could properly be imposed. But the poor unfortunates were not liberated till weeks of time and all the money they could get was spent. I have seen those dragged a long distance who were so poor they either had to walk or club together and go in wagons, camping out on the road at night. My object in speaking of these individual cases and their hardships is to show the importance of having justice administered near the parties interested. Why, the gentleman from Ohio told us of two cases in his State where parties had to expend in court costs $300 each in defending themselves against a simple misdemeanor where they were acquitted.

FINALLY IT SEIZES THE BALLOT-BOX.

Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the story of the aggressions of the Federal court, backed up by congressional legislation, does not end even here. There is a glorious privilege for which our fathers fought and died—a privilege "dearer * * * than light and life" to every freeman through whose veins Anglo-Saxon blood flows. It is the right of local self-government through an untrammeled ballot. Sacred as is this franchise—blood-bought though it was—it, too, has been seized by the Federal court and prostrated by the power which Jefferson predicted would be the destruction of our institutions. Section 2012 of the Revised Statutes, passed in 1871, provides for the appointment of supervisors of elections. By section 2017 they are required—

> To personally inspect, from time to time, and at all times, on the day of election, the manner in which the voting is done, and the way and methods in which the poll-books, registry-lists, and tallies or check-books, whether the same are required by any law of the United States, or any State, territorial, or municipal law, are kept.

Section 2021, also passed in 1871, provides for the appointment of special deputy marshals.

Section 2022 provides that—

> The marshal and his general deputies, and such special deputies, shall keep the peace, and support and protect the supervisors of election in the discharge of their duties, preserve order at such places of registration and at such polls, prevent fraudulent registration and fraudulent voting thereat, or fraudulent conduct on the part of any officer of election, and immediately, either at the place of registration or polling-place, or elsewhere, and either before or after registering or voting, to arrest and take into custody, with or without process, any person who commits, or attempts or offers to commit, any of the acts or offenses prohibited herein, or who commits any offense against the laws of the United States, &c.

Thus it will be seen that a deputy marshal appointed by a United States court is sent into States to control elections there. He is made the judge of the qualifications of voters and of their good or bad intentions in voting. With no higher process than the policeman's club he may arrest and carry away from the ballot-box an American freeman about to engage in the exercise of the highest political privilege ever bestowed on man.

Can these things be and our liberties last? Can they continue and we be other than slaves? Unfortunately they cannot. They are the handwritings upon the wall which require neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet to interpret, and which tell us that our republican institutions are in danger.

"STRONG GOVERNMENT" THE PLEA.

Under what plea have all these wrongs been perpetrated? What excuse is given for this subversion of the grand system devised and bequeathed to us by the founders of the Republic? It is the same plea under which Napoleon I tore down the Republic and built up the Empire of France. It is the same excuse given by Napoleon III for destroying the liberties of his people and placing upon them monarchy. It is the same under which ambitious men and tyrants have worked from the downfall of the first republic to the establishment of the last despotism. "Necessity for a strong government." What is the necessity for a stronger government than we have? It is already, when cosidered in all its bearings, the most powerful upon which the sun shines. It resisted successfully, when much weaker than it is to-day, the greatest shock to which any free government was ever subjected—far greater than can menace it now. When our unfortunate civil war came and scattered the States of the Union, this mighty Republic was strong enough to gather them up, replace them in their orbits, and move on the brightest constellation in the firmament of nations. And all of this without the post bellum legislation which I have mentioned. This cry of "necessity for strong government" is only a subterfuge. It is the cloak under which are working those who are not content with our form of government. Let us meet it by constitutional methods, but firmly, as becomes men. Let us not, after the lightnings of heaven have yielded to our philosophy, permit the temptations of earth to seduce our patriotism.

The maelstrom on the coast of Norway is the most celebrated whirlpool of the world. Over an area of more than one hundred and twenty-five square miles the circling flood sweeps. It is known now to be very dangerous to navigation, and according to ancient mariners whatever came within the compass of this monster of nature—whether ship or shark, whether whale or whaler—was drawn into the vortex, hurled to the center, and dashed to destruction by the whirling flood.

When the student of history looks out on Time's broad ocean, he sees a political maelstrom more dire, more destructive, than that on Norway's stormy coast. It has circled since the first republic rose, and has wrecked and borne down all the free commonwealths of ancient times by drawing them to centralization, despotism, and ruin.

Its doom is like the Dead Sea air,
And nothing lives that enters there.

There may be seen the wrecks of Rome, of Greece. Strong as they were when they started toward centralized despotism, they were as powerless to resist as is the straw to resist the tornado which impels it. Had the proud Roman been asked whether his country's liberties would not be thrown away, he would have replied indignantly, "No; they are to be perpetual." Yet the pretorian guards, standing upon the ramparts of "the Eternal City," "with a loud voice proclaimed that the Roman world was to be disposed of to the best bidder by public auction," and it was done. Didius Julianus became the purchaser, and was thereby made emperor, and mankind were shocked to see the "mistress of the world" bought, paid for, and controlled by the money of one selfish, scheming, ambitious man. The Appian Way now no longer resounds with the shouts of victorious Roman freemen, and the soft-voiced Italian has sung his sad song in misery and chains in the "City of the Cæsars."

Had the Greek been asked how long his freedom would last, he would have replied with the same infatuation which seems to have seized us, "Forever!" And yet the matrons who raised up sons for the state, and sent them forth commanding them to "return bearing their shields or borne on them," have been succeeded by the groveling tenants of the harem, and slavish degenerate sons have succeeded free and noble sires all over the land of Leonidas and Lycurgus. Let us take warning by their sad fate, and not permit ourselves to be drifted into this focus of centralized despotism and destruction either by congressional mal-legislation or by judicial construction.

[Here the time expired and the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROBINSON. I will now yield the balance of the morning hour to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BARBER.]

Mr. BARBER. Mr. Speaker, with the greatest deference to the distinguished gentlemen who compose the Judiciary Committee of this House and the several gentlemen who have spoken in favor of this bill, I am not by any means satisfied it ought to pass.

It is proposed to fix the minimum jurisdiction of the Federal courts of this country at the sum of $2,000. In other words, the citizen of New York who has loaned only $1,500 in the State of Iowa is to be denied the privilege which you will concede to his neighbor who has loaned the greater sum of $5,000. The citizen of New England who lays claim to forty acres of land in Texas, worth perhaps only $1,500, is to be denied the privilege to assert his rights in the United States courts, a right which you guarantee to the wealthy operator who perhaps claims an entire section worth $10,000.

To my mind, sir, this is a plain and manifest discrimination in favor of the rich man against the poor, one which I commend to the consideration of the distinguished gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WEAVER,] whom I do not see in his seat, but who seems to have the welfare of the people in his peculiar care.

Great Heavens! has it come to this, that we are to see the United States courts converted into institutions for the mere benefit of the bloated bondholders of this country, and that, too, with the consent of our greenback friend from Iowa!

Do I sleep? Do I dream?
Do I wonder and doubt?
Are things what they seem,
Or is visions about?

[Laughter.]

But, sir, it is said we must change the law in regard to the jurisdiction upon promissory notes. A drover in Kansas City borrows money of his broker, say, $1,500. The broker wants to discount that paper in Chicago or New York; but you say to the bankers of Chicago and New York, "If you discount that paper, your remedy must be in the local courts of Missouri." I am not ready to say that to the great trade of the Southwest.

It is said you must confine actions in the United States courts to the actual residence of the defendant or the plaintiff. If I go to Texas and sue the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Commerce, I must go into his district. If he comes to Chicago and into my district I can sue him, but if I happen to meet him in Ohio or New York I cannot sue him. That is a solicitude for the defendant in my judgment unparalleled, even in these days of modern refinement.

Corporations must be turned over to the local courts. The Union Pacific and Texas Pacific, those two great lines which make up the highways around the globe—no national interest in them! The great channels of trade to six hundred millions of people in the under world! I should be glad to hear from the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee on that question.

Mr. Speaker, for ninety years we have seen the flow of capital in this country from the East to the West. The accumulations of the older States have found ready investment with each advance of civilization, and this borrowed capital has had something to do with this wondrous wave of progress which has swept across this country like the swelling tide of the ocean since 1789. Need I tell this House of the countless loans scattered throughout the West and Southwest under the sum of $2,000! Do you want to serve a notice on the farmers and merchants and business men of the West and Southwest that these small loans cannot be renewed; that they must be paid at maturity? Do you want to tell the merchants of the West and Southwest that from the passage of this bill mercantile credits under the sum of $2,000 are to be obtained in the East with difficulty? This best guarantee of security to investments found in recourse to the national courts for nearly three-quarters of a century must be withdrawn, it is said, and the holders of private obligations in the North and East, of town bonds, municipal bonds and other corporate liabilities of every character under the sum of $2,000, must be remitted to the State courts for their rights! A dangerous proposition, Mr. Speaker, a bold proposition! Let not gentlemen deceive themselves as to the value of this security. Capital is timid; it demands security; it is never a wanderer whose return is unexpected and unhoped for. And Texas indorses this proposition, the great growing empire State of the Southwest, which invites capital and which invites immigration.

FORTIFICATIONS IN NEW YORK HARBOR.

Mr. MORTON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to present the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, for increased appropriation for the fortifications in New York Harbor.

There was no objection; and the memorial was received, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

It is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

May it please your honorable bodies, it is respectfully represented by the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York that New York Harbor is completely defenseless, in case of war, against iron-clad war ships of modern type, a single one of which might enter it with impunity and do incalculable injury to public and private property, besides inflicting a well-nigh paralyzing blow to the resources of the nation.

From five to six hundred rifled cannon are immediately required for existing fortifications in the harbor, mostly of larger caliber than any possessed by the United States, which cannot be provided by the Ordnance Department for lack of necessary appropriations for the purpose by Congress, although such have been urgently recommended by the Executive Government, in view of the utterly unprotected condition of our sea-coast.

The appropriation recommended by the House of Representatives in the "fortifications appropriation bill" lately passed by that branch of Congress is entirely inadequate for the purpose for which the Chief of Ordnance has asked $950,000 for expenditure during the next fiscal year. It is intended to be sufficient only to defray the cost of, at most, thirty-five comparatively small rifled guns, with which in case of need to defend our thousands of miles of sea-coast against metal-plated steamships, armed with cannon throwing projectiles of over a ton weight, with a range of nine miles.

At this rate of annual expenditure it would take half a century to provide an effectual armament merely for the harbor of New York, should the whole of the funds appropriated be applied to that purpose.

Great cannon are required, such as have been produced by Great Britain and the European continental powers, and it would take years to provide all those needed for New York Harbor alone, if all the available gun-making machinery of the country and unlimited money were to be placed at the disposition of the Ordnance Department.

Great Britain, with the most powerful fleet in existence, has expended upon the defenses of nine of her harbors $35,000,000, and is still actively engaged in the work. She expends about $10,000,000 annually for new cannon.

Similar liberal expenditures for the like purpose are imperatively called for on the part of the United States, for until sufficient weapons of defense are provided the chief commercial ports of the nation are exposed to capture so soon as war is declared, and our Government thus deprived of most of its revenues which are derived from these sources; meanwhile our excessive weakness to resist attack is in itself sufficient to invite imposition and insult to the nation, and renders it powerless to resent injuries or extend protection to our countrymen at home or abroad.

For such reasons, and especially for the protection of the immense amount of national property of various kinds collected in New York City, and of the commerce and wealth from which so large an amount of the Federal revenues are drawn, independent of local considerations, it is pre-eminently important that this harbor shall be put in an efficient state of defense; and your memorialists therefore pray that an appropriation be made from the national Treasury of sums adequate to enable the Federal Government to provide, with all practicable expedition, such heavy rifled ordnance and other protecting weapons as are deemed necessary by the Bureau of Ordnance and Engineers.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

NEW YORK, February 5, 1880.

CONSULAR REPORTS.

Mr. MORTON, by unanimous consent, presented resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York in reference to consular reports; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

They are as follows:

Whereas this chamber being in full sympathy with the movement inaugurated within the last few years by the Department of State for the extension of our foreign commerce through the medium of our consuls in the several countries; and

Whereas we believe the reports of our consuls showing the commerce, wants, and peculiarities of the world's markets, and the best manner of introducing and developing American trade therein, have been of the greatest assistance and importance to our producers, manufacturers, and exporters; and

Whereas the early publication of these reports would greatly enhance their value; much of their immediate practical usefulness being lost when they reach the public through the annual volumes of commercial relations with foreign countries, which is now the only official mode of giving them to the country:

Be it therefore resolved, That Congress be requested, in addition to the present annual volume of Commercial Relations, which is a standard work of great value, to make provision for the weekly and monthly publication of these consular reports, and their distribution to at least the leading commercial bodies of the United States.

Resolved, That a copy of this preamble and resolution be forwarded to the Senate and House of Representatives, with the respectful and earnest request that they shall give the same their immediate and favorable consideration.

A true copy.

RATES OF ADVERTISING, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I rise to a privileged report. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 2658) to regulate the award of and compensation for public advertising in the District of Columbia.

The bill, which was read, provides that all advertising required by existing laws to be done in the District of Columbia by any of the departments of the Government shall be given to the three daily newspapers having the largest regular circulation, to be ascertained by the sworn statements of the publishers thereof; provided that the rates of compensation for such service shall in no case exceed the regular commercial rate of the newspapers selected.

Section 2 repeals all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the foregoing paragraph.

Mr. BUCKNER. I rise to a question of order, that this is not a privileged report. It proposes to change existing law.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken, as the privilege of the Committee on Printing does not extend to this character of report, but relates only to the printing of executive documents.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I withdraw the report for the present.

RESERVOIRS AT THE SOURCES OF THE MISSISSIPPI, ETC.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred under Rule 100 a map to accompany Executive Document No. 39, being the report of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army upon reservoirs at the sources of the Mississippi, Saint Croix, Chippewa, and Wisconsin Rivers, reported the same back with the recommendation that the map be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

SURVEYS OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT HANNIBAL, MISSOURI.

Mr. HATCH, by unanimous consent, presented a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of surveys of the Mississippi River at Hannibal, Missouri, and memorial of the city council of said city of Hannibal, with accompanying reports, and moved that the same be printed and referred to the Committee on Commerce, to accompany the bill (H. R. No. 4359) making an appropriation for the improvement of the channel of the Mississippi River so as to restore and preserve the harbor of the city of Hannibal, in the State of Missouri.

The motion was agreed to.

MARIA A. ROUSSEAU.

Mr. LAPHAM, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4422) granting an increase of pension by way of arrears to Maria A. Rousseau, widow of Brigadier-General Lovell H. Rousseau; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

LIEN FOR SUPPLIES, ETC., TO VESSELS.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4423) to give a lien for repairs made and supplies furnished vessels on the credit of such vessels in their home port; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

RAILWAY FROM SAULT STE. MARIE.

Mr. HUBBELL, by unanimous consent, presented the petition of Charles S. Barker, L. P. Tremp, and 520 others, asking Congress to appropriate sixteen sections per mile of United States lands to aid in the construction of a railway from Sault Ste. Marie to some point on the line of Marquette and Mackinaw Railroad; which was referred to the Committee on Railway and Canals.

Mr. HUBBELL. I ask unanimous consent to have the body of the petition printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The petition is as follows:

To the honorable members of the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Your petitioners would most respectfully represent that the lands belonging to the United States in the counties of Chippewa and Schoolcraft, in the upper peninsula of the State of Michigan, are now almost valueless, on account of their inaccessibility, through lack of railway facilities; are separated from the populous districts of Lower Michigan by the waters of Lakes Huron and Michigan; are almost entirely without wagon-roads or other means of communication except by water in summer; that their isolated position, the severity of the climate in winter, the sterility of the soil as hitherto regarded, combined with the shortness of the season necessary for the growth and maturity of grain, have prevented extensive settlement thereon.

The State of Michigan has, through the act of the Legislature, granted a subsidy of sixteen sections of land per mile to aid in the construction of a railway from the Straits of Mackinaw to the city of Marquette, on Lake Superior, thus appropriating all the State swamp lands in the counties of Chippewa and Schoolcraft, although the railway thus projected and aided is not intended to pass through and perhaps will not even touch the limits of the county of Chippewa. The area of the county of Chippewa is extensive—being half as large again as the State of Rhode Island—embracing the eastern end of the Upper Peninsula of Michigan, and containing within its limits, at the Falls of Sault Ste. Marie, the magnificent canal, with expensive and costly locks, which are now being enlarged and constructed under the supervision and at the expense of the United States. That no communication can be had with this national work during the season of winter, except with the most crude contrivances and during the most favorable weather. That a railway is an absolute necessity to connect this, the gateway of water communication to the new Northwest, with the older sections of the country, for its greater protection, situated as it is on our national frontier, and for easier access on account of a continual liability to injury and frequent need of repair. That a railway from the Falls of Sault Ste. Marie to some point on the Marquette and Mackinaw Railroad, now projected and soon to be constructed, which, with the connections proposed, will form a continuous line of railway across the peninsula to the present terminus of the Northern Pacific at Duluth—thus opening up the vast mineral resources of this region to still greater development. That the Falls of Sault Ste. Marie present to the manufacturer almost endless facilities for development in the grinding of wheat, soon to be produced in almost unlimited quantities in the new Northwest, or for other purposes of manufacturing for which such vast power may be required, providing ample railway facilities were afforded for daily shipment to the great markets of the country.

In view of these various considerations, our own remoteness and isolation without these modern means of communication, the worthlessness of the lands as they are now regarded, the necessity of communication in winter with your magnificent canal for still-closer supervision and repair, and a nearer connection with the seaboard which this projected railway will ultimately induce, your petitioners would most respectfully and earnestly request the passage of an act by your honorable body appropriating sixteen sections per mile of United States land situate in the counties of Chippewa and Schoolcraft, in the State of Michigan, to aid in the construction of a railway not exceeding seventy-five miles in length from the village of Sault Ste. Marie to some point on the line of the Marquette and Mackinaw Railroad near Manistee Lake, by which connection both of which roads would pass through the central portion of the upper peninsula, and would form an almost air line from the falls of Sault Ste. Marie to the city of Marquette, in the State of Michigan.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

BIBLES, ETC., IN CHINESE LANGUAGE.

Mr. TUCKER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4424) to admit free of duty Bibles and other religious books in the Chinese language for gratuitous distribution by religious and missionary societies; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

JUDICIAL POWERS IN TERRITORIES.

Mr. BRENTS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4425) amending section 1907 of the Revised Statutes so as to confer appropriate judicial powers upon city recorders or police judges in certain Territories in the United States, and confirming certain acts of the Legislative Assemblies of such Territories relative thereto; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

MILEAGE OF JURORS AND WITNESSES IN TERRITORIES.

Mr. BRENTS also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4426) in relation to the mileage of jurors and witnesses in the several Territories of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

MARGARET LEE.

Mr. KILLINGER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4427) granting a pension to Margaret Lee, widow of the late Colonel Arthur T. Lee; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules; and, pending that motion, I move that all debate on clause 21 of Rule XI now under consideration, and amendments thereto, be limited to ten minutes.

The motion to limit debate was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

REVISION OF RULES.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. CARLISLE in the Chair,) and resumed consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CHALMERS] to clause 21 of Rule XI. The Clerk will read the clause and the proposed amendments.

The clause and the proposed amendments were read.

The pending clause was as follows:

21. —— to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River.

The blank in the clause, it was moved by Mr. CHALMERS, should be filled by the words:

To the improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and all surveys and estimates relating thereto.

For which Mr. FRYE had proposed as a substitute the words:

To the levees of the Mississippi River.

Mr. GIBSON. I had an amendment pending which I ask shall now be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana, and the Chair will determine if it is in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

In Rule X, line 24, strike out "levees and" and insert "and its tributaries;" so that it will read:

"On improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, to consist of thirteen members."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment which the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] has sent up is to a rule which has been passed in the committee; but, according to the recollection of the Chair, the consideration of the amendment was postponed until the committee should reach clause 21 of Rule XI.

Mr. GIBSON. I have observed, Mr. Chairman, that many misapprehensions exist with regard to the origin, scope, and powers of this committee. I think I may remove them by briefly stating the history of this committee.

Since the acquisition of the Territory of Louisiana, which embraces seventeen States and Territories, the improvement of the Mississippi River has been a question before the Congress of the United States.

The rapid extension of our population into the valley of the Mississippi, the growth of its agricultural and commercial interests, and, within the last few years, the application of modern machinery and improved methods of agriculture, have developed the resources of the Mississippi Valley so that the people of that section demand that they shall receive consideration at the hands of the Congress of the United States.

The Government of the United States donated to the States along the Mississippi River all the public lands that were liable to overflow by that river, in order that the proceeds arising from the sales of those lands should be devoted to the purpose of improving the river. Since then, at every Congress, we have appointed special committee after special committee to take this matter into consideration. It was not, however, until the Forty-fourth Congress that, on my motion, a committee was authorized and appointed, to be one of the standing committees of this House, to take this subject into consideration and to bring it in some authoritative manner before the House of Representatives.

Within the last few years new ideas have been developed in regard to the treatment of the Mississippi River. The success of Captain J. B. Eads in constructing jetties at the mouth of that river has established beyond controversy the fact that as you confine the waters of this stream it deepens its channel. This is an important fact, and the people of that section of the country feel that it has been established by a scientific process that the levees and jetties were instruments of commerce. In the language of the engineers of the United States, in a communication addressed to the Chief of Engineers, the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River and the levees of the Mississippi River are inseparably connected as interdependent.

Hence it was that in the Forty-fifth Congress on my resolution this committee was constituted to a committee on the improvement of the Mississippi River. We now insist that the committee should also have jurisdiction of the tributaries of the Mississippi River. And how are we confronted? On the one hand the chairman of the Committe on Commerce [Mr. REAGAN] tells us that if we sever these commercial questions, if we divide the continent between two committees, we will defeat all appropriations for the improvement of our rivers and harbors. Upon what ground does that gentleman plant himself when he makes that statement? It is unmistakably on the ground that if you diminish the ability to log-roll in this House you will defeat the appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors.

On the other hand, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] tells us that if we divide this subject between two committees and give the Committee on the Mississippi River jurisdiction over the subject of improving the Mississippi River and its tributaries we will increase the facility of log-rolling and bankrupt the Treasury of the United States. Hence you see the strange spectacle presented of those in favor of log-rolling and who want extravagant appropriations joining hands with gentlemen who declare themselves in favor of rigid economy in order to defeat the constitution of this committee. The friends of this committee are on the one hand not parsimonious economists, nor on the other hand are they in favor of a general system of log-rolling. They believe that the Mississippi River is entitled to consideration at the hands of this House; that its main tributaries are also entitled to fair treatment and justice from members of this House. We believe that if this question stands before the House on its merits it will receive the consideration to which it is entitled, and will secure the appropriations that a sense of justice and a sense of the proprieties of the case will require from the representatives of the people.

I request the members of this House to reflect upon the proposition enunciated the other day by the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON,] when he stated that you could not improve the main channel of the Mississippi River without taking into consideration the tributaries, and you could not improve the tributaries without at the same time——

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PHISTER obtained the floor.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that five minutes' more time be given for debate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I make the point of order that it is not competent for the Committee of the Whole to extend the time for debate, when the House by its order has placed a limit upon debate.

Mr. BAYNE. I know the time has been limited, but it was understood that I was to have five minutes upon this question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am not a party to any such understanding. I do not desire to speak myself, but I do want to stop the talking and go to voting.

Mr. PHISTER. Am I entitled to the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman desires to speak against the pending amendment, he is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PHISTER. "Divide and conquer" is a motto of both military and political warfare. When the daring adventurer, Cortez, invaded Mexico his success in conquering that people was due more to his skill and energy in exciting and utilizing divisions among their chiefs and tribes than to the prowess of himself and his soldiers, great as it was. The schisms and internecine strifes of the inhabitants of Jerusalem caused that great city to fall before the arms of Titus. We read in Æsop's Fables of the contention between the different members of the human body as to their relative importance in maintaining its life and strength and what would have been the fatal result of such folly but for its cessation. In party contests, we know from history and observation that the aim of the competitors is to distract and divide the followers of rival leaders, and thus achieve an assured victory. We witness every day such efforts on the political chess-board.

Such being the philosophy of history and experience, I must be permitted respectfully to express my surprise at the amendment offered on Friday last by the honorable gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. CHALMERS,] and the same amendment now offered by the honorable gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. GIBSON.] It comes from, I believe, friends of river and harbor improvements, and I concede that it is prompted by good intentions. But in my humble judgment it is a mistaken, because an unwise policy. The object of the friends of river and harbor improvements should be to unite and concentrate their efforts, and not to divide. In legislation on this subject let the friends of the great Mississippi join with those on the ocean; let the lakes combine with the gulf, and the Susquehanna and the Delaware with the Ohio, and they will move with a majesty and power that will command the confidence and support of the people, and deserve and achieve success here in necessary, not unduly extravagant, appropriations. But let our counsels be distracted, let our efforts be divided, and they will be defeated, or their success will be uncertain and limited much below what is necessary.

The object of this amendment is to separate the Mississippi River and its tributaries from the balance of the country in legislation for their improvement. While it may apparently give importance to that river, will it not lead to a struggle between its friends and the friends of great improvements in other parts of the country? Will there not thus be a likelihood of each pulling against the other instead of pulling together, and will not almost certain success be in this way turned into defeat? Reasoning from human nature and experience it seems to me that such will be the result of this amendment. Fas est ab hoste doceri. We have seen how readily and almost gratefully those opposed to a national system of river and harbor improvements have received this amendment. Let us take warning in time from this action on their part.

Further, the effect of this amendment will be, I fear, to excite and probably create rivalries between the Mississippi itself and its tributaries. And thus, in their divisions, all may fail. My distinguished friend from Virginia, General JOHNSTON, contemplated this matter in an engineering view. In that light it might be best to have the improvement of the Mississippi and its tributaries under one head. Can this not be under a reference to the Committee on Commerce, which is friendly, as well as if to a special committee on the Mississippi and its tributaries? And cannot, and will not, the surveying and engineering of their improvement be under one general management if the Committee on Commerce has charge of the subject?

It would probably be unjust to attribute this amendment to a desire to magnify the Mississippi at the expense of its tributaries. But may not the effect of it be, for the improvement of that great river, to obscure and belittle the improvement of its tributaries, as its channel receives and absorbs the waters of the Ohio and other confluents? In the natural world the great animals destroy and feed upon the smaller ones. The big fish swallow the little ones. And if the Mississippi is thus to diminish and dwarf the importance of its tributaries will they not combine against the monopoly? And in this struggle the great Father of Waters may unfortunately meet a fate not contemplated by its friends.

If this amendment is to pass, why not have a separate committee on the important harbor of New York, another separate committee on the lakes or for each of the great lakes, and so on, and thus have our counsels divided and our labors frittered away in detail?

No, gentlemen, the true policy is to stand together under one committee, to march together in union and harmony under one banner; and then, as has been shown in previous votes on the rules relative to this matter, we can prevail over any opposition. Division is weakness and may end in failure.

Representing, as I do, a district bordering one hundred and thirty miles on the Ohio, and on a greatly important tributary to it, navigable in and between three States for over one hundred miles, and running through a country abounding in timber, coal and mineral wealth, I can see no advantage in this amendment to useful work in improving those rivers, but probably much injury to them, and must therefore oppose it.

Let me not be misunderstood in another regard. I class myself as a friend to national river and harbor improvements; but am not in favor indiscriminately of such as are merely local in situation and importance. But wherever a river is a great channel of communication between different parts of the country or has great elements of wealth along its course and runs in or between several States so as to require a combined effort to improve it, there such union and combination can only be successfully achieved through the Federal Government. And in some instances harbors and rivers, though only in one State, may be of such vast importance to the whole country or great sections of it as to be of national significance. The improvement of such rivers and harbors is and should be a national work. And the great Calhoun meant to include the important navigable tributaries when he spoke of the Mississippi as a "great inland sea." Their waters supply it, and it should not pursue a policy that may militate against the importance and improvement of its sources.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question being taken on the amendment offered by Mr. FRYE as a substitute for the amendment of Mr. CHALMERS, there were—ayes 93, noes 46.

Mr. GIBSON. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GIBSON and Mr. FRYE were appointed.

Mr. DUNNELL. I am satisfied that the question before the committee is not well understood. Perhaps it ought to be stated again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause to be read everything pertaining to the pending question. The Clerk will first read the pending clause.

The Clerk read as follows:

21. —— to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be observed that in the clause as reported by the Committee on Rules, the subject to be referred to this committee is left blank. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CHALMERS] proposes to fill that blank by inserting what the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and all surveys and estimates relating thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] proposes to insert as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi the language which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the levees of the Mississippi River.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the adoption of the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Is it in order to offer a further amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order now. The committee is dividing.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 129, noes 41.

So the amendment of Mr. FRYE was agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON. I presume, Mr. Chairman, that my amendment now comes up?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Louisiana is an amendment to line 24 of Rule X, to which the committee will return as soon as this matter is disposed of. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROBERTSON] desired, as the Chair understood, to offer a further amendment.

Mr. CHALMERS. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCLANE] has an amendment to which I think the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROBERTSON] will assent.

Mr. MCLANE. I ask for the reporting of the amendment as it now stands.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert "to the levees of the Mississippi River;" so that the clause as amended will read: "To the levees of the Mississippi River: to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River."

Mr. MCLANE. I move to amend by striking out the words "to the levees of the Mississippi River," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "the report of the Mississippi River commission." I desire to say a few words in explanation of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will remember that by order of the House all debate upon this clause is now closed.

Mr. PRICE. I make a point of order on the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, that it is not in order to move to strike out what has just been inserted by a vote of the committee.

Mr. MCLANE. I move, then, to amend the amendment by adding the words "and the report of the Mississippi River commission."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland misapprehends perhaps the situation of the question.

Mr. MCLANE. Will the Chair explain it?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CHALMERS] moved an amendment to insert certain words in the blank left by the Committee on Rules. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] proposed a substitute for that amendment, which the Committee of the Whole has just adopted; so that the question is now upon the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi as amended by the vote of the committee on motion of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. MCLANE. Now I desire to inquire whether the substitute is not open to amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland now offers a substitute for the substitute which the Committee of the Whole has just adopted.

Mr. MCLANE. I suppose I need not offer it as a substitute, but may offer it as an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. But it is in fact a proposed substitute for the substitute which the committee has just adopted.

Mr. CHALMERS. Not necessarily.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland will please explain his motion.

Mr. MCLANE. I understand the case now to be that the words proposed by the gentleman from Maine have been adopted as a substitute for the words proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi. The latter words have now disappeared, and in lieu thereof stand the words proposed by the gentleman from Maine. Now I propose to amend the substitute as amended by the committee. I take it for granted that the substitute is open to amendment, and as I cannot move to strike out I move to add the words "and the report of the Mississippi River commission." This motion, I think, is strictly within parliamentary rule. In support of this amendment I wish to say a word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland as he now states it. If he proposes now to add the words "and the report of the Mississippi River commission," the Chair will hold the motion to be in order. But that is not the amendment which was sent to the desk and read to the committee.

Mr. MCLANE. The amendment I have just stated is the one I desire to offer.

Mr. PRICE. I make the point that debate on the pending clause is closed.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this clause is closed by order of the House, and the Chair has no discretion in the matter.

Mr. GIBSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I had the honor to offer an amendment to line 11 or 12. The order of the committee was that this amendment was to be considered as pending when we should reach line 24. I would like to inquire whether that amendment is not now pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the situation as understood here at the desk. When Rule No. X as reported by the Committee on Rules was under consideration, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] proposed an amendment to line 24, and the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. CHALMERS,] according to the recollection of the Chair, also proposed an amendment to line 25, to increase the number of members of the committee. By unanimous consent, those two amendments were passed over until the committee reached

Rule No. XI, which is now under consideration, and should dispose of the clause as proposed by the committee. The Chair intended at all times, as soon as the committee disposed of clause 21, to return to lines 24 and 25 of Rule X, and dispose of the amendments proposed by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] and the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. CHALMERS.]

Mr. REAGAN. What is the question before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. MCLANE.]

Mr. REAGAN. I only rise to say——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. MCLANE. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. Was the amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Maine an amendment to it or a substitute for it?

The CHAIRMAN. A substitute for it, and the question remains of filling the blank of the amendment with the number of the committee.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to understand it. An affirmative vote fills the blank by the word "levees."

The CHAIRMAN. It will, in the manner just adopted by the committee.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I rise to a parliamentary question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Is this the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland?

The CHAIRMAN. No; that amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Then I renew it, to come in after the word "levees," and for the sole purpose that this committee shall have the right to take charge of the report of the commission they themselves created. [Cries of "Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order, and the question recurs on the amendment to insert the words "and the report of the Mississippi River commission."

Mr. ACKLEN. I should like to ask a parliamentary question. Has that report been made or is it a report yet to be made?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ACKLEN. It is a question for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not informed whether it is or not.

Mr. ACKLEN. I make this point, that if the amendment refers to a report yet to be made——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. ROBESON. I ask that the resolution creating the commission and defining its powers be read.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order.

Mr. ROBESON. I ask that the proceedings of the House which authorized the commission, whose report is now to be submitted to this committee, and which defines the power of that commission, be read by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a law passed by Congress which every gentleman can see, and its reading would be in the nature of debate, which is prohibited under the rules.

Mr. GIBSON. I hope the gentleman's request will be complied with.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I hope so too.

The CHAIRMAN. It cannot be complied with if objection be made.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I hope it will be complied with to show the gentleman from New Jersey——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HAWLEY. It has got to go there anyhow.

Mr. ROBERTSON. If so, then all right. I demand a division of the committee on the amendment I have offered.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 66.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question recurred on Mr. CHALMERS's amendment as amended, and it was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now return, under the order of the committee, to lines 24 and 25 of Rule X, so as to dispose of the amendments there pending. The amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] will first be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rule X, line 24, amend by striking out "levees and" and insert "and its tributaries;" so it will read: "on improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, to consist of eleven members."

The amendment was rejected.

The question next recurred on Mr. CHALMERS's amendment; which was read, as follows:

Strike out "eleven" and insert "thirteen;" so it will read, "on levees and improvement of the Mississippi River, to consist of thirteen members."

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now return to Rule XI, clause 22.

The Clerk read as follows:

22. To education and labor: to the Committee on Education and Labor;
23. To the militia of the several States: to the Committee on the Militia;
24. To patents: to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. VANCE. I move to amend so it will read, "and that the Committee on Patents shall receive the estimates and report the appropriation bills for the support of the United States Patent Office."

Mr. Chairman, the Committee of the Whole have directed that the Committee on Agriculture, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and the Committee on Commerce shall have control of the appropriation bills for all matters pertaining to those different departments. I think it is equally important that the Committee on Patents should have control of, and report, appropriation bills for the support of the United States Patent Office.

It will be borne in mind, Mr. Chairman, that the country is not taxed to support the Patent Office of the United States. There is not a dollar of tax laid upon the people of this country for its maintenance or support. It is supported by the inventors of the country. The report of the Commissioner of Patents for the year 1879 shows that there were applications for patents amounting to 19,300; applications for design-patents, 697; for the reissue of patents, 639; for registration of trade-marks, 1,465; patents granted, (including reissues, designs, &c.,) 12,471; labels registered, 403.

The total receipts of the Patent Office for the year 1879 aggregate, according to this report of the Commissioner of Patents, $703,146.79. Of this amount there was expended for the Patent Office itself, $548,-651.47, showing an excess of receipts above the expenditures of $154,495.32.

Now, sir, I think it is a reasonable proposition, as the Patent Office is supported by the money paid into it by the inventors of the whole country, that the Committee on Patents should have exclusive jurisdiction and control of the legislation affecting this great interest. While it is admitted that the interests of agriculture are of great importance to the country, it cannot be denied that the development of the country, and the development to a large extent of agriculture itself, are greatly indebted to the success of our system of patents. The interests of agriculture in this country have been greatly enhanced by the development of the patent system. There is no one department of this Government which has done more for the material welfare and prosperity of the people than that. The million of bushels of grain, of corn, wheat, and every other kind of grain known to our agricultural interests have been added to and increased by the invention and successful operation of labor-saving machinery, fostered, as such inventions have been, by the patent laws of this country. I think it is true that the appropriations for the Patent Office for many years were reported by the Committee on Patents, and I see no reason why they should not continue to be reported by that committee.

At the present time it is very important that the Committee on Patents should have control of the appropriations, from the fact that I hold in my hand the report of the Commissioner of Patents which states that he has not under his control a sufficient force to do the work of the office, and it is alleged to be a fact, and I believe it to be true, that at this time the inventors of the country are compelled to wait a month before they can receive their patents after the application has been filed.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 82.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NEWBERRY. I move to insert, after the word "patents," in this clause 24, the words "copyrights and trade-marks;" so that it will read, if adopted:

To patents, copyrights, and trade-marks: to the Committee on Patents.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment needs no extended remarks from me in support of it. It would seem to commend itself at once to the consideration of everybody that these are cognate subjects and should be referred to the same committee.

Mr. TUCKER. The Supreme Court has decided that trade-marks are unconstitutional.

Mr. NEWBERRY. But there are questions now pending with regard to these very things based upon the decision of the Supreme Court, which, if it is proper, should be referred to a committee, and there can be no more appropriate committee than the Committee on Patents.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not see why we should adopt this amendment. As the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] says, the Government has no power to issue any trade-mark patents or license. The whole question of copyrights belongs exclusively to the Librarian of Congress.

Mr. CLYMER. To the Committee on the Library.

Mr. HASKELL. To the Committee on the Library, and that committee should have charge of the question of copyrights, if any committee is to be placed in charge of the subject. The Committee on Patents have nothing whatever to do with the Library, and there is no such thing as a copyright, while the Supreme Court has ruled out the trade-mark altogether. I do not see any reason why this committee should be encumbered with what does not belong to it, and with matters over which it can exercise no possible control.

Mr. FINLEY. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan by striking out the word "copyright."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINLEY] proposes to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] by striking out the word "copyrights."

Mr. CLYMER rose.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I object to debate. The committee is dividing.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

The question being taken on Mr. FINLEY'S amendment to the amendment, there were ayes 14, noes not counted.

So the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. NEWBERRY.]

Mr. CLYMER. Upon that I can say a word. I move to strike out the last word. I wish the committee not to do a thing which I think they will regret. The whole subject of copyrights is by law committed to the Library.

Mr. HAWLEY. But we have a right to amend the law.

Mr. CLYMER. But not by a rule of this House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If a petition were sent in here relating to copyright, would it not be competent to refer it to the Committee on Patents?

Mr. CLYMER. It would, if such were the pleasure of the House. But that subject properly belongs to the Library, and is in the hands of the Committee on the Library. Why should it go to the Committee on Patents rather than to any other committee? If any gentleman can show any relation between the two subjects, I would be glad to hear him.

Mr. HAWLEY. These subjects come together in the Constitution, and are evidently in the contemplation of that instrument cognate subjects. We grant certain privileges to inventors and we grant certain privileges to authors. The two subjects go together.

I know that so far as registering a copyright is concerned, that is committed to the Librarian of Congress. You go to the Librarian, pay your fee, deposit two copies of your book, and get a certificate of copyright. But suppose it is thought necessary to have some new legislation concerning copyrights, the subject would have to go to some committee. And what would be more natural than that it should go to the Committee on Patents, a copyright being next door to a patent, one being a patent on a book and the other is a patent on a machine.

As to trade-marks it is quite proper that subject should go there also. The Supreme Court has decided that the trade-mark law is unconstitutional; but there remain on the statute-book some unrepealed laws on the subject, and in the Treasury there are large sums paid by our people on the supposition Congress was giving them some rights; and there may be petitions for a constitutional amendment in favor of trade-marks. Papers may come before us relating to trade-marks, although the law has been declared unconstitutional.

These are evidently cognate subjects. We have a Committee on Patents, and why those other matters should not be put under charge of the same committee I cannot understand.

Mr. NEWBERRY. By referring to the first paragraph of Rule XI it will be seen in what connection this amendment places the whole subject. It says:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, namely: Subjects relating—

And if my amendment be adopted, it will read:

To patents, copyrights, and trade-marks: to the Committee on Patents.

It will not be contended for an instant that there cannot be legislation here, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Connecticut, with regard to trade-marks and also in regard to copyrights, although the Supreme Court may have declared the present law in regard to trade-marks unconstitutional.

The question being taken on Mr. NEWBERRY'S amendment, there were—ayes 69, noes 28.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was adopted.

The Clerk resumed the reading of Rule XI, and read the following:

25. To the pensions of the civil war: to the Committee on Invalid Pensions;
26. To the pensions of all the wars of the United States other than the civil war: to the Committee on Pensions;
27. To private and domestic claims and demands whatsoever, other than war claims against the United States: to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Unless the Committee on the Revision of the Rules have some particular reason for retaining the word "whatsoever" in clause 27, I will move to strike it out. It adds nothing to the force of the paragraph, and it does not follow the phraseology of the other clauses. For instance, take clause 16:

To railways and canals other than Pacific railroads.

The word "whatsoever" is not inserted there. Again in clause 19:

To the public buildings and occupied or improved grounds of the United States.

You do not say "whatsoever." But in clause 27 it is said:

To private and domestic claims and demands whatsoever.

It seems to me the word "whatsoever" is redundant.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am perfectly willing to have the word struck out provided we can come to a vote.

There being no objection, the word "whatsoever" was struck out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that instead of "the Committee of Claims" the name of the committee should read "Committee on Claims."

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is a typographical error.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read as follows:

28. To claims arising from any war in which the United States has been engaged: to the Committee on War Claims;
29. To private claims to lands: to the Committee on Private Land Claims;
30. To the District of Columbia: to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am directed by the committee to offer the amendment to clause 30 which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Columbia," in line 1, insert the words "other than appropriations therefor;" and strike out the word "for" and insert "on;" so that it will read:

"To the District of Columbia, other than appropriations therefor: to the Committee on the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

31. To the revision and codification of the statutes of the United States: to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws;
32. The examination of the accounts and expenditures of the several Departments of the Government and the manner of keeping the same; the economy, justness, and correctness of such expenditures; their conformity with appropriation laws; the proper application of public moneys; the security of the Government against unjust and extravagant demands; retrenchment; the enforcement of the payment of moneys due to the United States; the economy and accountability of public officers; the abolishment of useless offices; the reduction or increase of the pay of officers, shall all be subjects within the jurisdiction of the eight standing committees on the public expenditures in the several departments, as follows:
33. In the Department of State: to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department;
34. In the Treasury Department: to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department;
35. In the War Department: to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department;
36. In the Navy Department: to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department;
37. In the Post-Office Department: to the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department;
38. In the Interior Department: to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department;
39. In the Department of Justice: to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice;
40. To public buildings: to the Committee on Expenditures on the Public Buildings;
41. All proposed action touching the rules and joint rules shall be referred to the Committee on Rules;
42. Touching the expenditure of the contingent fund of the House, the auditing and settling all accounts which may be charged therein by order of the House: to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. WHITE. I move to amend by adding to clause 42, just read, that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

And such committee shall make no allowance on contracts or agreements for furnishing material or labor for the House, unless the contract or agreement therefor shall have been previously made and approved by the Clerk of the House.

Mr. WHITE. I offer that amendment merely to make this clause harmonious with the concluding provisions of clause 3 of Rule III, which provides, under the head of "duties of Clerk," that the Clerk shall "make or approve all contracts, bargains, or agreements relative to furnishing any matter or thing, or for the performance of any labor, for the House of Representatives, in pursuance of law or order of the House." He is the ministerial officer of the House in that respect. The present rule of the House upon that subject, Rule 21, adopted January 30, 1846, is as follows:

All contracts, bargains, or agreements, relative to the furnishing any matter or thing, or for the performance of any labor, for the House of Representatives, shall be made with the Clerk, or approved by him, before any allowance shall be made therefor by the Committee of Accounts.

I think it was the intention of the Committee on Rules to retain in this revision that provision of the present rules. It has been inadvertently left out, I think, and I offer this amendment merely to make this clause harmonious with what has heretofore been adopted by the House.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire for one to object to this practice of amending the title of a bill by injecting into that title a mass of legislation. These clauses now under consideration are not descriptive of the powers and duties of committees, and it does not seem to me that this is the place to adopt an amendment directing what a committee shall do. I suggest that there is a proper place in these rules for that direction, and that place is not here. I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. WHITE. The amendment which I have offered is exceedingly brief and merely preserves the existing rule which requires that all contracts for the furnishing of material, labor, &c., for this House shall be made by the Clerk of the House. My amendment merely indicates that the Committee on Accounts shall first require that that rule be followed before they pass any account. It is merely re-enacting what we have already ordered.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. WHITE; and it was not agreed to upon a division—ayes 15, noes 56.

The Clerk read as follows:

43. The ascertainment of the travel of members of the House shall be made by the Committee on Mileage and reported to the Sergeant-at-Arms;
44. Touching the Library of Congress, statuary, and pictures: to the Joint Committee on the Library;
45. All proposed legislation or order touching printing shall be referred to the Joint Committee on Printing on the part of the House;
46. The enrollment of engrossed bills: to the Joint Committee on Enrolled Bills; and said committee shall have leave to report at any time;

Mr. ROBINSON. I move to amend clause 46, just read, by striking out all after the word "bills," where it occurs the second time; that is, the words "and said committee shall have leave to report at any time."

Mr. FRYE. That is right.

Mr. ROBINSON These words are not necessary in this clause, because the direction is repeated in the next clause.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

47. The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, namely: The Committee on Elections, on the right of a member to his seat; the Committee on Ways and Means, on bills raising revenue; the Committee on Appropriations, the general appropriation bills; the Committee on Enrolled Bills, enrolled bills; the Committee on Printing, on all matters referred to them of printing for the use of the House or two Houses; and the Committee on Accounts, on all matters of expenditure of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. CONVERSE. I move to add to clause 47, just read, that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Every report shall be in writing, and shall give the names of the members of the committee who concur in the recommendations thereof.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to say but one word in favor of that amendment. It appears to me to be in the interest of economy, and I think the effect will be to require of committees more careful examination of the subjects before them. It brings individual responsibility to bear upon the question of reports, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. ROBINSON. It seems to me that the language of the amendment will not quite accomplish what is desired by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CONVERSE.] If he adds that to clause 47 it will apply only to the committees named in that clause. I suppose the gentleman desires to have it apply to all the committees of the House.

Mr. CONVERSE. If it is deemed more advisable I will move to add it to Rule XI as a separate clause—as clause 48.

Mr. ROBINSON. It should be a separate clause.

Mr. LAPHAM. If it is added to clause 47 it will apply to the Committee on Enrolled Bills, named in that clause; and it could hardly be expected that all the members of that committee shall have their names appended to any report made from the committee.

Mr. MILLS. Before any additional clause is added to Rule XI I desire to move an amendment to clause 47, which amendment I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committees on Ways and Means, on Banking and Currency, and on Coinage, Weights, and Measures shall have leave to report at any time, and on motion of any member a majority of the House may fix a day for the consideration of any public bill reported by either of said committees, and the House may continue the consideration of such bill from day to day till disposed of.

Mr. MILLS. The proposition which I now offer is the present rule, word for word. It is the rule which was adopted at the commencement of our recent extra session. This Congress then determined that the Committee of Ways and Means, the Committee on Banking and Currency, and the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures should not only have the privilege of reporting at any time, but also should have the privilege of calling upon the House to fix a day for the consideration of a bill so reported and to continue the consideration of such bill from day to day until disposed of. I do not care to repeat the arguments which I then made, or the argument which I made the other day, why this rule ought to be continued. I think the Committee on Banking and Currency and the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures ought to continue as privileged committees of this House. It is for the House now to decide whether it will recede from the course taken at the commencement of this Congress in reference to this question.

Mr. DUNNELL. Rule XIII proposes that hereafter when committees report the bills reported shall go immediately to one of three calendars. Now, if we adopt Rule XIII we shall be under the necessity of keeping those calendars clear. We do not want a rule that will allow bills to be brought before the House from day to day without regard to those calendars. The adoption of the rule which the gentleman suggests will thoroughly defeat the consideration of measures which may go under Rule XIII to these three calendars.

Mr. FRYE. The reasons which prompted the adoption of the rule authorizing the two committees named by the gentleman from Texas to report at any time will, after these new rules are adopted, cease to exist, because those committees will be called as often as once a week at any rate. Now, the purpose of the Committee on Rules was to get rid of special orders piling themselves one upon another as the session progresses. As to general appropriation bills and measures coming from the Ways and Means Committee, the Committee on Rules have authorized me to offer an amendment, when the proper point is reached, giving the Committee of Ways and Means and the Committee on Appropriations the right to move at any time after the morning hour, not before the morning hour, to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of particular appropriation bills or bills raising revenue. I think that the proposition of the gentleman from Texas is entirely unnecessary, and its adoption would interfere very decidedly with the general scheme and plan of this revision.

Mr. WARNER. Will not the reason which the gentleman from Maine has given in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas apply as well to the whole of clause 47, which proposes to give special privileges to certain committees?

Mr. FRYE. That is because there may arise exigencies in which it may be absolutely necessary for the committees named to report at any time; for instance, as to a bill for raising revenue. As to the general appropriation bills the gentleman himself has seen the exigency. In reference to the other committees named in clause 47, their duties relate to matters of importance to the House—matters of privilege, matters of printing, matters connected with the contingent fund.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. MILLS, it was not agreed to.

Mr. CONVERSE. I now offer the following, to come in as clause 48:

Every report shall be in writing, and shall give the names of the members of the committee who concur in the recommendation thereof.

I desire to state one suggestion in reply to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LAPHAM.] My opinion is that this rule ought to apply to all committees, including the Committee on Enrolled Bills, because, as I am told, it has sometimes been charged that mistakes have been made in enrolling bills. Hence we ought to know what members of that committee have examined any bill reported and what members concur in the report, so that it may be known where the responsibility rests.

Mr. WHITE. Is it the purpose of this amendment to require that the members concurring in a report shall sign their names, or simply that their names shall be stated in the report?

Mr. CONVERSE. The object is that the report shall show the names of the members concurring in it.

Mr. WHITE. Why not require them to sign it?

Mr. CONVERSE. I have no objection to that; but it might cause more trouble than the provision I propose.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, I find myself compelled to oppose this amendment for various reasons. No committee of this House probably has a full attendance of all its members in the course of a month. It transacts its business when a quorum is present. A bill may be agreed to by all the members present or by all except one member. But some members are on two committees and must be absent from one. Now, this proposed rule would compel the member in charge of a bill to present his report to the committee, secure their approval, and then go through the Capitol or the city hunting the other members of the committee to ascertain their opinions on the merits of the bill and compelling men who have not listened to the report of the sub-committee and have not had time to examine the merits of the measure to commit themselves to a written report over their signatures for or against the bill.

Now, many a bill passes in my committee perhaps during my absence; a report is made to the committee, and the bill is approved unanimously by those present. Coming upon the floor of this House, I hear a report made from my committee; I notice the bringing forward of a bill in which I am interested, and which the committee has approved in my absence. I have not had time to examine it, but the debate on the floor developes reasons for or against the measure; and I take my position upon it in debate. Now, I do not desire to be obliged to scrutinize every little bill that passes in my committee, and to come to a deliberate conclusion upon it, to be published before this House.

Again, Mr. Chairman, the action of committees is designed to be confidential. You cannot secure the fair consideration of a bill if every man's position upon it is to be bruited abroad, and every lobbyist enabled to train his guns on perhaps a single offending member who disagrees with the majority supporting the bill. Under the operation of this amendment you subject this whole House to a cross-fire of every lobbyist that happens to be in the city.

Let the men who procure the passage of a report through the committee come upon this floor and defend it. Let those who have been compelled to absent themselves from the committee be allowed to listen to the debates on the bill, and to form their conclusions here, without being compelled to make a formal agreement or disagreement.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHITE. I move to strike out the last word. I favor this proposition. In my humble opinion it is just what the American Congress requires. If you look over the proceedings of other legislative bodies in the United States, you will find their report has appended to it the signatures of the gentlemen who concur in making it. It gives to these reports the test which we all know has more to do with the legislation of this body than any other feature of our organization, more of the character of deliberation. It gives them somewhat of the judicial character. The judges of every court in the country are recorded as concurring or refusing to concur in the judgment rendered.

The objection of my friend from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] that it will subject gentlemen who do not seem to concur to a cross-fire of different lobbyists who come here to look after legislation, does not seem to me to be well taken.

Mr. HASKELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WHITE. The same objection would be good in favor of every member of the committee.

Mr. HASKELL. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

Mr. HASKELL. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether during this session of Congress he is prepared now to sign the majority or minority report on every bill which was ordered to be reported by his committee? I ask him whether he is willing to do that now? I wish an answer.

Mr. WHITE. I am willing to answer. I am willing to sign all reports ordered to be made when I was present and in which I concurred.

Mr. HASKELL. But are you ready to sign every report from your committee during this session of Congress?

Mr. WHITE. It is a fair question and I will answer it fairly. I am willing to sign every bill and report passed by the committee when I was present and in which I concurred. As a member of the committee I should be willing to assume the responsibility of every report in which I concurred, and I should be a coward if I refused to do so.

Mr. HASKELL. Are you willing to sign every report made when you did not happen to be there?

Mr. WHITE. Not at all; and this does not contemplate any such thing. It affects only those who concur in the judgment of the committee that their names shall be recited in the report.

Mr. FRYE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio one question. The report made by any committee is supposed to be, of course, the report of the majority, as the minority is only entitled to give its views. I concur in part of his proposition, and I ask him whether he would accept this as a substitute: "Every bill or resolution reported by any of said committees shall be accompanied by the reasons therefor in writing, which shall be printed?"

Mr. CONVERSE. That does not reach the point of my amendment. If I may be allowed one minute or two more, the object of this bill is that the House shall know what members of a committee concur in the recommendations which that committee makes. What is the object of having committees in the House? It is in order that those committees shall examine the question submitted to them and return to us their opinion and their judgment upon which we ought to and do act. Is it not we shall know whether a majority of the committee concur in the recommendation or not? Any action of the minority of that committee is or should be a report to this House. None but a majority of the entire committee should be allowed to return a report to this House recommending action on its part. This amendment will secure that point, and will disclose the names of the persons on the committee who concur in its recommendation; and all are not bound by the reasoning which may be offered in the report, but only the names of such as concur in the recommendations of the committee. That is all the amendment embraces.

Mr. WHITE, by unanimous consent, withdrew his formal amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 45, noes 80.

Mr. CONVERSE demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. CONVERSE and Mr. HASKELL were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 41, noes 98.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move to add the following as an additional clause:

48. No committee shall sit during the sitting of the House without special leave.

Mr. Chairman, I observe that has been omitted. It is the present rule, and it seems to me that it ought to be retained. I do not understand that there is any reason why it should be omitted. Unless some objection is made to it I do not see the necessity for discussing it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman will permit me he will remember that there is already a rule, the first clause of Rule VIII, which requires every member of the House to be in his seat, but if in the judgment of the House this is deemed essential, I shall not object.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is a very indefinite rule. We have had it here since 1794 and it will do no harm, for the proper transaction of the business of the House, to retain it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not care about it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I desire to offer a substitute for the entire rule, and I wish to say a word before the Clerk proceeds to read the substitute, as this is a very important rule and as the substitute is lengthy. I desire to say that I have marked only those clauses which have been amended by the committee and proposed to be amended by this substitute. I do not think it necessary that the Clerk should read the clauses word for word where there was no proposition to amend. Hence I have marked just such clauses in this rule as have either been adopted by the deliberate action of the committee or which I propose to amend by this substitute.

Mr. SPRINGER. Without reading the entire substitute I suggest that the gentleman from Pennsylvania be permitted to explain the matter, as we understand it refers to the division of the powers of the committee and it is not necessary to read it at all, as it will take some time to do so.

Mr. MORRISON. Let it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XI.

POWERS AND DUTIES OF COMMITTEES.

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, namely: Subjects relating—

1. To the election of members: to the Committee on Elections;

2. To the revenue and the bonded debt of the United States: to the Committee on Ways and Means;

3. To appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government: to the Committee on Appropriations; and the several appropriation bills, when reported to the House by the committees in which they originate, shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations to be reported back to the House after due consideration, with such recommendations as the general expenditures of the Government require them to make, and the committee in which the bill originated shall thereupon have charge of it and upon its passage: Provided, That each committee in presenting and debating an appropriation bill shall have equal time and equal privileges upon the floor with the Committee on Appropriations;

4. To judicial proceedings, civil and criminal law: to the Committee on the Judiciary;

5. To banking and currency: to the Committee on Banking and Currency;

6. To coinage, weights, and measures: to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and measures;

7. To commerce: to the Committee on Commerce; and the Committee on Commerce shall have the same privilege in reporting bills making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors as is accorded to the Committee on Appropriations in reporting general appropriation bills;

8. To agriculture: to the Committee on Agriculture;

9. To the relations of the United States with foreign nations: to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and this committee shall report the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill for reference to the Committee on Appropriations;

10. To the military establishment and the public defense: to the Committee on Military Affairs; and this committee shall report the annual appropriation bills for the support of the Army and the Military Academy at West Point, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations;

11. To the naval establishment: to the Committee on Naval Affairs; and this committee shall report the annual appropriation bill for the support of the Navy, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations;

12. To the Post-Office and post-roads: to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads; and this committee shall report the annual appropriation bills for the service of the Post-Office Department, and for mail transportation by ocean steamers, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations;

13. To the lands of the United States: to the Committee on the Public Lands;

14. To the relations of the United States with the Indians and the Indian tribes: to the Committee on Indian Affairs; and this committee shall report the annual appropriations for expenses of the Indian Department, and for carrying out the treaties and obligations of the Government with the Indian tribes, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations;

15. To territorial legislation, the revision thereof, and affecting Territories or the admission of States: to the Committee on the Territories;

16. To railways and canals other than Pacific railroads: to the Committee on Railways and Canals;

17. To the manufacturing industries: to the Committee on Manufactures;

18. To the mining interests: to the Committee on Mines and Mining;

19. To the public buildings and occupied or improved grounds of the United States: to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; and this committee shall report all appropriations therefor, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations;

20. To the railroads and telegraphic lines between the Mississippi River and the Pacific coast: to the Committee on Pacific Railroads;

21. To the levees of the Mississippi River: to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River;

22. To education and labor: to the Committee on Education and Labor;

23. To the militia of the several States: to the Committee on the Militia;

24. To patents, copyrights, and trade-marks: to the Committee on Patents;

25. To the pensions of the civil war: to the Committee on Invalid Pensions; and this committee shall report the annual appropriation bill for the payment of invalid and other pensions, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations;

26. To the pensions of all the wars of the United States other than the civil war: to the Committee on Pensions;

27. To private and domestic claims and demands, other than war claims, against the United States: to the Committee on Claims;

28. To claims arising from any war in which the United States has been engaged: to the Committee on War Claims;

29. To private claims to lands: to the Committee on Private Land Claims;

30. To the District of Columbia: to the Committee on the District of Columbia; and this committee shall report all appropriations therefor, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

31. To the revision and codification of the statutes of the United States: to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

32. The examination of the accounts and expenditures of the several Departments of the Government and the manner of keeping the same; the economy, justness, and correctness of such expenditures; their conformity with appropriation laws; the proper application of public moneys; the security of the Government against unjust and extravagant demands; retrenchment; the enforcement of the payment of moneys due to the United States; the economy and accountability of public officers; the abolishment of useless offices; the reduction or increase of the pay of officers, shall all be subjects within the jurisdiction of the eight standing committees on the public expenditures in the several Departments, as follows:

33. In the Department of State: to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department;

34. In the Treasury Department: to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department;

35. In the War Department: to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department;

36. In the Navy Department: to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department;

37. In the Post-Office Department: to the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department;

38. In the Interior Department: to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department;

39. In the Department of Justice: to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice;

40. To public buildings: to the Committee on Expenditures on the Public Buildings;

41. All proposed action touching the rules and joint rules shall be referred to the Committee on Rules;

42. Touching the expenditure of the contingent fund of the House, the auditing and settling all accounts which may be charged therein by order of the House: to the Committee on Accounts;

43. The ascertainment of the travel of members of the House shall be made by the Committee on Mileage and reported to the Sergeant-at-Arms;

44. Touching the Library of Congress, statuary, and pictures: to the Joint Committee on the Library;

45. All proposed legislation or order touching printing shall be referred to the Joint Committee on Printing on the part of the House;

46. The enrollment of engrossed bills: to the Joint Committee on Enrolled Bills;

47. The following named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, namely: The Committee on Elections, on the right of a member to his seat; the Committee on Ways and Means, on bills raising revenue; the Committee on Appropriations, the general appropriation bills; the Committee on Enrolled Bills, enrolled bills; the Committee on Printing, on all matters referred to them of printing for the use of the House or two Houses; and the Committee on Accounts, on all matters of expenditure of the contingent fund of the House.

48. No committee shall sit during the sitting of the House without special leave.

Mr. BLACKBURN. As we have had at least two weeks' debate upon the very proposition involved in this substitute, and looking only to an expedition of the work in the Committee of the Whole, I will move now that the committee rise and go back into the House with the view of agreeing upon a limit that we will put upon the debate. Of course it will not interfere with the right of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 3.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CARLISLE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the report of the Committee on Rules, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to continue the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules; and pending that motion I move that all debate be closed upon the substitute pending for Rule XI, and all amendments thereto, in ten minutes. At the suggestion of several members, I will say twenty minutes.

Mr. FINLEY. Then I will move an amendment, to strike out "twenty" and insert "ten."

Mr. ATKINS. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] will adhere to his motion as he originally made it, limiting the debate to ten minutes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well. I adhere to my original motion to limit debate to ten minutes.

The motion to limit debate was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, (Mr. CARLISLE in the chair,) and resumed consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate on the pending substitute for Rule XI is limited to ten minutes. The Chair will divide that time equally between the friends and opponents of the substitute.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. My purpose in offering this amendment as a substitute has been, if possible, to save this rule and all the rules from possible rejection as a whole. I fear that if this rule, as now amended, shall stand on a final yea-and-nay vote in the House, there will be danger that these rules shall be rejected entirely, as such a contingency has been more than suggested. I have carefully prepared this substitute so as to embody two or three distinct propositions not heretofore presented to the committee. I call the attention of the committee to clause 3, in which I provide that the time on the floor shall be divided between the committee reporting an appropriation bill and the Committee on Appropriations. I provide further and specifically that each committee reporting a general appropriation bill shall have the control of it on the floor; that it shall have the right to report at any time; that it shall have equal privileges in fact with the Committee on Appropriations, when presenting a general appropriation bill.

I allow the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds no more right than I allow the Army Committee or Navy Committee and the committees which have in charge the other specific branches of the public service. I except from the operation of this substitute the Committee on Commerce. I allow that committee undivided control of its own bill because the judgment of the Committee of the Whole has settled that beyond a peradventure. We all see they will have it. We might as well accept the fact that the Committee of the Whole and the House by a two-thirds vote will give to that committee the undivided control of its own appropriations in all probability.

My purpose is to give the careful preparation and control of each appropriation bill other than the river and harbor bill to the several committees of this House, and yet to give to the Committee on Appropriations that general review which will give to the Committee of the Whole when it comes to act on these bills an intelligent, comprehensive, and well-matured report, not on the subject-matter originally referred to each committee, not on the distribution of an aggregate appropriation, but on the general expenditures of the Government—the comparison of all the bills and their relative importance as parts of those general expenditures of the Government.

I have formulated in this substitute what I conceive to be the safest and best possible distribution of the responsibilities and powers of this House; I deny with all the force I have the assertion made upon this floor by the distinguished Speaker of the House that the Appropriations Committee does not legislate on these important questions. I point him to the sundry civil bill of last year in which there were $2,000,000 appropriated for public buildings in this country which had not been previously authorized by law, and by right came under the jurisdiction of our committee. Every dollar of it was in violation of the limitation fixed by law. I ask that my committee shall have jurisdiction originally of a public building and shall limit the appropriations therefor. Why shall it not have jurisdiction of the estimates which extend that limitation hundreds of thousands of dollars? I say that this is the only complete system by and through which we give to each of the committees of this House independent and complete jurisdiction of its own matters, subject, however, to mature comparison and report from an impartial committee specially instructed for that purpose.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) This substitute proposes to do in the aggregate what the Committee of the Whole in many particulars has already voted down. It goes further than has yet been suggested in the division of the duty which now belongs to the Appropriations Committee. It takes from the Committee on Appropriations the consular and diplomatic bill, which the Committee on Foreign Affairs has never yet asked for. It takes from the Committee on Appropriations the bill appropriating for the Military Academy at West Point, which has never yet been asked for by the Military Committee, so far as I know. It takes from the Committee on Appropriations the Army appropriation bill, a proposition which has already been voted down in the Committee of the Whole. It gives to the Committee on Naval Affairs the naval appropriation bill, which that committee has never yet asked for. It takes from the Committee on Appropriations the Post-Office appropriation bill—a proposition which has already been voted down in the Committee of the Whole. It takes from the Committee on Appropriations the Indian appropriation bill—a change which has not yet been asked for by the Indian Committee. It takes from the Committee on Appropriations all control over the appropriations for public buildings—a proposition which I regret has already been agreed to in Committee of the Whole. It omits, however, what the Committee of the Whole agreed to as to the agricultural appropriations. And it takes from the Committee on Appropriations the appropriations for the District of Columbia, which has never been asked for by the Committee on the District of Columbia. And with all this is coupled the provision in the third clause, as follows:

The several appropriation bills, when reported to the House by the committees in which they originate, shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations to be reported back to the House after due consideration, with such recommendations as the general expenditures of the Government require them to make; and the committee in which the bill originated shall thereupon have charge of it and upon its passage: Provided, That each committee in presenting and debating an appropriation bill shall have equal time and equal privileges upon the floor with the Committee on Appropriations.

Thus the substitute takes the eight bills I mention from the Committee on Appropriations and gives their original preparation to the respective committees I have named, to go to the Committee on Appropriations for amendment and review.

Under the provisions of the third clause of this substitute, when the Committee on Appropriations report back to the House such appropriation bills, with such amendments as said committee deem wise, the control is taken from the Appropriations Committee so reporting them and the bills placed in care of the committees respectively which originated said several bills.

Mr. FRYE. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for one moment; I want to add one other thing which that third clause takes. It takes the floor of the House for at least three months of the session and divides it equally between the Committee on Appropriations and each of the other committees reporting appropriation bills, and leaves all the rest of us, not on those committees, sitting here in our seats as monuments of spared mercy.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) In my judgment this is the most objectionable proposition which has yet been introduced, and I believe further that if adopted it must lead not in the direction of retrenchment, but in the direction of increased expenditure. I trust the Committee of the Whole will hesitate before it will undertake to do in this wholesale manner proposed what it has heretofore refused to do when presented in a less objectionable way and in detail.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to amend the proposed substitute by striking out the words "for reference to the Committee on Appropriations" wherever the same occur. I would inquire if any further debate is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The debate on this substitute and all amendments thereto was limited by order of the House to ten minutes, which time has expired.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. HOOKER, and it was not agreed to; upon a division—ayes 23, noes not counted.

The question recurred on the substitute proposed by Mr. SHALLENBERGER for Rule XI as amended.

Mr. FRYE. That is a very important amendment, and we might as well have the vote taken by tellers at once.

Tellers were ordered, there being 47 in the affirmative, (more than one-fifth of a quorum;) and Mr. SHALLENBERGER and Mr. FRYE were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 61, noes 122.

So the substitute was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XII.

DELEGATES.

The Speaker shall appoint from among the Delegates one additional member on each of the following committees, namely: Coinage, Weights, and Measures; Agriculture; Military Affairs; Post-Office and Post-Roads; Public Lands; Indian Affairs; Territories, and Mines and Mining; and they shall possess in their respective committees the same powers and privileges as in the House, and may make any motion except to reconsider.

RULE XIII.

CALENDARS.

1. There shall be three calendars of business reported from committees, namely: First. A calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to which shall be referred bills raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills of a public character, directly or indirectly appropriating money or property;

Second. A House calendar, to which shall be referred all bills of a public character not raising revenue nor directly or indirectly appropriating money or property; and Third. A calendar of the Committee of the Whole House, to which shall be referred all bills of a private character.

Mr. DUNNELL. In order that I may ask a question I will move to strike out the third subdivision of clause 1 of Rule XIII.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In order that these matters may come in their regular order, I ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] to allow me to submit from the Committee on Rules an amendment which should come in before the one which I understand he proposes to offer. It is to clause 2 of Rule XIII, after the word "decided," in line 5, to insert the words "according to its character."

The CHAIRMAN. Clause 2 of Rule XIII has not yet been read.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I supposed that the clause had been read.

Mr. DUNNELL. I have proposed the amendment which I have indicated merely to enable me to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] if there be anything in the new rules relative to the call of committees for private bills. Committees are now called for private bills on Friday. Is that provision retained in the new rules?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will state to the gentleman that if he will turn to Rule XXVI he will find this:

Friday in each week shall be set apart for the consideration of private business, unless otherwise determined by a majority of the House.

Mr. DUNNELL. But Rule XXIV says "on all days other than Mondays, as soon as the Journal is read and approved, there shall be a morning hour for reports from committees." I was led to infer from that that the Friday rule had been abolished.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Not at all. Upon the contrary, the very matter which the gentleman now refers to was considered by the Committee on Rules, and it was determined that both of these rules taken together could not be considered other than as continuing the present practice of the House which devotes Friday of each week exclusively to the consideration of private business, unless a majority of the House shall otherwise determine.

Mr. DUNNELL. Then am I not correct in this: that the committees are not to be called on Fridays for reports, but that a private bill may be reported any day, Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday, when the committee having charge of the subject shall be called for reports?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly; the rule provides that there shall be a morning hour for reports from committees.

Mr. DUNNELL. That is what I desire to know; whether we get rid of the call of committees for private bills on Friday. I understand that we do.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) You do not; the rule is not altered at all in that respect. It gives Fridays for the consideration of private business. There will be a morning hour on Friday for reports from committees, and those reports must be of a private nature. On all the other days except Monday there will be a morning hour for committees to make reports of a public character.

Mr. DUNNELL. I fail to see any necessity, then, for a distinction. If on every day of the week except Monday the committees are to be called for reports, and those reports are to go immediately to one of these three calendars without debate, I cannot understand why on Friday any more than on any other day committees should be called exclusively for private bills to go to the Private Calendar. Why not let all bills, whether public or private, come from committees as they are called upon all the days of the week and then reserve Friday for the consideration of private business?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The distinction proceeds upon this theory simply: that public business should be promoted in preference to private business.

Mr. DUNNELL. I do not think that under the rule we do that. We call the committees for reports. If I have a private bill from my committee, why may I not report it on Tuesday as well as on Friday? It will take no more time to report it on Tuesday, because it immediately goes to the Calendar.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) That might not be objectionable if every committee was first called for private bills. If on any day the hour should not be consumed in reporting and sending instantly to the Calendar bills of a public character, then the committees might be called for private bills, though it should not be Friday. But four days should be given to public measures in preference to private measures, as has been done heretofore. That arrangement the Committee on Rules did not desire to interfere with in the least.

Mr. DUNNELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, perhaps I need not occupy the time of the committee longer; but if we are to adopt Rule XXIV, providing that all reports on being presented shall go immediately to the Calendar, I can see no reason why we should set apart Friday for receiving reports of a private nature. If committees are to be called for reports on every day of the week except Monday, according to Rule XXIV, then I cannot see what ruling could be made which would deny to a committee the right to report private bills whenever the committee may be called. I find nothing in this revision that says I may not as a member of a committee report a private bill on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday.

Mr. BLACKBURN. There is nothing there that will prevent the gentleman from doing so.

Mr. DUNNELL. But now if I report a private bill on Wednesday, for instance, it is ruled out.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not so understand.

Mr. DUNNELL. Oh, yes.

Mr. FRYE. It is ruled out if the point is made.

Mr. DUNNELL. I understand that a private bill reported on any other day than Friday is at present ruled out if the point is made.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman from Minnesota, I am sure, does not want to be mistaken.

Mr. DUNNELL. No, sir.

Mr. BLACKBURN. But the gentleman is mistaken in this: under the present rules and practice of the House there is nothing to prevent any gentleman from reporting a private bill on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let me ask the gentleman whether the ruling of the Chair has not been invariably in the direction of excluding private reports on those days.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No, sir. The Speaker will answer for himself; but I take it that the ruling of the Chair has never gone farther in that direction than to give preference to public bills as against private bills; and this, I take it, will be the object of the House.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) And on a Friday to give preference to private bills as against public bills.

Mr. FRYE. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota to a single point. Hitherto under our rules every bill reported during the morning hour could be considered at once upon the report being made, unless it contained an appropriation of money. Now, it has been held, and properly held, that on days devoted to public business a report of a private nature could not be received and considered. But under these revised rules there is nothing to prevent a member from reporting a private bill on a public-bill day, there being then no consideration of it other than to send it at once to a calendar.

Mr. DUNNELL. There is a difference of opinion, then, among members of the Committee on Rules upon this point. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] disagree, as I understand, with the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE.]

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Under the existing rules a public bill cannot be reported on a Friday without the consent of the House. But on other days, during the morning hour, private bills as well as public bills are constantly reported from committees.

Mr. DUNNELL. If we adopt the threefold calendar as proposed in this revision and along with that adopt Rule XXIV, I insist that there should be no distinction made as to the character of bills to be reported by committees on different days of the week; for, as I understand, they are not to be considered at once, but are simply to be received and sent to the Calendar without debate.

Mr. BUCKNER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order. What is the question before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] to strike out the third subdivision of clause 1, Rule XIII.

Mr. DUNNELL. I withdraw that amendment.

Mr. CALKINS. I move at the end of the third clause to add the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

4. A calendar for pension cases and claims reported from the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CALKINS. My purpose in offering this amendment is to disconnect this class of cases and claims from all other cases and claims reported from other committees, that they may be placed together upon the same calendar where we may see the exact position of each. And it is for another purpose: it is to take them out of the way of the public Calendar, which is often choked up by other business when pension cases could be reached and passed in a moment without loss of time to the House. In other words, it is to make a calendar of pension cases alone, so these cases may be considered unobstructed and speedily by the House. And inasmuch as the whole country has pledged these sufferers its support under all circumstances nothing can conduce to the consideration of these claims so much as a calendar upon which they shall stand alone. I ask in justice to this class of claimants they shall be put upon a calendar by themselves.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 85.

Mr. CALKINS. I do not like to take up the time of the House, but I want tellers on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted the Chair will order tellers; and he appoints Mr. CALKINS and Mr. BLACKBURN.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 32, noes 86.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MYERS. I move the committee rise.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 73.

So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. BAKER. I move to add the following:

4. A calendar for pension claims to which shall be referred all bills relating to pensions, which shall have priority in consideration over all other bills of a private nature.

I desire to say a word on that amendment, and I trust what I shall have to say will be conclusive. It seems to me as though one of the most becoming things which can be done in this House by the representatives of the people would be to give priority in consideration to pension claims over all other private claims. There is no party in this country which is not pledged to the soldier, no party that has not affirmed that the claim which was due to the soldier who was wounded and bled in the Army and the widows and orphans of those killed—I say there is no party which has not proclaimed that class of claims should be preferred to all others which could be presented to the Government.

Now and here this House has an opportunity, so far as members of both parties are concerned, to give slight evidence by the action they take on this proposition of their belief and sincerity in the annual proclamations made in their party platforms.

Mr. FRYE. I simply desire to call the attention of the House to this. If any amendment of this kind is to be passed, it would be proper when we reach page 40, third paragraph, clause 6, which is as follows:

Third. On Friday of each week, after the morning hour, it shall be in order to entertain a motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House to consider business on the Private Calendar; and, if this motion fail, then public business shall be in order as on other days.

It is not proper here.

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question? [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BLACKBURN. I make the point of order the debate is exhausted.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 43, noes 99.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

2. The question of reference of any proposition, other than that reported from a committee, shall be decided without debate, in the following order, namely: a standing committee, a select committee; but the reference of a proposition reported by a committee, when demanded, shall be decided without debate, in the following order, namely: House Calendar, Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Committee of the Whole House, a standing committee, a select committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am instructed by the Committee on Rules to move the following amendment: After the word "decided," in line 5, clause 2, Rule XIII, insert "according to its character."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XIV.

OF DECORUM AND DEBATE.

1. When any member desires to speak or deliver any matter to the House, he shall rise and respectfully address himself to "Mr. Speaker," and on being recognized may address the House from any place on the floor or from the Clerk's desk, and shall confine himself to the question under debate, avoiding personality.

2. When two or more members rise at once, the Speaker shall name the member who is first to speak, and no member shall occupy more than one hour in debate on any question in the House or in committee, except as further provided in this rule.

3. The member reporting the measure under consideration from a committee may open and close, where general debate has been had thereon, and if it shall extend beyond one day, he shall be entitled to one hour to close, notwithstanding he may have used an hour in opening.

4. If any member, in speaking or otherwise, transgress the rules of the House, the Speaker shall, or any member may, call him to order; in which case he shall immediately sit down, unless permitted, on motion of another member, to explain, and the House shall, if appealed to, decide on the case without debate; if the decision is in favor of the member called to order, he shall be at liberty to proceed, but not otherwise; and, if the case require it, he shall be liable to censure or such punishment as the House may deem proper.

5. If a member is called to order for words spoken in debate, the member calling him to order shall indicate the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down in writing at the Clerk's desk and read aloud to the House; but he shall not be held to answer, nor be subject to the censure of the House therefor, if further debate or other business has intervened.

6. No member shall speak more than once to the same question without leave of the House, unless he be the mover, proposer, or introducer of the matter pending, in which case he shall be permitted to speak in reply, but not until every member choosing to speak shall have spoken.

7. While the Speaker is putting a question or addressing the House no member shall walk out of or across the hall, nor, when a member is speaking, pass between him and the Chair; and during the session of the House no member shall wear his hat, or remain by the Clerk's desk during the call of the roll or the counting of ballots, or smoke upon the floor of the House; and the Sergeant-at-Arms is charged with the strict enforcement of this rule.

Mr. HAWLEY. I call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky to the last line, "and the Sergeant-at-Arms is charged with the strict enforcement of this rule." He means this clause. By this new subdivision into rules and clauses, the word "rule" should be changed to "clause."

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, it is clause 7 which was intended to be referred to, and I will move to strike out the word "rule" and in lieu thereof to insert the word "clause."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XV.

ON CALLS OF THE ROLL AND HOUSE.

1. Upon every roll-call, the names of the members shall be called alphabetically by surname, except when two or more have the same surname, then the whole name shall be called; and after the roll has been once called, the Clerk shall call in their alphabetical order the names of those not voting; and thereafter the Speaker shall not entertain a request to record a vote or announce a pair.

2. In the absence of a quorum, fifteen members, including the Speaker, if there is one, shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members, and in all calls of the House the names of the members shall be called by the Clerk, and the absentees noted; the doors shall then be closed, and those for whom no sufficient excuse is made may, by order of a majority of those present, be sent for and arrested, wherever they may be found, by officers to be appointed by the Sergeant-at-Arms for that purpose, and their attendance secured; and the House shall determine upon what condition they shall be discharged.

RULE XVI.

ON MOTIONS, THEIR PRECEDENCE, ETC.

1. Every motion made to the House shall be reduced to writing on the demand of any member, and shall be entered on the Journal with the name of the member making it, unless it is withdrawn the same day.

Mr. BLACKBURN. By the direction of the Committee on Rules I offer the following amendment to the first clause:

After the word "House," insert the words "and entertained by the Speaker."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

2. When a motion has been made, the Speaker shall state it, or (if it be in writing) cause it to be read aloud by the Clerk before being debated, and it shall then be in possession of the House, but may be withdrawn at any time before a decision or amendment.

3. When any motion or proposition is made, the question, Will the House now consider it? shall not be put unless demanded by a member.

4. When a question is under debate, no motion shall be received but to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, to take a recess, to lie on the table, for the previous question, (which motions shall be decided without debate,) to postpone to a day certain, to refer or amend, or to postpone indefinitely, which several motions shall have precedence in the foregoing order; and no motion to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to postpone indefinitely, being decided, shall be again allowed on the same day at the same stage of the question.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move to strike out in line 3 of clause 4 the word "lie," and in lieu thereof to insert "lay," so that it will read "to lay on the table." It is a grammatical error which has been in the rules for generations and has been allowed to remain in the revision. When a thing is "laid" on the table it lies there. The verbs that precede this one in the sentence are active verbs—"to adjourn," "to take a recess"—and they should be followed by the active verb "to lay on the table." Here we have it "to lie on the table" following "to adjourn," "to take," &c. It should be "lay" instead of "lie."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not care at all about this, but I wish to say to the gentleman I do not concur with him in his conclusion. There is not a rule which incorporates that word which has been in existence for a hundred years, which is not equally amenable to the the same criticism.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have looked at the matter carefully, and you cannot find a book in the Library of Congress which will justify the gentleman in the use of the word "lie" as it is reported.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

5. A motion to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, a motion to adjourn, and to take a recess shall always be in order, and the hour at which the House adjourns shall be entered on the Journal.

6. On the demand of any member, before the question is put, a question shall be divided if it include propositions so distinct in substance that one being taken away a substantive proposition shall remain.

7. A motion to strike out and insert is indivisible, but a motion to strike out being lost shall neither preclude amendment nor motion to strike out and insert; and no motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

8. Pending a motion to suspend the rules, the Speaker may entertain one motion that the House adjourn; but after the result thereon is announced he shall not entertain any other dilatory motion till the vote is taken on suspension.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the committee to offer the following amendment, to be known as clause 9 of this rule:

At any time after the expiration of the morning hour it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue or general appropriation bills.

This is made necessary, Mr. Chairman, by the rule here which provides first for the reading of the Journal, then for the morning hour, then the unfinished business is to be proceeded with, then the motion to go to business on the Speaker's table, and finally the motion to go into Committee of the Whole. Now, it may become necessary on certain occasions, at the expiration of the morning hour, that a motion should be made to proceed at once with the consideration of an appropriation bill, or a bill raising revenue, and that is provided for in the amendment which, as I have stated before, I am instructed by the committee to offer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XVII.

PREVIOUS QUESTION.

1. There shall be a motion for the previous question, which, being ordered by a majority of members present, if a quorum, shall have the effect to cut off all debate and bring the House to a direct vote upon the immediate question or questions on which it has been asked and ordered. The previous question may be asked and ordered upon a single motion, a series of motions allowable under the rules, or an amendment or amendments, or may be made to embrace all authorized motions or amendments and include the bill to its engrossment and third reading, and then, on renewal of said motion, to its passage or rejection. It shall be in order, pending the motion for or after the previous question shall have been ordered on the final passage, for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit, with or without instructions, to a standing or special committee; and a motion to lie upon the table shall be in order on the second and third reading of a bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am directed by the Committee on Rules to offer an amendment to that clause of Rule XVII. It is to insert after the word "renewal," in the ninth line, the words "and second."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am also directed to offer the following amendment: in line 13 of this clause, to strike out the word "special" and insert in lieu thereof the word "select."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish also to make a verbal amendment by striking out the two words in line 11 "the final," and to insert instead thereof the word "its;" so it will read "on its passage" instead of "final passage."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] a question; but if it lead to debate at all I will give up the floor for a motion that the committee rise. Under this rule as reported by the Committee on Rules the previous question upon the engrossment and third reading of a bill only has its effect and remains in force down to the third reading of a bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That has always been so.

Mr. HASKELL. I know that has always been so. Now, a man comes upon the floor, reports his bill, moves the previous question, and brings the House to a vote. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky, and through him the Committee on Rules, whether in their opinion they would not deem it wise to have the previous question once moved upon the engrossment and third reading go clear through to the passage, so that this loop-hole for entrapping the unwary shall not be left?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not; for the reason that after you have moved the previous question on a bill and any amendments pending, and that previous question shall have been in operation, and carried the bill to its engrossment and third reading, it may, and very often does, occur that the House finds there is some amendment, some discussion, some consideration which even the voting upon the bill under the operation of the previous question has demonstrated to be necessary, but there is no way of getting that amendment or that discussion unless you go back and reconsider the several stages through which the bill has gone, which would be very cumbersome. When the previous question on engrossment and third reading is exhausted, the Chair always recognizes the gentleman in charge of the measure to renew the demand for the previous question on the passage, and if then the House has not discovered any hasty legislation or any mistake that has been made, the previous question is again ordered, and carries the bill through to its passage.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to ask another question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If it be in the nature of debate I stand committed to move that the committee rise.

Mr. HASKELL. Then I desire to retain the floor to offer an amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. You shall have it. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CARLISLE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the report of the Committee on Rules, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed, and requested the concurrence of the House in, a bill of the following title:

A bill (S. No. 903) to authorize and direct the Postmaster-General to readjust the salaries of certain postmasters according to the provision of section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, and requested the concurrence of the House in, a concurrent resolution to print for the use of the Interior Department 1,500 copies each of volumes 4 and 12, and 1,200 copies each of volumes 3, 8, and 13, of the final reports of the Geological and Geographical Surveys of the Territories, in quarto form, with the necessary illustrations, uniform with the edition ordered by Congress.

SURVEY OF CONNECTICUT RIVER.

Mr. PHELPS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish the House of Representatives with the report of General G. K. Warren, of the Engineer Department of the United States, on the survey of the Connecticut River below Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, made in November, 1879, with a view to the permanent improvement of the channel of said river, and also to furnish such maps and other papers as accompany said report.

CYRUS C. CLARK.

Mr. PHELPS also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4428) for the relief of Cyrus C. Clark, of Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, late a paymaster in the Army of the United States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL FAIR GROUNDS ASSOCIATION.

Mr. BLACKBURN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4429) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Fair Grounds Association;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

COLLISION ON WATER.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4430) to provide a commission for the examination of existing and proposed rules for preventing collision on the water, and for forming such rules as shall be in consonance with and in furtherance of the interests of international law; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

Mr. KING. I am instructed by the Committee on the Interoceanic Canal to report the resolution which I send to the desk and request its passage.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to furnish for the use of the Committee on the Interoceanic Canal such statistics as may be found in his Department on the following subjects:

First. The amount of shipping between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States and the amount and kind of cargoes, and for the coasts of the Pacific Ocean.

Second. The entries and clearances at the port of San Francisco for the last fiscal year and amount of and kind of cargoes, and the places from and to which they are carried.

Third. The amount of transportation across the Isthmus, and generally its points of destination, and from which originally shipped.

Fourth. The average duration of voyages around the Horn between New York and San Francisco.

There being no objection, the resolution was agreed to.

LOUIS P. DI CESNOLA.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1359) for the relief of Louis P. Di Cesnola, accompanied by a report in writing, and moved that the bill and report be printed and recommitted, not to come back on a motion to reconsider.

The motion was agreed to.

MEXICAN WAR PENSIONS.

Mr. COX also, by unanimous consent, presented the petition of Silas Casey and many other survivors of the Mexican war, praying for the passage of a bill granting pensions to the survivors of the Mexican war; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent that the petition be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WHITE. I object.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. UPSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 170) concerning an international fishery exhibition to be held in Berlin, Germany, in April, 1880.

IMPROVEMENT OF SAINT CROIX RIVER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the improvement of the Saint Croix River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. THOMAS TURNER, for one week; and

To Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia, for five days, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. ERRETT asked unanimous consent for the withdrawal from the files of the House of papers in the case of Hester Yost, an applicant for a pension as the daughter of a soldier of the war of 1812, no adverse report; which request was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

Also, the petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, for the improvement of the Youghiogheny River—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WRIGHT: The petition of James A. Morrison and 35 others, citizens of Butler County, Pennsylvania, soldiers of the late war, for a law allowing them the difference between gold and the currency paid them for their services—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of J. R. Forrest and 64 others, citizens of Winooski, Vermont, for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 269) known as the Wright supplement to the homestead act—to the Committee on Public Lands.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 12, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3288) for the relief of colored emigrants was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. No. 4244) for the establishment of titles in Hot Springs, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

EDWARD BRADEN AND J. W. ANGUS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (S. No. 56) for the relief of Edward Braden and J. W. Angus, returned from the House of Representatives in pursuance of the request of the Senate.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Senator from Texas, [Mr. MAXEY,] not now in his seat, requested that this bill be returned, and I made the motion for its return. I should like to have the bill lie on the table until he comes into the Chamber.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie on the table subject to the call of the Senator from Texas or the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. ROLLINS. For the present.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers and a report from Colonel J. N. Macomb, Corps of Engineers, upon an examination made in compliance with the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879, of the Delaware River, at Chester and Marcus Hook, Pennsylvania, to ascertain their adaptability for an ice harbor; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair presents a memorial from several members of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, in respect to the representation of that State in the Senate of the United States. It will be printed, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. HAMLIN. A day or two since resolutions of the Legislature of that State in relation to this subject were presented, and they were printed in the RECORD. This is a statement of the minority of the Legislature, as I understand it, not agreeing with those resolutions, and having a direct bearing upon the question. I move, therefore, in order that we may all have the information, that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Maine, and that order will be made.

The memorial is as follows:

To the honorable Vice-President of the United States:

The undersigned, your memorialists, republican members of the Legislature of Louisiana, being in a minority in said body wrongfully and in consequence of democratic frauds and irregularities at and during the late election, and therefore having been unable to prevent the passage of resolutions recently passed by said body hostile to the continuance of Hon. WILLLIAM P. KELLOGG in the seat adjudged him more than two years since as the duly elected Senator from Louisiana, take this the only method remaining to them of bringing to your attention and that of the Senate of the United States the frauds committed by our political enemies in this State.

Those perpetrated by them before and during the election of 1876 have been proven before a committee of your honorable body, of which Hon. T. O. Howe was chairman. Those committed at the election of 1878 were similarly proven before a Senate committee, of which Hon. H. M. TELLER was chairman. Such as affected the title of Senator KELLOGG were proven before the Senate Committee of Privileges and Elections at the time when the contest between him and H. M. Spofford for a seat was properly before that committee and the Senate. No further reference to the frauds alluded to appears to be necessary here. The Senate doubtless will take notice of the evidence, as it appears a part of the Senate records. It is proper that the history should be continued by us as it appertains to the election of 1879, in order that the Senate may understand why democrats have a majority of the members of the Louisiana Legislature, and why democrats were able recently to pass resolutions hostile to KELLOGG's title, untrue in fact and contrary to the wishes, knowledge, and belief of a great majority of the people of the State.

We will allude to parishes in their alphabetical order, and in comparison with the election of 1876, premising that it is nowhere pretended by any responsible authority that there has been in any of the parishes named any substantial or noticeable change in the political feelings or affiliations of any considerable number of their people, and that such changes as have occurred have commonly been desertions from the democratic party of men disgusted with that party's corruption, frauds, and bad faith, part of whom acted at the late election with the republicans, and many more refrained from any political action whatever.

In the parish of East Baton Rouge fraud and violence, fully described in the records of the Howe committee, suppressed in 1876 a republican majority of 1,200 and brought about an apparent majority of 600 for the democratic ticket. Methods of a similar and fraudulent character suppressed the republican majority at the late election, and gave the democratic ticket an apparent majority of 278.

The parish of West Baton Rouge gave S. B. Packard in 1876 908 votes, and a majority of 464. Fraudulent action on the part of the commissioners of election at two polling places reduced the vote of Taylor Beattie to 563, and his majority to 225.

The parish of Bienville gave Packard a vote of 226, and a democratic majority of 732. It is in evidence that this parish contains 1,690 voters, of whom 1,004 are white and 686 colored. At the late election there were returned 1,100 democratic votes without opposition. From which the fact appears without argument that the colored vote was totally suppressed.

The parish of Bossier cast in 1876 1,646 votes for Packard and 601 for F. T. Nicholls. In 1879 (the commissioners of election being exclusively democrats) the vote was made to appear 278 for Beattie and 1,531 for Wiltz, thus fraudulently extinguishing a majority of 1,045 for Packard and creating one of 1,253 for Wiltz. The parish contained in 1875 758 white and 2,180 colored voters. The election of 1876 would not only appear from these known proportion of votes by color and race to have been fair and free, but it appears that a larger percentage of white votes were cast for Nicholls than of colored for Packard. The introduction of the last figures render still more apparent and shameless the tremendous fraud of 1879. In the adjoining parish of Caddo, Packard received in 1876 2,630 votes and Nicholls 1,719. The parish contained 1,631 white votes and 3,832 colored. A comparison of these figures with the vote suggests the same reflection as in the case of Bossier. In 1879 all the commissioners were democratic, and it was made to appear that Beattie had received but 493 votes, while Wiltz was given 2,615. A majority of 911 for Packard, which was not disputed by the democratic managers of 1876, was utterly and fraudulently suppressed, and one was created for Wiltz, by democratic election officers, of 2,122. The very enormity of the fraud will carry conviction to every candid mind. Nor can any member of your body even suppose a similar change in the returns of county elections, separated by but thirty-seven months, as the result of anything but open and shameless fraud.

The parish of Concordia cast in 1876 366 votes for F. T. Nicholls and 2,461 for S. B. Packard, the latter thus having a majority of 2,095. It was known that said parish contained 3,057 voters, of whom 2,839 were colored and 218 white. The known number and proportion of voters compared with the return of election not disputed by any party were a sufficient testimony to the fairness, freedom, and fullness of the election of that year. In 1879 the commissioners of election were exclusively of the democratic party. The returns were made to show 1,024 votes as cast for Taylor Beattie and 1,269 for L. A. Wiltz. A majority of 2,095 for one political party thus becomes, under the manipulation of democratic officers of election, (following extensive political disturbances and outrages a year earlier,) a majority of 245 for the other party. The simple statement of these undisputed facts renders evidence of fraud almost unnecessary.

In 1875 the parish of De Soto contained 2,723 voters, of whom 1,087 were white and 1,635 were colored. An extensive scheme of violence, put in operation many months prior to the election of 1876 and continued until its close, resulted in a substantial suppression of the republican vote at five polling places and in an apparent democratic majority of above 600. The most rampant white-leaguer ought to have been satisfied with this result, but the managers of 1879 appear to have desired to improve upon the fraud. The returns of 1879, made by none but democrats, give Wiltz 918 votes, and Beattie 8! The facts stated are undisputed and are in themselves sufficient evidence that the 1,400 colored votes remaining in the parish (diminished to this number by the exodus) were either excluded from the boxes or not counted if cast. Your memorialists are informed that in fact the negroes were commonly warned to refrain from voting, and that such votes as were cast by them were not counted at all.

The astounding frauds by which more than two thousand republicans of East Feliciana were prevented from casting a single vote for their party ticket in 1876 are fully detailed in evidence now of record in the Senate. It is enough to say that the same system of frauds and intimidation, continued to the present date, excluded from the returns of 1879, nearly 2,000 republican votes in this parish, allowed to Beattie but 293 votes, and to his opponents a majority of 966. The same remarks apply to the parish of West Feliciana. This parish contains about 600 white and 2,000 colored voters, and these last are not less devoted than our colored voters usually are to the republican party. The vote was made to appear in December last to have been 1,339 for Wiltz and 147 for Beattie, while no honest man feels a doubt that had the voters of this parish been allowed to vote as they pleased, and had their votes been honestly counted afterward, Beattie's majority would have been not less than 1,200.

The vote of Franklin is about 1,300, of whom about 550 are white and 750 are colored. Enormous frauds in 1876 suppressed all of the republican vote but 101. In 1879, of even this small number 100 were cut off, and Beattie was permitted to receive but one vote! Of 1,300 voters in the parish, but 823 were reported at the polls, and we are asked by the commissioners of election to believe that 822 voted the democratic ticket. We are further asked to believe that nearly 500 republican voters who did not appear at the polls refrained from voting voluntarily. Our credulity is unequal to the strain.

The democratic commissioners of election in Jackson Parish ask us to believe that of the three hundred colored and white republicans in that parish not one either voted his party ticket or desired to do so. In this case also we are unequal to the demand made on us.

The parish of Lincoln contains 1,756 voters, of whom 699 are colored. In 1876 this parish cast 324 votes for S. B. Packard. It was charged and not denied that except for fraud and intimidation at the polls Packard would have received 300 more votes. In 1879 Wiltz received, if we are to believe commissioners of election, (exclusively democratic,) 1,400 votes, and none were cast in opposition; that not one of seven hundred colored and white republicans of Lincoln Parish desired to cast a vote for Taylor Beattie; that not one of them did vote for the party candidate for governor surpasses belief, nor do we believe it.

In 1876 S. B. Packard received in the parish of Madison 2,573 votes, a majority of 2,273 over Nicholls. That the election was full, free, and fair was not disputed by anybody in the democratic party. In 1879 there was no pretense that the republicans of Madison were less devoted to their party, or less desirous of giving effective support to their party ticket than in 1876; yet returns exclusively made up by democrats pretend that Beattie received but 78 votes, while Wiltz received 2,320. An undisputed majority for Packard of 2,373 was changed into a pretended majority for Wiltz of 2,242. The 300 votes received by Nicholls in 1876 were swelled to 2,320 in 1879! That this change was effected solely by the fraudulent returns of democratic officers of election is unquestionable. That no less than twenty-five hundred men voted the republican ticket in December last within this parish is not denied. The fraud needs no proof beyond the bare statement of facts of record. Of the 3,663 voters residing in this parish in 1875 all but 400 were colored. Of the 400 white voters a considerable number were openly members of the republican party. The colored men were with few exceptions voters of the same party, and that the vote of 1876 was a fair expression of the popular will is fully proven by the thorough acquiescence of the democratic managers in the result. The method by which a result precisely opposite to the actual vote was made to appear upon the returns in both this parish and the parish of Concordia will be detailed in the remarks upon the election of December last in the parish of Tensas, which adjoins both and divides their territory.

Natchitoches Parish gave the republican ticket in 1876 an undisputed majority of nearly 400, and this was much reduced by violence and fraud affecting an extensive section of the parish. That the proper majority should have exceeded a thousand we have no doubt, but for the purposes of this argument we accept the vote of 1876 as a correct expression of the popular will. In 1879 the commissioners of election were democrats without exception. Republicans were denied representation among the officers of election in spite of express provisions of law and repeated applications for justice. The returns disclose that the refusal to allow republicans representation at the polls covered a purpose of fraud as flagrant as any in history. This parish contains 4,350 voters, of whom but 1,300, or thereabout, are white. More than three thousand men reside in that parish who have acted on all occasions with the republican party. If we are to believe the democratic officers of election nearly 2,500 voters of the parish of Natchitoches abstained from voting in December last, and more astounding still, all these who so abstained were of one political party. This we cannot believe and do not believe, nor do we believe that this statement will be actually accepted as true by any member of your body.

Tremendous frauds accompanied by atrocious violence suppressed the republican vote at all but two polls in Ouachita in 1876. In 1874, at a perfectly fair and free election, at which the democratic party cast its heaviest vote up to that date, the republicans had a majority admitted and undisputed of more than 950. The frauds and violence in evidence before the House committee changed this to a democratic majority (on paper) of 1,076. This would seem to have been sufficient to satisfy the flagitious ambition of the most reckless of political thugs and murderers, but does not appear to have been to the managers of the campaign of 1879. If we are to believe the returns of officers of election exclusively of the democratic party, Beattie received but 11 votes, while Wiltz had a majority of 1,965! In other words two thousand men who voted the republican ticket in 1868, 1870, 1872, and 1874, or in other words, until murder became the basis of democratic campaigns, cast but 11 votes, while one thousand democrats (the greatest number who ever voted in Ouachita in peaceful times) cast 1,976. No adjectives can add force to the simple statement of facts. The election of 1876 in the parish of Pointe Coupée was complicated with fraud and some violence in the northwestern portion of the parish, and these somewhat reduced the republican majority. The parish contained 3,300 voters, or thereabout, of whom 825 were white and 2,475 were colored. For the purposes of this argument the vote of 1876 is accepted as a fair expression of the popular voice. The vote stood democratic 1,096, republican 1,971, Packard's majority being therefore 875. The frauds and violence which affected but a portion of the parish in 1876 had been so extended in 1879 that the democratic vote rose to 1,364 and the republican vote fell to 907, and a republican majority of 875 was changed to a democratic one of 457. That there was any such change of political faith or affiliation as these returns would seem to import is not even suggested by any one. Here as elsewhere the fact appears in its full significance, that all the officers of election were democratic. We are asked here moreover to believe that in this parish more than 900 voters abstained from voting at an election which excited more than ordinary interest, that as in other cases named all so abstaining were of one political party, and that the one having no official representation at the polls. It is incredible.

The parish of Rapides gave Packard a majority of 100, even in the face of an admitted fraud of 300 votes at the Cotile box. In 1879 all the officers of election were democrats as usual. It can be proven that the republicans cast more than 1,500 votes in this parish for their full ticket. The returns are made to show but 899 with 1,941 for Wiltz, or 1,042 majority.

The parish of Red River contained in 1875 1,618 voters of whom but 475 were white. It had given republican majorities continuously, varying but little from 600. While it was the center of political disturbances and outrage (in the fourth congressional district) in 1874, it had nevertheless given even in that year a republican majority undisputed by any democrat. In 1876 the vote had been Nicholls 415, Packard 830. The vote had then, as in previous years, justified the classification of party votes with general reference to race and color; and that elections conducted under republican auspices were free and fair was made evident by the fact that the race generally voting the democratic ticket cast a larger percentage of ballots to total vote than did the race habitually voting the other way. The history and record of the parish justified the expectation that the parish would have given a republican majority two months since, the returning officers would have us believe that more than eleven hundred republicans cast not a single ballot and that every vote cast there was cast for L. A. Wiltz. They demand more than we can concede. Had the ballots been counted as cast the republicans would have had a majority in that parish for their entire ticket, nor will this fact be denied by any democrat of Red River not directly interested in the fraud.

The parish of Richland contains near 1,700 voters, of whom a little more than half are colored and republicans.

This is another parish where democratic officers of election would have us believe that not a single republican vote was cast and that more than 500 voters, all of one political faith, abstained from attendance at the polls. The parish of Saint Bernard contained, in 1875, 1,153 voters, 388 white and 765 colored. The vote of 1876, which was undisputed by any one, was 335 for Nicholls and 691 for Packard, the republican majority being, therefore, 356, and the percentage of vote to voting population being 89. It is not suggested by any one that the population of Saint Bernard has increased or that the proportion of the races has changed since 1875. Nevertheless it is made to appear from the returns of 1879, formulated exclusively by democrats, that Wiltz received 897 votes and Beattie 472; together, 1,369 ballots, or somewhat over 200 more than the whole voting population of the parish. When it became necessary to "count out" a republican (undoubtedly elected) senator from the district of which Saint Bernard forms a part, even the returns, of which the vote as above stated form a part, were disregarded. The respective senatorial candidates were Estopinal, whom the commissioners of election certified to have received in round numbers 800 votes, and Warmouth, whom they admitted to have received nearly 500 votes. The sheriff and returning officer falsified even these fraudulent returns to meet a political exigency, and returned 1,100 votes for Estopinal and 203 for Warmouth, thus changing the result in the senatorial district.

In the parish of Tensas there were at the election of 1876 4,744 voters, of whom 492 only were white; 486 persons voted at that election for Nicholls and 3,192 for Packard, the latter having, therefore, a majority of 2,706. That this was a full, fair, and free election was not disputed by any one. In 1878 for the first time this parish became the scene of political violence, then committed by residents thereof and by others from the neighboring parish of Catahoula in the interest of one J. F. King, a democratic candidate for Congress. This violence was continued in less degree during the past year, and, as usual, the commissioners of election in this parish were exclusively of the democratic party. The result of the election of 1879 can be mainly referred, without doubt, to a deliberate and predetermined fraud committed by these democratic officers of election. In five wards of this parish an accurate tally of the votes was kept by responsible and intelligent republicans during the entire day of election, and at these five polls (First, Second, Third, Fifth, and Sixth wards) Wiltz received a vote of 213, and Beattie received a vote of 2,028, or a majority of 1,815. This majority is known to have been swelled to one of more than 2,000 by the vote of the remaining precincts. The vote was nevertheless returned as having stood, Beattie 346, Wiltz 1,944, or a majority for the latter of 1,598. No democrats familiar with the fact even seriously pretend that these returns were in any sense a reflex of the vote as actually cast. There is abundant evidence that the republican candidates for governor, senator, and members of the house received each more than 2,000 majority in this parish. Nor is the fact denied by any member of the democratic party there, except those directly interested in the result of this enormous fraud.

The same means which we assert to have been used in the parish of Tensas we assert to have been used with similar effrontery, and with the same results, in the adjoining parishes of Madison and Concordia, and we could easily, and would certainly, establish the commission of the frauds charged in all these parishes by indisputable evidence were we permitted to do so.

It is conceded by all parties that the late election was fairly held, and that the returns thereof were fairly made, from parishes within the third congressional district and in some parishes adjacent thereto.

It is instructive to compare the relations between the vote for Packard and Beattie, respectively, in this section of the State, and the same votes as returned from the remainder of Louisiana. The parishes alluded to are seventeen, to wit, Ascension, Assumption, Calcasieu, Cameron, Iberia, Iberville, La Fayette, La Fourche, Plaquemines, Saint Charles, Saint James, Saint John, Saint Landry, Saint Martin, Saint Mary, Terre Bonne, and Vermillion. In this group of parishes Packard's vote was 24,564, and Beattie's was 22,431, showing a falling off of 2,133 votes.

Per contra, Nicholl's vote was 20,386, and Wiltz's vote was 17,181, showing a falling off of 3,205 votes. Packard's majority in this group of parishes was thus 4,178, while Beattie's was 5,250. Thus it appears that, while various causes operated to reduce the vote of both parties within this portion of the State by a considerable percentage, the republicans in this the only portion of Louisiana in which they were allowed a fair election cast nearly everywhere a full vote; in many districts made a positive increase, and in the group as a whole increased their majority over the democratic party more than 25 per cent.

These undisputed facts are in themselves evidence that wherever left free to do so the republican party of Louisiana has preserved its organization and enthusiasm; that its members have maintained their partisan relations unimpaired, and that with the disadvantages affecting a party out of power it has made everywhere relative and frequently positive gains upon the democratic party, re-enforced as that party has lately been with all the advantages obtainable from patronage and power.

We assume nothing in stating that there is no parish in Louisiana in which the party would have failed to exhibit similar organization, enthusiasm, devotion, and substantial prosperity had it been exempt from the oppression of revolutionary violence on the one hand and official fraud on the other.

Had the party been free from oppression and exempt from fraud throughout the State in December last, your memorialists would have been able to address you officially as the Legislature of Louisiana, and not as the powerless minority of that body, representing a hundred thousand practically disfranchised voters.

You are asked by men who occupy seats in the Legislature of Louisiana by no better title than such frauds as we have hereinbefore enumerated to act upon representations which they have the assurance to offer as the voice of the people of this State.

It is an indisputable fact that had the recent general election been fairly conducted, and the ballots cast thereat honestly counted, republican representatives would have been returned from the following-named parishes, &c., now misrepresented by democrats, to wit: Avoyelles, East Baton Rouge, Bossier, Caddo, Concordia, De Soto, East Feliciana, West Feliciana, Madison, Morehouse, Natchitoches, Ouachita, Pointe Coupée, Rapides, Red River, Saint Bernard, Tensas, and the seventh, fourteenth, and fifteenth representative districts of the parish of Orleans—thirty members in all.

There were returned republican members from Ascension, Assumption, West Baton Rouge, East Carroll, Iberia, Iberville, Jefferson, La Fourche, Plaquemines, Saint Charles, Saint James, Saint John, Saint Martin, Saint Mary, Terre Bonne, and the fourth representative district of Orleans—in all nineteen members.

Thus the republican membership in the present house of representatives of Louisiana should have been forty-nine, which is a majority of the entire body, and this notwithstanding that in reapportioning the State in 1877 and in 1879 the party in power fraudulently deprived the republican parish of Saint James of one representative to which it was entitled upon their own basis of apportionment, and equally in fraud gave an additional member to the democratic parish of Claiborne, to which its population gave it no claim.

It is not necessary to carry the details of fraud through the several senatorial districts into the present upper house. It is sufficient to say that that body, equally with the house of representatives, would have a republican majority had the late general election been other than an organized fraud in all but a small section of the State.

Your memorialists therefore address you in their rightful character as the representatives of the majority of the people of Louisiana, and with the emphasis which belongs to the utterance of half a million of citizens.

By men chosen by this majority as their representatives Hon. WILLIAM P. KELLOGG was duly elected United States Senator from this State for six years from March 4, 1877.

As many of your memorialists personally know, the said KELLOGG received every vote cast in the General Assembly of that date, and a quorum of the body participated in the election.

A minority of that General Assembly was then in revolt against the lawful government of the State, and associated with persons never elected, and some of whom had never claimed to have been elected, had at another place organized a pretended General Assembly.

When at a still later date the lawful assembly had ineffectually made a constitutional call for aid to suppress domestic violence, and had been itself disintegrated and overthrown by revolutionary forces and by the aid of external powers, on which it ought to have been able to confidently rely for its maintenance; and when the lawful government of the State had fallen before the blows of armed revolt, a general assembly, (so called,) destitute of every title not based upon fraud, maintained by force, assumed to elect to the seat in your body then recently vacated by Hon. J. R. West one Spofford.

That the revolutionary and unlawful body to which he owed his pretended election could convey him no title, we assert.

The records of your body contain moreover, as we are informed and believe, evidence that said Spofford secured the pretended election on which he bases his claims by bargain and sale.

In the election of W. P. KELLOGG to the seat occupied by him in your body, the State of Louisiana through her representatives had exercised her constitutional powers and had in that instance exhausted them.

Your memorialists are not informed that any charges affecting the propriety or legality of KELLOGG's election have been sustained by reasonable or credible proofs.

It is perhaps but logical that men whose occupation of a majority of seats in this Legislature is solely due to dishonest and undemocratic practices should submit a memorial in behalf of a senatorial claimant whose title is as barren as many of their own.

The act fairly consists with the local democratic system of fabricating official titles, at any cost of good faith and to the good fame of the Commonwealth, and of insisting upon their legitimacy by memorial by armed mobs or by any other method which may best serve the end in view. But the fact nevertheless remains that a majority of the voters in Louisiana, to whose party we belong and in whose name we esteem it to be our duty to pronounce, are represented in the seat wherein W. P. KELLOGG sits, and, were they represented as justly and properly in this Legislature as they were in that elected in 1876, would reaffirm by a majority no less than in 1877 their confidence in and the rightful claims of their elected Senator, W. P. KELLOGG.

They now, therefore, in the name of the State of Louisiana and in the most solemn manner, protest against any action upon the part of your body which shall destroy or impair the rights now possessed by WILLIAM P. KELLOGG as one of her constitutional representatives in the Senate of the United States.

And they moreover protest that any representations, resolutions, memorials in a contrary sense which may reach your body from any person or persons in the State of Louisiana are derogatory to the honor and rights of our people, and in no wise represent their will, which, as manifested by the General Assembly of 1877 in the election of W. P. KELLOGG, we adjure you to regard.

A due respect for the Senate of the United States, and for the rights of the people of Louisiana impel us to address you this solemn memorial and protest, and to subscribe ourselves,

With profound respect, your obedient servants,

HENRY DENNIS, Seventh senatorial district.
RICHARD SIMMS, Eighth senatorial district.
J. STEWART, Ninth senatorial district.
MAYER CAHEN, Senator ninth senatorial district.
A. F. RIARD, Senator eleventh senatorial district.
V. DICKERSON, St. James Parish.
H. HEIDENHEIM, of Orleans.
PIERRE LANDRY, Parish of Ascension.
L. ROCHE, Jefferson.
EDWARD WILLIAMS, Parish of Terre Bonne.
T. M. FRAZIER, La Fourche.
J. W. A. VERRET, Iberville.
ISHAM POLLARD, of Terre Bonne.
BIVIAN GARDNER, of Assumption Parish.
WM. J. YELL, Representative from East Carroll.
A. BULOW, Representative, Assumption.

The Honorable the VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ROLLINS. I present the petition of Natt Head, of Hooksett; Ossian Ray, United States attorney, and W. S. Ladd, of Lancaster, New Hampshire, praying that the terms of the United States circuit and district courts now held at Exeter, for and within the district of New Hampshire, be removed from that place to the city of Concord, where by reason of its location and railroad facilities people in the northern and western portions of the State can more easily attend the terms of that court; also a like petition from A. P. Carpenter, of Bath; Harry Bingham, of Littleton, and Jacob Littleton and others, of Lancaster, New Hampshire; a like petition from B. H. Corning and many other citizens of Lancaster, New Hampshire; a like petition from J. B. Burrows and other citizens of Plymouth, New Hampshire; a like petition from G. F. Putnam and other citizens of Haverhill, New Hampshire; a like petition from J. W. Patterson and other citizens of Hanover, New Hampshire; and a like petition from Luther D. Sawyer and other attorneys of Ossipee, New Hampshire. I move the reference of these petitions to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER presented the petition of C. A. Webb, J. G. McCarry, and 38 others; the petition of J. H. McGill, J. F. White, and 39 others; and the petition of A. J. Matthews, J. F. M. Doyle, and 38 others, citizens residing in the valley of the Savannah River, praying for an appropriation by Congress for the improvement of the navigation of that river; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, presented the petition of Charles Baldwin and others, citizens of Princeton, Illinois, praying for the passage of a law granting a pension to James W. Thompson, late private Company H, Forty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of J. M. McGregor and others, praying for an appropriation by Congress for the erection of a lighthouse on the point at the entrance of Little Traverse Harbor, Lake Michigan; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The Committee on Agriculture, to whom was referred the memorial of Daniel Ruggles, of Fredericksburgh, Virginia, giving his views on the method of precipitating rain-fall, instruct me to report it back, and move that it be printed and recommitted to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEREFORD, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2253) to provide for the construction of a marine hospital in the city of Memphis, Tennessee, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. COKE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 657) authorizing certain Cherokee reservees to institute and prosecute suits before the courts of the United States for claims on account of reservations of lands taken by them in States east of the Mississippi River under the treaties of 1817, 1819, and prior treaties between the United States and the Cherokees, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to:

A bill (S. No. 1181) for the relief of Dodd, Brown & Co., of Saint Louis, Missouri;

A bill (S. No. 1245) for the relief of E. W. Raymond;

A bill (S. No. 1221) for the relief of Tod Randall;

A bill (S. No. 1001) to authorize the auditing of certain unpaid accounts in the Indian Bureau;

A bill (S. No. 692) for the relief of Robert A. McMurray;

A bill (S. No. 439) for the relief of John S. Friend;

A bill (S. No. 352) for the relief of Frank D. Yates; and

A bill (S. No. 222) for the relief of John L. Williams, sole heir of Eleazer Williams, deceased.

Mr. COKE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 346) to carry into effect the tenth article of the treaty with the Pottawatomie Indians of February 27, 1867, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the petition of William W. Dudley and others, asking for the construction of an elevator in the court-house building at Indianapolis, Indiana, reported a bill (S. No. 1280) for the purpose of erecting an elevator in the United States courts and Federal offices at Indianapolis, Indiana; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 769) to enable the State of Colorado to take lands in lieu of sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections found to be mineral lands, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 549) for the relief of Samuel I. Gustin, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Thomas H. Dunham, praying that cotton tarred cordage may be used by the Secretary of the Navy in the naval service, reported a bill (S. No. 1281) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to introduce cotton cordage into the naval service of the United States; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1083) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Denver, Colorado, to report it adversely, the committee having heretofore reported a bill embracing the same subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 1282) to incorporate the National Education Association; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The joint resolution (H. R. No. 120) to pay A. R. Potts and C. F. Rainey for services in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The committee find upon examination that under one of the last appropriation bills, the sundry civil bill or the deficiency bill, during the last session, these gentlemen were paid.

The committee therefore report back the bill adversely, and I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WALLACE, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3258) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior and Secretary of War to employ additional clerks for the balance of the fiscal year to expedite the settlement of pension applications, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

FEES OF OFFICERS OF COURTS.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives providing for the appointment of a joint committee of three Senators and five Representatives to investigate the present system of salaries, fees, and emoluments allowed officers of United States courts, and to ascertain what abuses, if any, exist, have directed me to report that the Senate do not concur in the raising of the committee. A written report is presented which I ask may be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

The report was ordered to be printed, and the resolution placed on the Calendar, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That a joint committee of three Senators and five Representatives be appointed to investigate the present system of salaries, fees, and emoluments allowed to the officers of the several courts of the United States, to ascertain whether any, and if any, what, abuses now exist or have existed or may take place thereunder, and to report by bill or otherwise. That said committee shall have power to employ a clerk and the services of a stenographer, send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, examine witnesses, and to report at any time.

DISTRICT REFORM SCHOOL.

Mr. HARRIS. The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) making appropriations for the Reform School of the District of Columbia, have instructed me to report it back without amendment, and with a recommendation that it pass. They also instruct me to ask for its present consideration, because it is absolutely necessary that it should pass at once, there being no fund out of which the boys at the Reform School can be supported for a single day.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the joint resolution be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like an explanation of the reason why there is any necessity for immediate consideration. This is a House joint resolution. What is the occasion which requires it to be considered to-day, and why will not to-morrow do?

Mr. HARRIS. The occasion is that there is no fund out of which the $2 a week for the support of the boys at the Reform School can be paid. They cannot be supported unless this joint resolution is passed to furnish the funds with which to support them.

Mr. COCKRELL. How long has the Reform School been in that condition?

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] can answer the Senator more satisfactorily than I can.

Mr. ALLISON. The facts are simply these: At the last Congress we appropriated $20,000 for the support of this reform school, and we also, as had been done in several other acts, revived the provisions of the thirteenth section of the act of 1876. The accounting officers of the Treasury decide, however, that a simple revival of that act will not authorize them to pay the $2 a week which has been paid for the support of these boys.

It was the intention of Congress and of the Appropriation Committee to appropriate the $20,000, and, in addition to that, to secure to the Reform School the $2 a week for each boy as provided by the law of 1876. The $20,000 was sufficient to maintain the school up to about the 8th or 9th of February. There is a law on the statute-book prohibiting the officers in the District of Columbia from expending one dollar in advance of an appropriation, and therefore boys who are sent daily to this school by the various courts of this District can have no fund out of which their subsistence can be paid. It is important that this joint resolution should pass at an early day, and it ought to pass to-day.

Mr. COCKRELL. When did the Treasury Department decide that they could not pay out the fund?

Mr. ALLISON. They decided it during the present fiscal year.

Mr. COCKRELL. Prior to the meeting of Congress?

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then it has been known to the officers here and the committee ever since the beginning of Congress that this would occur.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly; but the joint resolution makes an appropriation, and the custom is that appropriations shall come from the House of Representatives. There was a sufficient sum to maintain this school, as I said before, to about the 8th or 9th of February. The matter ran along in the House of Representatives until February 9, when the joint resolution was received here, the very day the appropriation was exhausted. That is the reason for hastening its consideration. I have no interest in it, and of course the Committee on the District of Columbia have no other interest in it than to maintain this reform school.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to look at the joint resolution a little, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution goes over, under the objection of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Vermont will have time to examine this matter so that we may consider the joint resolution before we adjourn to-day. I think it is important that action be taken at once.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GARLAND asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1283) to extend the time for the completion of the Texas and Pacific Railway; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. PADDOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1284) explanatory of an act entitled "An act for a grant of lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Northern Kansas Railroad and Telegraph," approved July 23, 1866; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BRUCE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1285) for the endowment of the S. R. and R. M. Lowery Industrial Academy, in the State of Alabama, and to accept a donation of buildings and lands in aid of the same, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SAUNDERS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1286) abolishing all duties on the importation of salt; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PLUMB asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1287) for the relief of A. G. Chase; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1288) to authorize the President to restore D. M. Page to his former rank in the Army, and place him upon the retired list; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, (by request,) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1289) granting a pension to James W. Thompson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BUTLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1290) to incorporate the G Street Railway Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SLATER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1291) for the relief of Charles W. Denton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. SLATER, it was Ordered, That all papers on the files of the Senate relating to the claim of Charles W. Denton be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. PLUMB, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the claim of James P. Warrell be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HARRIS. I propose the following order:

Ordered, That Mrs. Flora A. Darling be permitted to withdraw the papers in respect to her claim from the files of the Senate, there having been an adverse report upon said claim.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made on the usual condition, subject to the rules.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know whether the standing rules require copies in such cases to be left. If they do not, the order ought to be entered that she must leave copies.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The rules do require it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then it is all right.

The order was agreed to.

PRINTING OF A REPORT.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, it was Ordered, That the report in the case of Stephen A. McCarty be printed for the use of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

IMPROVEMENT OF EXETER RIVER.

Mr. ROLLINS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit to the Senate all reports relating to the improvement of the Exeter River below Exeter, New Hampshire, made in pursuance of act of Congress approved June 3, 1874.

COMMITTEE ON INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I intended this morning, if the Senator from Georgia who sits nearest me [Mr. GORDON] had been in his seat, to call up the motion for the reconsideration of the resolution in regard to a select committee to consider the Isthmus canal question, but as that Senator is not in his seat of course I shall not ask the Senate to vote on the motion at this time. I wish to state, however, that I have always been ready to act upon the question, and the delay is not owing to a neglect upon the part of myself who moved the reconsideration.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 200) for printing the eulogies delivered in the Senate and House of Representatives upon Hon. Rush Clark, deceased; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. R. No. 170) concerning an international fishery exhibition to be held in Berlin, Germany, in April, 1880; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

JOSIAH H. PILLSBURY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the call of the Calendar, under the special rule, commencing at the point last reached.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 762) for the relief of Josiah H. Pillsbury.

Mr. COCKRELL. The report has been read, I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report has been read.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the administrator of Josiah H. Pillsbury, deceased."

THOMAS LUCAS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 152) for the relief of Thomas Lucas; which was read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no written report accompanying the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then let it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is objected to, and the next bill on the Calendar will be reported.

HERMAN NETTERFIELD.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 35) granting a pension to Herman Netterfield; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Herman Netterfield, late of Canby's Scouts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This bill is reported from the Committee on Pensions adversely.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. McMILLAN. The bill was placed upon the Calendar in order that the attention of the Senate might be called to it more particularly. Although there was an adverse report of the committee, I understand that the report was not unanimous. The report was submitted by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. KIRKWOOD.] I see that the Senator is now in his seat, and I will leave the matter in his hands for the present.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Has the report been read?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. KIRKWOOD January 12, 1880:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 35) granting a pension to Herman Netterfield, have examined the same, and report:

Herman Netterfield was a member of a corps of mounted citizen scouts organized by First Lieutenant J. N. Earl, Company D, Fourth Wisconsin Volunteers, under orders of Major-General E. R. S. Canby, of which the following is a copy:

HEADQUARTERS MILITARY DIVISION OF WEST MISSISSIPPI,
Natchez, Mississippi, June 6, 1864.

SIR: The commanding general authorizes you to organize a corps of mounted citizen scouts for service in this division. They must be reliable men and specially fitted for this kind of service. They will be paid at rates ranging from $40 to $60 per month, according to the value of their services, and one ration each.

They will be organized into squads, and their services accepted on the special condition that they will be held subject to strict military discipline and all the rules and articles of war. Written engagements to that effect will be entered into with each man. Commanders of squads will be allowed increased pay in proportion to the importance of their commands. In cases where extra danger is incurred in the line of duty, or where specially valuable service is performed, extra compensation may be expected.

If you know of any soldiers who are fitted for this duty, they may be ordered to report to you at Natchez, Mississippi, when furloughs will be granted to them with the understanding that they are not to draw any pay from their companies while employed on this duty.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. T. CHRISTENSON,
Major, Assistant Adjutant-General.

First Lieutenant J. N. EARL,
Company D, Fourth Wisconsin Volunteers, Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

Netterfield became a member of this organization July 1, 1864, on wages of $60 per month, and continued in such service until May 10, 1865.

It is shown by the evidence of Charles W. Fenlason and William D. Kent, who were members of the same organization and who were present with Netterfield when the matters detailed by them occurred, that on or about October 3, 1864, near Natchez, Mississippi, while this company of scouts were on an expedition, and in the night-time, a charge was ordered and made on the enemy; that in the charge Netterfield was violently thrown from his horse and received a fracture of the elbow-joint of his right arm. It also appears that said injury has resulted in permanent injury and disability. Netterfield was not treated for his injury in any hospital, and Lieutenant Earl, the only commissioned officer of the scouts, is dead.

Netterfield applied for a pension, and his claim was rejected by the Commissioner "for the reason that the claimant was not serving with any military force of the United States at the time he incurred his disability, but was employed as a scout whose services were paid by the Quartermaster's Department as civil employé."

The committee concur with the Commissioner, and recommend that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. This case brings squarely before the Senate for its determination the question whether or not pensions should be granted to any but regularly enlisted soldiers. This case and two from West Virginia present the question as clearly and as strongly, I think, as any that can be submitted to the Senate, and will to a large extent, I apprehend, determine the future action of the Pension Committee.

In justice to myself, having submitted this adverse report from the committee, I must say that it was understood in committee that the fact of my making the report should not conclude my action here, it being known that I myself was opposed to the action of the committee and would advocate the rejection of the report in the Senate.

Let us look at this case. That this man was rendering service strictly military in its character is beyond doubt. If Senators will look at the orders issued by Major-General Canby, under which the body of scouts was organized, they will see that the service to be rendered by these scouts, contemplated in the order, was military in its character; and that the injury received by the claimant here was such as soldiers are exposed to. The wound he received in making a charge upon the rebels. By reason of that wound he was disabled, and is unable to perform that labor which is necessary to his support.

It seems to me, looking at the question in its broad aspect, that this man was rendering to the Government the services of a soldier, although not technically an enlisted soldier; and as in that service of the country, for the country, he was disabled from performing the labor necessary to his support, it is the duty of the Government to pension him.

I do not know that anything I can add will make this case clearer to the understanding of the Senate than what I have said. If the same service had been rendered by an enlisted man and he had received the same injury while rendering the service, there would be no question that the enlisted man would be entitled to a pension. It may be dullness on my part, but I really cannot comprehend why when this man was rendering the same service to the Government that would have entitled an enlisted man to a pension, he should not, in the judgment of the Senate, also be entitled to a pension.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, I think it proper to add a few words to what has been said by the Senator who reported this bill. This is one of a class of cases which under the law are not pensionable. The custom of this body has been, since I have been a member of it, not to grant pensions to classes of persons who are not pensionable under the law. It is true that in one or two instances, owing to the pertinacious and pathetic appeals of Senators who had an interest in some of those cases, the Senate has, within my recollection, granted pensions to persons not pensionable. There are half a dozen, or probably a dozen such cases now pending upon the rolls of the committee, and the object of bringing this case to the attention of the Senate was that the Senate might give an intelligible verdict upon the question whether they would extend the operations of the pension laws to a class of cases which under existing laws are not pensionable; because there is no valid reason why all persons belonging to this class who have received injury or been subjected to disabling disease while in service should not be pensioned just as well as this man.

It is the object and design of the Pension Committee, if this case receives the favorable action of the Senate, to move an amendment to the pension law so as to embrace all this class within its operations and give them the benefit of it, believing that it is an invidious distinction which is sought to be created in favor of a few individuals when others equally meritorious belonging to the same class are excluded from it. That is the whole of the case.

Mr. HEREFORD. Mr. President, I will state the ground on which this adverse report was made. The claim was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions "for the reason that the claimant was not serving with any military force of the United States at the time he incurred his disability, but was employed as a scout whose services were paid by the Quartermaster's Department as civil employé."

The Assistant Adjutant-General, under whose order this person was enlisted and employed as a scout, in his letter to the officer, which was placed before the committee, states:

The commanding general authorizes you to organize a corps of mounted citizen scouts for service in this division. They must be reliable men, and specially fitted for this kind of service. * * * They will be organized into squads, and their services accepted on the special condition that they will be held subject to strict military discipline, and all the rules and articles of war.

That was the kind of service in which this scout was engaged. He was subject to all the rules and articles of war. Technically he was not a soldier but in fact he was a soldier, performing most important service. As the report goes on further to show, adverse though it be, in a charge made in the night-time this man was thrown from his horse and received a fracture of the elbow-joint of his right arm. "It also appears that said injury has resulted in permanent injury and disability." He received this injury while he was engaged in a charge under the orders of the officer in command, in the night-time, and was actually as much a soldier as any man from the commander down. I can see no good reason why if anybody is to receive a pension the scouts who were thus employed by the Government in the most dangerous part of the military service should not receive a pension as well as any others.

I doubt myself the propriety of passing any general law on this subject, and in that I do not agree with my friend from Virginia. I think that each one of these cases should rest specially upon its own intrinsic merit. Then, what is the reason why a pension should be refused in this case? The Commissioner of Pensions was justified in refusing this person a pension, because he was not entitled to a pension under the law. The Commissioner of Pensions could not allow him a pension because the law did not grant it; but Congress can allow him a pension. I can see no better case in which a pension should be allowed than a case where a man who was actually in the military service, scout though he may have been, in a charge ordered and made in the night-time, received an injury which has since become permanent.

I hope the Senate will grant this man a pension, as it has granted others, as it granted a pension a session or two ago to a teamster who lost his eyesight by exposure on a certain cold night and who is totally blind. This body in its sense of right and justice granted a pension to that poor blind man, yet he was no soldier nor was he even a scout; he was not engaged in the dangerous business that this man was engaged in, but the Senate in its wisdom and in its sense of justice gave to him, as it should have done, a pension. I hope it will be the pleasure of this body to grant this man thus wounded a pension.

Mr. WITHERS. I desire simply to call attention to one fact, that the very order which was read by my friend from West Virginia repels the conclusion he draws, and it shows that this man was not in a military capacity, that he was a citizen. The order authorizes the employment of a force of "citizen scouts." They were not subjected to the privations of military life, nor indeed subject to all military orders, although it says they shall be, and they received $60 per month as pay and compensation, five times as much as that of a soldier. But at last the whole question comes to this, whether the Congress of the United States are willing to extend the provisions of the pension laws to classes of cases which are not pensionable under the existing laws; and whether they be scouts, teamsters, sutlers, clerks in the Adjutant-General's or Commissary's Department, or anything else, if the principle is to be adopted that if a man was connected with the Army in any way and received an injury or contracted a disease which disabled him, therefore he is entitled to a pension, I want Congress to pass a law for that purpose, and not compel the Committee on Pensions to be drawing invidious distinctions between cases indentical in every respect so far as regards the principle involved.

Mr. HEREFORD. I think that my friend the Senator from Virginia is mistaken when he says that this party and all these scouts were not subject to military discipline. The order itself says that they will be held subject to strict military discipline, and of the rules and articles of war. They were subject to every rule and article of war—to be tried by a court-martial, to be ordered wherever the officer in command should order them, whether by night or by day; and, furthermore, there is one significant thing in this very order which shows in what light the officer making the order viewed this business that these men were engaged in. Here is a part of the order:

Commanders of squads—

That is of the squads of scouts—

will be allowed increased pay in proportion to the importance of their commands.

The officer in command knew very well the danger of the errand on which these men were sent, and he said that according to that danger their pay should be increased. Yet the argument of the Senator is that such men when wounded should not have a pension. Why, the officer in command, according to the language of his very order, thinks their pay should be increased, and the order shows that they were under strict military discipline and subject to each and every one of the rules and articles of war. I hope, Mr. President, that a pension will be allowed this party.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Pensions, and I dissent entirely from the construction put by the committee upon the pension laws. I hope the Senate will pass this bill and not adopt the adverse report of the committee. I do not understand the pension laws in the same light in which the Pension Committee do, and I differ from the honorable chairman of the committee in his opinion that a man is not in military service because he is not regularly entered upon the muster-rolls of the Army. The military service of the country, according to the pension laws, in its spirit and purpose, includes all those who are in the Army in time of war. A man who is a volunteer, or who is under orders in the Army in any sense of the word, and who renders service involving personal danger and personal heroism is within the essence, spirit, and meaning of the law. With what propriety can a man who is dangerously wounded, as this scout was, (and there are many such cases coming before the Pension Committee,) be denied a pension, having rendered conspicuous service from honorable motives, from patriotic purposes, merely because he was not in the mere technical sense of the word mustered into the service upon the muster-roll? To take that ground is, in my mind, a complete denial of the purpose and object of the law.

The object of the pension law, I think beyond all doubt, is to establish a public policy to reward acts of personal sacrifice and devotion, to reward those who contribute their lives or their time and expose themselves to personal danger in the service of the country, and to encourage that species of heroism and that species of personal courage and devotion among the people of the country.

Now, sir, what objection can be made to granting a pension in this instance, to a man who accompanied the Army as a scout under military orders, an essential part of the military system, and who saved the command to which he was attached by a conspicuous exhibition of personal gallantry, resulting in his serious injury? I cannot conceive of a more odious interpretation of the law.

Neither do I concur in the opinion of the committee that the Pension Committee is appointed only to consider cases which are pensionable under existing laws. I think that the very object and spirit of that committee is to consider cases which are not pensionable under existing laws; because from some defect in the law, although the case may be within the reason and spirit and purpose of the law, it cannot be allowed by the executive authorities created under the law. There are a number of cases of that description coming entirely within the reason and within the spirit of the pension laws, which address themselves to my mind with great force as being entirely within the purpose and object of those laws and intended to be included within them.

I hope that the report of the committee will not be adopted and that the bill will pass.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I do not propose to detain the Senate at any length, but I must enter my dissent from the theory advanced by the Senators who advocate this bill. I differ from the Senator from Florida that the Government is under obligation to grant this pension, that the pension laws are merely made for the benefit of persons who may do service to the country. That is not the intention at all. The intention of the pension laws, as I understand, is to fulfill the contract made between the soldier and the Government that if he becomes disabled on account of wounds or disability while in the service in the performance of his duty he shall be put on the pension-roll. That is a part of the contract written in the law, and it is under that agreement by the Government with the soldier that he becomes entitled to a pension at all.

Now, on the theory that persons may be pensioned who are not mustered into the service, every teamster in the Army would be entitled to a pension, every man who aided or assisted in any way whatever by giving information, ascertaining facts, administering to the wants of the Army or the soldiers in any capacity whatever. It is perfectly clear that this man is not entitled to a pension under the theory of the pension laws, or under any theory that has ever been established in this Government by which a pension is given on account of disabilities. Let us read the contract with this party, which was a contract in writing. What is it?

The commanding general authorizes you to organize a corps of mounted citizen scouts for service in this division. They must be reliable men and specially fitted for this kind of service. They will be paid at rates ranging from $40 to $60 per month, according to the value of their services, and one ration each.

They will be organized into squads, and their services accepted on the special condition that they will be held subject to strict military discipline and all the rules and articles of war.

Following that, what is the language?

Written engagements to that effect will be entered into with each man.

These men entered into a written contract to perform certain service for the Government for which they were to receive a monthly payment running from $40 to $60. That was the contract. They took all the chances. Their agreement with the Government was that they were to do this for a certain amount per month, not that they were to have a pension if they should be wounded or become disabled.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator inform me, as he is more familiar with this matter than I am, whether that contract can be terminated at the pleasure of the man making it at any time he pleases?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. INGALLS. It can?

Mr. LOGAN. Most certainly. I presume there are numbers of persons here who are familiar with the system that is established in all armies in reference to scouts. Scouts are a kind of detectives, a kind of adventurers, a kind of men employed by armies to ascertain certain movements of the enemy. I have nothing to say about this man; he may be a perfect gentleman—I know not anything of his reputation—but I must say that the men who are generally employed as scouts, as we term them, are generally on both sides of the question. I guess there are plenty of men here who know that to be the fact.

Mr. McMILLAN. That remark will justify me in asking this question? Does the Senator think Mr. Netterfield a man of that character?

Mr. LOGAN. As I have said, I have not a word to say against this man, for I know nothing about him. He may be a man of the highest character, and may have been at the time; I do not say; but I do say that usually in war the men that go from one side to the other to get information and report it take information from one side to the other, and bring information from the other side to ours. That is generally what they do—we all know that—but officers in the Army are willing to take the chances; that is to say, they try to prevent the scouts from having all the information in reference to their own army from the fact that they are very sure they will give it to the other side. That is nearly always the case; but, as I said, I do not wish to apply these remarks to this case. I merely put my opposition to the bill upon the ground that a scout is a man who performs services under a contract with the Army officers for which he receives a certain stipulated sum per month, which may be increased according to the service that he performs. He may be rewarded in money to a large amount sometimes, for the service he performs, by the commanding officer; but at no time was it ever understood that a man performing these services should be entitled under the law or under the theory of this Government to a pension on account of disability received while in performance of that service.

Mr. McDONALD. I call for the regular order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will not ask for the regular order until a resolution reported yesterday morning by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY,] in regard to the publication of a pamphlet, and which was laid over at my suggestion, can be passed. I know there is no objection to it.

Mr. McMILLAN. I hope the Senate will dispose of this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana calls for the regular order, which he is entitled to do.

Mr. McMILLAN. Under the rule, was not the time for the Calendar extended until half past one?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair ruled that it was not as against the unfinished business of the Senate, and still adheres to that ruling.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Indiana yield, that the resolution to which I referred may be taken up?

Mr. McDONALD. Very well.

HISTORY OF THE COTTON-WORM.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, reported yesterday by Mr. ANTHONY from the Committee on Printing, with an amendment:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That 10,000 additional copies be printed of Bulletin No. 3 of the History of the Cotton-Worm, &c., prepared by Professor Charles V. Riley under the order of the Congress; 7,000 copies for the use of the House, and 3,000 for the use of the Senate.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That there be printed 10,000 additional copies of Bulletin No. 3 of the United States entomological commission, on the cotton-worm; 6,000 copies for the use of the House, 3,000 for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 for the use of the Department of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 200) for printing the eulogies delivered in the Senate and House of Representatives upon Hon. Rush Clark, deceased, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

MILITARY WARRANT LAND LOCATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 19) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and certify the amount of land located with military warrants in the States described therein, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the motion of Mr. EDMUNDS to postpone the bill indefinitely.

Mr. PADDOCK. I present an amendment to the pending bill, to be read for information. It is an amendment which I reserved the right in committee to offer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment; which was, after the word "scrip," in line 17, to strike out "and land warrants," and insert "land warrants and agricultural-college scrip when such scrip issued for the benefit of one State has been or may be located upon the public lands in another State."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending motion does not permit amendments; but this amendment is read simply for information.

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. President, yesterday I endeavored to show that the United States had stipulated to pay the several States named in the bill 5 per cent. upon the sales of public lands situated within the limits of those States. I endeavored to show that the enabling acts substantially contained this provision, but that if there was any doubt upon that subject the subsequent acts of Congress relating to this question and the usage of the Government had entirely removed it. In the earlier acts for the admission of States, beginning with the State of Ohio and extending down to and including the State of Missouri, there had been a division of this fund provided for; one portion of it was to be applied within the State under the direction of the Legislature of the State, and another portion might be applied either in or without the State in such improvements as tended to the benefit of the State, under the direction of Congress; that of this portion, being 2 per cent. of the 5 per cent. reserved, the United States had never attempted to make any beneficial use for the State; that the only pretense there was that any such use had ever been sought to be made was in the abortive effort to construct the National Road—known in our legislation as the Cumberland road—that was to begin at tide-water in the State of Maryland and extend, as far as the located line was concerned, to the city of Jefferson in the State of Missouri; that this enterprise began about the time of the admission of the State of Ohio into the Union, and progressed to about the year 1832 or 1834, when the effort was entirely abandoned; that while the statesmen of that day, the ablest of this country, embracing such men as Mr. Clay, were struggling with the great question, as they regarded it, of interstate communication and were providing for the construction of a turnpike road, the energies of the people and the enterprise of the country outstripped them, and by the time they reached the Ohio River with this macadamized road, improved lines of transportation and travel had passed far beyond them, and as far as it was completed—portions of it through the State of Ohio were completed—and as I said yesterday a line of mud road was constructed through the State of Indiana and less than that through the State of Illinois; and in the years 1833 and 1835 the United States wholly abandoned this effort and ceded to the States of Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Virginia the completed parts of the road, and before a generation has passed away this magnificent scheme as it was thought in the beginning has almost passed out of the public mind. Railroads have scaled the Alleghany Mountains and they have scaled the Rocky Mountains; and he who now would talk about a great line of national thoroughfare like that of the National Road would be regarded as belonging to the family of Rip Van Winkle.

Congress seemed to take that same view of this question in the acts which I have already quoted relating to the States of Alabama and Mississippi, two of the States in which this division was provided for, and especially in the second section of the act relating to the State of Mississippi which especially obliterates this line of 2 per cent. and in effect charges the United States in account with the States with the entire 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands and directs an account to be made in that way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to understand whether the Senator from Indiana means to say that Congress did not spend all of the 3 per cent. that it was to spend in making works of improvement toward the States or to them, and more, on the Cumberland road?

Mr. McDONALD. Much more; and I will ask the Senator from Vermont if there was any act of Congress ever passed—if there was I have not been able to find it—appropriating this 2 per cent. for any such purpose?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Here is what Mr. Benton, of Missouri, said on the 6th of February, 1851, about that——

Mr. McDONALD. I would rather the question should be answered, because I am not certain myself, and I ask it therefore for information. It is my opinion from the examination I have made that Congress never did specifically appropriate any part of the 3 per cent. for the construction of any work of improvement, the Cumberland road or any other. If the honorable Senator from Vermont has found such an act, I hope he will cite it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In connection with this Cumberland road business and the 3 per cent., I wish merely to quote from the remarks of Mr. Clay and Mr. Benton in 1851 when the bill was up proposed by Mr. Benton to pay the State of Missouri 2 per cent. on the ground that all idea of ever expending it in getting that road to the State of Missouri had been abandoned. In that debate, Mr. Clay said this:

It will be seen that every cent of the 2 per cent. fund reserved in the compact between Missouri and the General Government has been expended, and a great deal more; that it was expended with the silent acquiescence at least of the State of Missouri, and with the positive votes of her Senators and Representatives during the passage of the various bills to which I shall have occasion to refer; that it was expended in the construction and continuation of the Cumberland road from Cumberland, in Maryland, to Vandalia, in Illinois; that it stopped in consequence of a collision which arose between the States of Missouri and Illinois, or rather, I believe, between the towns of Saint Louis and Alton, as to what should be the terminus of the road.

It will be seen in this exposition that between seven and eight hundred miles of the Cumberland road have been actually constructed, at a cost of nearly $6,000,000, and constructed upon a pledge of reimbursement to the Government of the United States of the amount expended from the 2 per cent. fund, derivable first from Ohio, then from Indiana, then from Illinois, and then from Missouri. It will be seen that the General Government is out of pocket to the amount of $4,500,000, and instead of being reimbursed the $5,800,000, she has only been reimbursed to the extent of about $1,230,000, or $1,300,000.—Appendix to Congressional Globe, Thirty-first Congress, second session, page 138.

Then he proceeds to cite the various acts to which the Senator has referred.

Mr. McDONALD. I do not see that that throws very much light on the discussion of to-day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the fault of Mr. Clay; I cannot help it.

Mr. McDONALD. I understood it was from Mr. Benton.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have read from the remarks of Mr. Clay. Mr. Benton followed, sustaining the same view of the facts.

Mr. McDONALD. Did Mr. Benton agree to that?

Mr. EDMUNDS. He agreed that far.

Mr. McDONALD. And yet he wanted the 2 per cent. for his State after agreeing to that?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; he was very much like some Senators I know of now. The democratic Senate by a vote of two to one refused to let him have it.

Mr. McDONALD. I should like the Senator to read that part of Mr. Benton's statement in which he admitted that the 2 per cent. had been spent in that way and yet claimed it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will by and by. There is a good deal of Mr. Benton's doctrine that I should be glad to have the Senator adopt.

Mr. McDONALD. I suspect I live up to it as much as the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no; you don't.

Mr. McDONALD. But however that may be with respect to the States of Indiana, Ohio, and Illinois, the State of Missouri has received her 2 per cent. by an act of Congress directly passed for that purpose. The States of Alabama and Mississippi received theirs. In the act, if you may so call it, for the relief of the State of Mississippi, the second section directed the same accounting to be made with the other States; and this was after the United States had ceded to the States of Maryland, Virginia, and Pennsylvania that portion of the line of the National Road within their limits and thus localized that great national work and made it the private property of those three States; and from that time until this the Federal Government has never in any way, so far as I know, made any suggestions that it proposed to make any other disposition or any disposition at all of the 2 per cent. fund. It therefore does not militate against the argument that I have been making when I say that the Government has treated this reservation as a reservation in favor of the States within whose limits the lands were situated, a reservation for their benefit on account of what they gave up on the other hand, for I say that this reservation was upon a good and sufficient consideration, and a very valuable one too.

The Senator from Vermont, with his distinguished ability, in discussing a question of that kind, undertook to show, the other day, that these reservations to the United States, these absolute promises in reference to the public domain within the limits of these States, were promises made for the benefit of these States and the people of these States, and that they were not burdens. So far as the State of Indiana is concerned, I have already read and desire again to call the attention of the Senate to what we agreed to:

That the five foregoing propositions—

Embracing among them this 5 per cent., and the other donations that have been so much spoken about—

That the five foregoing propositions, herein offered, are on the condition that the convention of the said State shall provide by an ordinance, irrevocable without the consent of the United States, that every and each tract of land sold by the United States, from and after the 1st day of December next, shall be and remain exempt from any tax laid by order or under any authority of the State, whether for State, county, or township, or any other purpose whatever, for the term of five years from and after the day of sale.

That is what the State of Indiana stipulated to do, and the other six States—for there were seven in all including the State of Louisiana, which was not mentioned by me yesterday, because there was no division of her 5 per cent.—admitted down to and including the State of Missouri, each and all made these stipulations, and I say that each and all observed them not merely with reference to cash sales but to all sales, sales made upon land warrants and military scrip as well as sales for cash; and it is on that point now that I want to ask the attention of the Senate for a short time, and then I shall have said all that I desire to say in regard to this bill. I say that the sales herein exempted from taxation are the sales upon which we have the right to have 5 per cent.; the one is as broad as the other. Upon all the lands that we agreed there should be no taxes levied for five years from the date of entry we were entitled under the contract to 5 per cent.

Mr. THURMAN. Will my friend allow me to ask him, for he understands this bill much better than I do, whether that is the limit, whether the bill includes no lands but what the Government sold, and that were exempt from taxation?

Mr. McDONALD. No, sir; it embraces all lands, just as the bill states, that have been taken up by military scrip or land warrants, treating the lands so taken as land sold.

Mr. THURMAN. Does it include the lands that were set apart for the Virginia soldiers on the Continental establishment—that is, those belonging to the regular army of the Revolution?

Mr. McDONALD. For those where the Government exchanged military scrip, it unquestionably does.

Mr. THURMAN. Only those located with scrip, then?

Mr. McDONALD. It does not include, as a matter of course, what Virginia carved out of her own State for the soldiers of the revolutionary war, but it does include that class of those claims that were afterward recognized by Congress and exchanged.

Mr. THURMAN. For which Congress gave scrip?

Mr. McDONALD. Yes, gave scrip or permitted locations.

Mr. THURMAN. I want to understand the bill. Now, another question. There is a United States military district in Ohio, which was composed of bounty land granted by the Continental Congress to the soldiers of the United States on the Continental establishment. Does this bill include that?

Mr. McDONALD. I think it does not.

Mr. THURMAN. Does it include the military reservations in Illinois and Arkansas and Missouri?

Mr. McDONALD. Those that were taken up with military scrip it does, if the scrip was given to a party and he located it anywhere within that district.

Mr. THURMAN. That includes all the military locations made in those districts.

Mr. McDONALD. I apprehend that it does.

Mr. THURMAN. It includes the whole of the military tract.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I do not know whether the bill does that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If you will read the bill, you will see very easily.

Mr. THURMAN. I want to understand the bill.

Mr. McDONALD. I will say to my friend from Ohio that the bill is not very lengthy and is not ambiguous, and was certainly not intended to be so.

Mr. THURMAN. I know it was not intended to be.

Mr. McDONALD. The theory of the bill is just the theory that I have been discussing, that what the Government has sold of these lands—the bill does not claim that she might not have donated them gratuitously, given them here and there where she pleased, but that what she sold, and therefore what she exempted from taxation in the Senator's State and in mine for the period of five years, she has agreed to give 5 per cent. of the proceeds of.

Mr. THURMAN. I am not controverting that; but——

Mr. McDONALD. If it does not include as much as the Senator from Ohio wants, he will have to amend it.

Mr. THURMAN. What I wanted to understand was whether it was intended to exclude these reservations that I have spoken of.

Mr. McDONALD. It was intended to exclude any lands disposed of otherwise than by sale—by what the committee understand to be a sale.

Mr. President, I do not think any one will controvert the proposition I have stated, that whatever was exempt from taxation for five years in the seven States I have named, whatever lands after being disposed of by the United States were exempt from taxation for five years were lands to which under the enabling acts this 5 per cent. attached. So far as my own State is concerned, we did not merely let it rest in this obligation that we had entered into with the United States, but we carried it out by placing upon our statute-books an exemption of taxation for all lands purchased within our State and patented by the United States for five years from the date of sale, and that included land-warrant entries as well as any others; and that statute remained until 1852, although in 1847 the limitation on the power of the States to tax these lands was removed by the act referred to by the distinguished Senator from Vermont yesterday. Our State exemption continued until the next period for the valuation and assessment of our real estate, which did not come until 1852. In 1852 a tax was assessed in the western counties of our State upon land entries, and in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Indiana a suit was instituted to enjoin the collection of those taxes in 1853 or 1854; and one claim, the claim of John Thompson, banker, of New York, who had located his land warrants in one county in our State, 17,260 acres of land, the tax upon which for the years 1852 and 1853 amounted to over $2,000, filed his bill in the circuit court of the United States against the officers of that county to perpetually enjoin the collection of that tax on the ground that five years had not elapsed from the date of entry, and that at the time the entry was made in 1851 our State had not repealed its law or provided under the act of Congress of 1847 for the taxation of these lands.

There can be no question in my mind, upon a fair examination of the several acts of the Congress under which military scrip and warrants were issued, that they constituted a payment to the soldier for military service; that they were included as such; not a mere gratuity given to the soldier in time of peace who was serving for his $14 or $16 a month, or whatever sum might be fixed by law, but as additional compensation for his privations and the dangers that he encountered in time of war. The act of 1811, providing for the enlistment of soldiers for the war of 1812, most expressly bears that interpretation and can bear no other. In the second volume of the Statutes at Large, at page 669, will be found this act:

That there be allowed and paid to each effective, able-bodied man recruited or re-enlisted for that service for the term of five years, unless sooner discharged, the sum of $16; but the payment of one-half of the said bounty shall be deferred until he shall be mustered and have joined the corps in which he is to serve; and whenever any non-commissioned officer or soldier shall be discharged from the service, who shall have obtained from the commanding officer of his company, battalion, or regiment a certificate that he had faithfully performed his duty while in service, he shall moreover be allowed and paid, in addition to the aforesaid bounty, three months' pay and one hundred and sixty acres of land.

Three months' additional pay and one hundred and sixty acres of land. The bill of complaint to which I referred just now does not state that Thompson entered the land with land warrants, but that he was the purchaser. I have a statement of the Commissioner of the Land Office that the entry was by land warrants, and by nothing else.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Judge McLean in deciding a case in 1855 said it stood on the statute of Indiana and that statute having been passed before the party bought the land and having been repealed before the five years which the statute of Indiana gave him, it was a violation of the contract to tax it before. Judge McLean's language further is:

Here is a contract as express as words can make it. For aught that appears, the exemption was the motive to the purchase. And no one can say that the policy of the State in this respect is an unwise one. It is an object with every new State to increase its population, and this is done by exempting lands purchased from taxation for a greater or less period of time.

That was in the case to which the Senator has just referred.

Mr. McDONALD. I have not said that case was decided wrongly; on the contrary, I insist that it was decided rightly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But you said it was decided on the ground of the act of Congress, as I understood.

Mr. McDONALD. No, sir; I said that we had our statute in force which we had not then repealed, a statute to carry into effect the compact which we had entered into with the United States at the time we were admitted into the Union. We did not stand upon the act of Congress. I do not know that Congress ever passed any act on the subject, except as it was placed in the compact between the State of Indiana at the time of the admission of the States. She then, one of the contracting parties in this case, treated this as a sale, and extended the exemption to it, an exemption quite onerous, too, for in this particular case this foreign landholder, this Mr. Thompson, banker, of New York, had located over seventeen thousand acres of land in a body in one of the new counties in our State, the tax upon which for two years, if it had been taxed like the lands of citizens alongside of it, would have amounted to over $2,000. Can it be said to be a benefit to that county that for its local expenses and to the State, so far as it had to look to that county for revenue, that they could only take that which could be levied upon lands that had been sold for five years? Thus it appears that the exemption from taxation for five years upon lands sold applied unquestionably to purchases made with land warrants. This man did not serve; he was no soldier; he purchased these land warrants in the market; they were assigned to him; they represented to him the right to purchase so much land, as if they had been land scrip, and he purchased with them, and that fact, I insist, is a strong circumstance in favor of the interpretation of the act in regard to the reservation which we claim, that it is upon such lands as these, as well as upon cash entries, that we have a right to the 5 per cent. reservation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I may ask the Senator a question, how can he maintain that proposition as it respects those States where the exemption from taxation of bounty lands was confined to three years, and where the benefit of the exemption was confined to the soldier and his heirs and did not allow the assignee as in the case of this Indiana man as it is said, though the papers do not show that he was assignee, and that was the case the court decided?

Mr. McDONALD. But the Senator certainly knows he did not earn seventeen thousand acres of land warrants.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not on that point. He might have bought the seventeen thousand acres of land at public sale, and he says he purchased it.

Mr. McDONALD. But I have the statement from the Commissioner of the General Land Office that these were land-warrant entries. If that is not sufficient, I will send for the certificates.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well. That is not the point at all. The point is what Judge McLean decided. The Senator says that the plaintiff in this bill alleged that he purchased this land from the United States and paid a dollar and a quarter an acre for it, and that the State of Indiana when he purchased it had engaged that if he would do so they would not tax it for five years. Judge McLean decides that case and says if that is so the State must stand by its bargain; it was a good bargain for it to make.

But that was not the question I rose to ask; it was on the other point. The Senator says the military bounty land warrants fell within the class of sales because they are capable of assignment, and the man who buys them uses them to purchase land the same as he would cash. Now, how does that comport with the cases of those States named in this bill—I do not say they are all of them, but such as there are, and there are some where the very act of admission itself says——

Mr. McDONALD. There are three.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If there be but one it will do. How does it comport with the cases of the States where the act of admission itself says there shall be a five years' exemption on lands sold, and 5 per cent. paid, and that there shall be a three years' exemption on bounty lands, but that that exemption shall only operate in favor of the soldier himself or his heirs, and where a purchaser like this man Thompson does not have any standing at all as to exemption from taxation.

Mr. McDONALD. I remember well the very ingenious argument made by the Senator on that very point yesterday, and I shall not neglect it before I get through, and I think I shall be able to answer that question better in the course of my argument rather than to stop now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was on the very point the Senator was addressing himself to.

Mr. McDONALD. But I had not reached the point of answering the argument of the Senator in that regard, and I shall not turn aside to answer it now.

The whole argument of the Senator from Vermont is that the word "sales" used in that clause of the several acts where the 5 per cent. is reserved should be interpreted as if it read "cash sales." Unless he can establish that, as a matter of course he fails. Now, as showing that such was not the view that Congress has taken in former times, I wish to refer again to the acts in relation to the States of Mississippi and Alabama and especially to the concluding part of the first section of the act relating to the settlement with the State of Mississippi.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Give me the reference to the volume, please.

Mr. McDONALD. The act was approved March 3, 1857. I have not the volume here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not know but that the Senator was reading it from the book.

Mr. McDONALD. No, sir; I am reading it from a brief.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The brief of the claimant.

Mr. McDONALD. I do not know that it is a brief of the claimant, but it is a brief which the Senator from Vermont can have if he desires it.

> And that he be required to include in said account the several reservations under the various treaties with the Chickasaw and the Choctaw Indians within the limits of Mississippi, and allow and pay to the said State 5 per cent. thereon, as in case of other sales, estimating the lands at the value of $1.25 per acre.

In this act Congress construed the grant that she herself had made within the limits of this State to the Indians in permanent reservations, granting them the fee of the land in consideration undoubtedly of what the Indian tribes stipulated on their part, being a grant made upon a consideration passing to the Government as a sale of the land thus disposed of to be treated as other sales, and required that she should account for the lands thus disposed of at the minimum price of $1.25 per acre; and then passing right on Congress further said:

> That the said Commissioner shall also state an account between the United States and each of the other States upon the same principles, and shall allow and pay to each State such amount as shall thus be found due, estimating all lands and permanent reservations at $1.25 per acre.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I do not interrupt the Senator?

Mr. McDONALD. Not at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He did not me on a similar occasion. I wish to ask if he does not know the fact that, when the State of Alabama, which began the operation and it was followed by the State of Mississippi, applied to have an allowance made on account of those Indian reservations, the officers of the Government, one after the other, to whom the question was submitted, continuously decided that the State had not a ghost of a claim under the provisions of the law; and then when Alabama came into Congress the gentleman from Alabama who in the last days of the session got it through explained it by saying that that was the state of the law, but that circumstances had changed and it would be a hardship to the State of Alabama to hold her up to that, and Congress ought to be generous and liberal about it and let her have something, and then Congress proceeded to do it.

Mr. McDONALD. I do not know what the accounting officers may have said or done in reference to the law as it then stood.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will bring in their opinion before we are through.

Mr. McDONALD. I think it very likely they may have done just what the Senator says they did. I know that since that time they have said this second section did not apply to any State, because no State was specifically named. I apprehend there was a difference of opinion between the accounting officers and Congress when these acts in relation to Alabama and Mississippi were passed, or the acts would not have been passed. They were passed on account of that difference of opinion. I apprehend there is a difference of opinion now between the supporters of this bill, between the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate, who have reported this bill, and the present accounting officers in regard to the construction of these laws; for if there was not such a difference of opinion this bill would not be here. It is here because of that difference of opinion; and when it has passed the Senate and passed the House, as I believe it will, perhaps fifteen or twenty years from now, we may find other Senators as distinguished as my friend who will stand up and quote that difference of opinion to show that the law does not mean what it says it does.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It may be so. I hope I shall be here at that time, together with my friend. [Laughter.]

Mr. McDONALD. Now, Mr. President, I come to the question submitted by the Senator in regard to those enabling acts which seem to make a distinction between lands sold for cash and lands disposed of for some classes of land warrants. I believe that distinction began with the admission of Arkansas and Michigan. These were the first States that were received into the Union where the general exemption of taxation upon lands sold for five years was omitted, and I desire that fact to be borne in mind. Up to that time, including all the States admitted down to 1820, there was in the various acts this general provision in regard to exempting lands entered or sold from taxation for five years. Now, I want to ask the opponents of this bill if the general exemption did not exempt lands entered by land warrants, or did the Government intend to exempt for five years the lands purchased by cash and leave the land-warrant entries subject to taxation at once? I should like the Senator from Vermont to answer that question whether the general exemption exempting these lands from taxation for five years did not embrace land-warrant entries, though they are not named?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator wish an answer now?

Mr. McDONALD. Yes, sir, I ask this question, whether the general exemption contained in the acts by which the first seven States were admitted into the Union in regard to taxation for five years did not exempt land-warrant entries, or were they subject to taxation at once upon entry?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is my opinion.

Mr. McDONALD. That they were?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is my opinion.

Mr. McDONALD. Then the Senator supposes that Congress took special care and providential oversight over the moneyed man who entered land, but as to the soldier who put down his warrant there it made his land subject to taxation from the hour he located it. I never heard such an opinion till to-day. Now, with that statement it is very clear, it seems to me, when it came to those States where this general exemption was omitted, why it was that Congress continued it as to a very limited class of lands that were yet lands sold, but that were to be designated as lands taken by land warrants for the purpose of designation. In the light of the fact that down to 1820 these States stipulated, and that stipulation covered all warrant entries as well, that lands sold—for that is the term used here—should be free from tax, the language being "that each and every tract of land sold by the United States from and after the 1st day of December next shall be and remain exempt from any tax laid by order or under any authority of the State * * * for the term of five years from and after the day of sale," when Congress, in its increased liberality toward the new States that were coming forward for admission, saw proper to exempt them from that great burden of having blocks of land, fifteen thousand acres in a block and more, taken up by persons for speculation and held without taxation for five years; when Congress saw proper to take off this general exemption, accompanied it with this proviso, (and upon the proviso, and that alone, the Senator from Vermont has built up the whole theory of his argument,) that lands entered by soldiers' warrants should be exempt from taxation for three years. And in order to sustain himself in his argument he stands here admitting that Congress did the great injustice of originally leaving the soldiers to be taxed from the hour of their entries, while it exempted for five years in seven great States of the West the lands purchased by speculators.

Mr. President, I have said about all that I expect to say on this subject, and more than I intended. I believe this to be an honest bill; I believe it correctly interprets the compacts entered into between the States in which large public domains were situated and the Federal Government at the time of their admission. If I did not believe that I should be opposed to it, and I shall not stop to go over the argument that was suggested—not made—in regard to how much might be involved in this bill, because the honorable Senator himself said that if it was right, there could be no question about the amount, and I agree with him exactly there; and I say further, if it is wrong, there can be no question about amount, let it be great or small. Why should this claim be sought to be affected by that liberal course which Congress has heretofore pursued toward the Western States in granting public lands, not to cancel these obligations, but to stimulate improvements, to build up and develop the country, ay, and benefit the whole country, even the Green Mountains upon which the Senator from Vermont was brought up and grew to his present stature and size, and the descendants of the Green Mountain boys who have participated in the benefits that have resulted from the rapid development of this country so that there can be no such thing in this broad land of ours as starvation, because the means for bringing bread to every door from one section to the other if there should be a local failure here and there, has already been provided. I say I shall not stop to talk about whether it is right or proper for us to execute the obligations of these contracts because of grants the benefits of which have been participated in not by one section alone, not by where the money has been laid down, but by the whole country. I might as well expect the Mississippi River to carp at the waters that fall in at its headwaters because they do not fall immediately in at its navigable part. The stream has been broad together, and the beneficence of these bounties and these grants has manifested itself in a thousand ways, and therefore I leave them to defend themselves. As to the bill itself, I have no question about its being right in principle, and it is very doubtful, if I was to make a calculation, whether my State would be a winner or a loser. I have not stopped to inquire, and I shall not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has not the Senator a statement in the letter partly read yesterday?

Mr. McDONALD. Undoubtedly, but I say I shall not stop to make a calculation to see whether if we pay out this money we shall not have to pay more, in making up our quota of the common fund, than we should get from it. How that is I do not know, nor shall I stop to inquire.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss this bill, because I am not prepared to discuss it. I have not studied it enough to know how to vote upon it, and I hope it will not be pressed to a vote to-day. But there are one or two things that I want to say now.

In the first place I was a little surprised at the answer given by the chairman of the committee who reported this bill to my inquiry whether or not this bill would entitle Ohio to 5 per cent. upon the number of acres in what is called the Virginia military district and in the United States military district in that State. He answered me no. He said that it would include the cases where the United States had given scrip for Virginia military land warrants. That would be of no advantage to Ohio. I dare say that the Senator from Indiana will find out that upon every acre of land that has been entered with that scrip the States have already received their 5 per cent. I think he will find that scrip when received into the Land Office as payment has not been separated from money in accounting with the States for the 5 per cent. I think the evidence when produced will show that that is the fact; but at all events, whether that be so or not, what the Senator says that the 5 per cent. is to be counted upon entries made with scrip can be of no possible benefit to the State of Ohio, or very little, for very little if any of that scrip was located within that State.

Therefore the answer of the chairman of the committee is that that district known in Ohio as the Virginia military district, which embraces twenty-two counties—in whole or in part—not the whole of twenty-two, but perhaps ten or twelve entire counties, and ten in part and the greater part of them, too—is excluded from the operation of this bill. Ohio gets no benefit for that. So, too, in regard to that other district known as the United States military district, the State gets nothing for that. So in regard to that large territory the title to which was vested in the State of Connecticut, which was given by the Congress of the Revolution to the State of Connecticut for the relinquishment of her claim to a portion of the State of Pennsylvania, embracing the Wyoming Valley; all that is left out so far as Ohio is concerned, although it was a payment to Connecticut by the Continental Congress for relinquishing her claim to a portion of the State of Pennsylvania and in no sense a payment by the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. McDONALD. The bill can be amended.

Mr. THURMAN. That is true; but when we come to the spirit of the thing, whether a proposition can be made to embrace it will be another thing. I am not opposing the bill now, but I want to call the attention of the Senate to how different is the report of the committee from the interpretation given by the chairman of its bill. What were these two military reservations in the State of Ohio? The first of which I have spoken of was the Virginia military reservation. That was a reservation of land between the Scioto and Little Miami Rivers to pay soldiers of the State of Virginia who served in the regular Army of the Revolution, or as it is called in all the acts, who served upon the Continental establishment. Virginia had two sets of troops in the Revolution. She had those that belonged to what we would now call the regular Army, but what they called the army on Continental establishment, and she had another set that were militia. She offered bounties to each of these classes of troops, and she reserved a certain portion of lands for the satisfaction of bounties to each; but none of her bounties to her militia were paid out of lands in the State of Ohio. They were paid out of lands in what is now the State of West Virginia, and what is now the State of Kentucky; but in the State of Ohio she reserved in her deed of cession, not the land itself, not the title to the land, but the right to have her bounties promised to her soldiers on the Continental establishment, that was, in the regular Army, paid out of the lands. They were promised to them by various acts during the revolutionary war and were earned by them; and Virginia issued warrants to her officers and soldiers according to their deserts and to their title under these acts of Virginia.

Then the United States military tract is a different thing. After the cession of this territory by Virginia to the Continental Congress, that Congress made a provision that certain soldiers who had served in the war of the Revolution and who were not provided for by Virginia, but were soldiers of States that had no lands to give them, should also receive land bounties; and a portion of what is now the State of Ohio was laid off to satisfy those bounties; that is, bounties to soldiers who had served in the revolutionary war on the Continental establishment, to wit, in the regular Army, but who came from States that had no land to give them.

Mr. McDONALD. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio when that was done, before or after the admission of Ohio?

Mr. THURMAN. I would not like to answer positively, but my impression is that the United States military district, as it is called, was laid off before the admission of Ohio into the Union. That is my impression, but I will verify it before the vote is taken on this bill.

Here are these two cases, then, in which these two tracts of land were rewards to the soldiers who fought our revolutionary battles, the soldiers who were in the regular Army under the Continental Congress, and were set apart to them. If you speak of payment for military services, these were as clear cases of payment as you can imagine. But, says the Senator from Indiana, they are not provided for by this bill; Ohio shall have no benefit from taking out these large tracts of land and giving them to the men who fought the battles of the Revolution.

Mr. McDONALD. If the Senator from Ohio will permit me, I will state that they are not provided for in the act for her admission into the Union. That act says nothing about them.

Mr. THURMAN. That may be so or may not be so. I am not going to argue that question now. The feature to which I want to call the attention of the Senate is this: The report of the committee in this case is one thing, and the interpretation of the bill by the chairman of the committee is a wholly different thing, for the report goes upon the ground that the State of Ohio shall have the benefit at least of the Virginia military land district.

Mr. McDONALD. I will state to the Senator, as I said in answer to his question a short time ago, that there is a military land scrip which originated in an adjustment between the United States and the holders of Virginia certificates, that has not been disposed of. They were authorized to surrender them and get what was called land scrip, and some portion of that was located in the State of Ohio and perhaps some parts of it in the State of Indiana, and this all transpired after the admission of the State of Ohio into the Union.

Mr. THURMAN. I have already said that I think it will be found that all that scrip that was used was counted as money in settling with the States; but whether it be so or not, that is of very slight benefit to the State of Ohio, for by far the greater portion of the scrip was located in the Northwest; three-fourths of it, I venture to say, was located in the State of Iowa, and hence we find that Iowa is to get the benefit of nearly one-fourth, more than one-fifth, of the public debt to be created by this act if it be passed. It is a very fine State and needs the money, being very poor, I know, and it may be all right to give it to her, and I am not saying anything against it; but I do not see that you can take that scrip which was issued for Virginia land warrants that were locatable in the State of Ohio and add it to the amount of the public debt that is to go to the State of Iowa and then charge it to Ohio. That will not do.

Virginia issued these land warrants. They were located through a land office created by the State of Virginia, the head of which was called the principal surveyor of the Virginia military district. Entries were made; surveys were made by him or his deputies, and those surveys were returned, with the land warrants upon which the surveys were made, to the General Land Office, and patents issued by the Government of the United States. There were a number of such entries made in Kentucky, but the lands reserved in Kentucky were not sufficient for the purpose, and that accounts for the reservation made when Virginia made her cession to the United States. Not one of the land warrants proper was ever located, except in Ohio and Kentucky.

After a while those land warrants took up all the good land in this reservation in Ohio. All the good land that had been in Kentucky and was subject to these warrants had been taken up long before, taken up in fact before the cession of Virginia of the Northwestern Territory. A great deal of the land that was supposed to be in Kentucky available for the purposes of these bounty land warrants, it was found was taken away by what was called Henderson's grant, so that there was not a sufficiency of land south of the Ohio River to satisfy these bounties, and that gave rise to this reservation in the State of Ohio called the Virginia military district. In the course of time all the good land in that district was taken up, but there were still a great many outstanding warrants. In fact, Virginia kept issuing them, and I do not know but that she may be issuing them to this day.

They came to Congress and said to Congress, "Here according to the true spirit of the deed by Virginia to the Continental Congress her soldiers were to have their bounties satisfied; the land set apart for them proves to be insufficient; all the good land is taken up, and yet here are warrants for hundreds of thousands of acres which we can find no good land to locate upon;" and therefore they said, "Give us scrip for them, and let us locate the scrip upon any of the public lands anywhere subject to entry." Various acts were passed one after another; the first one, I think, about 1830; and so they went on until at last Congress found that as long as Virginia issued scrip land warrants could be ground out, and finally Congress put an end to it and said, "We will not issue any more warrants," and that stopped the whole business; but at that time nearly all the public lands in the State of Ohio had already been entered, and this scrip went West, most of it, and an immense amount of it went to Iowa. But that is not material; that does not touch the question here.

This report goes on the theory that for the land warrants—not the scrip, but the land warrants, that were located in the Virginia military district, the State of Ohio is to have 5 per cent., counting the land thus located at a dollar and a quarter an acre. I need not read the report in full, but anybody who will read it will see that that is the case.

Mr. McDONALD. The Senator will allow me. A land warrant issued for military service was the payment of a debt from the Government to the soldier; and where entries of land were made with such land warrants the lands were purchased, and the Government sold the lands. That is all that the report says. It does not undertake to distinguish between one class of scrip and another. It simply goes on the theory, and the bill goes on the theory, that 5 per cent. shall be allowed to the States on all sales, counting an entry by a land warrant as a sale.

Mr. THURMAN. All I have to say is that the committee include the land warrants located in the Virginia military district of Ohio by the plain words which are used. The committee, on page 2, go on to give an account of the various warrants, and they say:

The Commonwealth of Virginia about the same time (October, 1776) for the purpose of raising her quota of men and meeting the exigencies of the coming war, also offered lands to her soldiers as part compensation for their military services.

Mr. McDONALD. If the Senator will study the report in the light of the bill he will see that that is simply referred to for the purpose of furnishing a history of the issuance of land warrants, to show how the warrants came to be put out and for what reason, whether put out by a State or by the General Government. The whole theory of the bill—and the purpose of the report is to illustrate that theory—is that whatever was sold after the admission of these States of the public lands within their limits was subject to the 5 per cent. reservation. That is all there is of it.

Mr. THURMAN. I cannot so understand it. If the Senator had not interrupted me, I was about to show, as I think I can any one who listens, that his interpretation of his own report will not do. He says the report is to be studied in connection with the bill. I thought the bill was to be studied in connection with the report, and that the report was a commentary upon the bill, an exposition an explanation of the bill. Now let me go back. The committee commence—

The only ground known to your committee upon which this payment—

That is the payment of the 5 per cent.—

has been refused is that such disposition of the public domain was not "sales of the public lands" within the meaning of the enabling acts. The right of these States to the 5 per cent. upon military locations depends, in the opinion of your committee, largely upon the fact whether, as between the Government and the soldier, the lands disposed of formed a part of the consideration of his hire. Upon this point your committee have had little difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that such disposition did, in fact, enter into and become a part of the consideration for the enlistment and services of the soldiers to whom land warrants were issued.

Then the committee proceed to give the instances:

The acts of Congress for the benefit of the recruiting service of the United States at the opening of the revolutionary war are dated in August and September, 1776.

Those are the very acts under which the soldiers got the lands in the United States military district in Ohio. Then—

The Commonwealth of Virginia about the same time, (October, 1776,) for the purpose of raising her quota of men and meeting the exigencies of the coming war, also offered lands to her soldiers as part compensation for their military services. These lands thus offered by the Legislature of Virginia were afterward patented by Congress to her soldiers agreeably to the terms of cession made by Virginia to the Federal Government of the Northwestern Territory March 1, 1784.

Now, every acre of that land here alluded to is in the Virginia military district in the State of Ohio. Then comes a recital of the military grants for the war of 1812; then the grants for the soldiers of the Mexican war. Then the committee go on to say:

It is clear from the language of these grants—

That is, all the grants which have been mentioned before, those made by the Continental Congress, those made by the State of Virginia, those made by the Congress of the United States for the war of 1812 and afterward for the Mexican war—

It is clear from the language of these grants that they were designed to effect a future object, and in no sense did they relate to a past subject. The time when and the circumstances under which they were passed indicate but too manifestly the aim in view, namely: to facilitate and encourage enlistments, that the requisite numerical force of the Army might be enlarged as rapidly as possible in order to meet the pressing necessities of each of the impending wars.

At the time the resolution of September 16, 1776, was adopted, Congress owned no land, but expected by conquest to become entitled to all the land which England had acquired by discovery. Anticipating, therefore, the acquisition of large landed possessions, and expecting to have more land than money, Congress, in order to fill up the rank and file of the Army, and to raise and complete a regularly-organized military establishment, offered in advance, besides specified monthly wages in money, an additional consideration in land, not for past but for services thereafter to be rendered. The colonial government of Virginia did the same thing, and her engagement to pay in land was afterward assumed and fulfilled by Congress by setting apart for that purpose a section of country lying between the Little Miami and Scioto Rivers, in Ohio.

The military grants for the war of 1812 and the Mexican war are of the same character, enacted at or near the commencement of each, wholly prospective in their operation, and are their own best expositors; their meaning and purpose cannot be misinterpreted. In effect they said to the party whose military prowess the Government so much needed at the time, "Enlist and serve your country a given period, and you shall have as a reward therefor a quarter section of land in addition to your monthly pay." The land thus offered in advance of, and as an inducement to, the engagement formed as much a part of the contract of enlistment as did the money compensation. One cannot with any show of reason be designated a gratuity any more than the other. Both alike constituted the consideration for which the services were to be rendered. It follows, therefore—

I beg attention to this—

It follows, therefore, that these grants of land for military service in the three great wars of this country—

The revolutionary war, the war of 1812, and the Mexican war—are essentially in the nature of contracts, and as such become the foundation of the claim which the Western and Southern States now make for the 5 per cent. thereon.

Can any language be clearer than that? According to this report of this committee, Ohio is entitled as much to have 5 per cent. of the land of the Virginia military district and the United States military district as any State in this Union is upon any lands sold for money. That is what the report is. I do not say what is right, but that is what the report is.

Mr. McDONALD. All after the State of Ohio was admitted into the Union, you are right about.

Mr. THURMAN. That would give us a good big slice, but not as much as we should get if you went back.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Were not those districts set apart in Ohio before Ohio was admitted?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly, reserved in the cession by Virginia, not the title to the land, but the right to satisfy her bounty land warrants out of the land. The title passed to the United States and the land was granted by the United States in patents. The land was located in townships of four thousand acres generally, and located with warrants issued by the Continental Congress.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Located after the admission of the State?

Mr. THURMAN. I cannot tell when the locations were made, but pretty early, and they embraced some of the finest counties in the State.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from Ohio will allow me to say that I read the report very carefully, and I think he misapprehends this language of the report. My understanding of the report is that the reference to Virginia and other States giving scrip or land warrants to soldiers is for the purpose of showing that there ran through all of them the idea that it was not a gift, but that it was a contract between the soldiers and the Government.

Mr. THURMAN. That is perfectly demonstrated; there is no doubt of that.

Mr. LOGAN. And that the statutes under which the land warrants were issued and were located in these States which were entitled to the 5 per cent. were merely following out the theory of the Government in employing troops in its defense, that a contract existed between them, that they were to have the bounty land as part of the compensation for their services. The committee merely give a history of the acts, commencing with the act of Virginia and the old acts of the Continental Congress, showing that that policy was carried through all the years, showing that the idea of consideration followed all the way through. That is my understanding of the report. Then after the States were admitted into the Union under the contract between them and the Government in the acts of admission, from that time forward the 5 per cent. attached under the claims that the States have made and applied to this land located with land warrants, no matter when issued. The attaching of the 5 per cent.

applies to the time of location, not to the time of the issue of the warrant or the scrip, but to the time of the location of the warrant or scrip.

Mr. McDONALD. On the ground that the land was sold for the warrant.

Mr. LOGAN. That is the meaning of the report. I understand that the time is not the time of issue, but the time of the location of the scrip or warrant after the States were admitted into the Union. That is the way I read the report.

Mr. McDONALD. So far as the State of Ohio is concerned, which is the only one this bill does not fully cover, this bill will apply to every acre of land which was taken up in the State of Ohio after the admission of the State into the Union under the enabling act with any sort of military scrip for which the Government received a consideration, and thus sold the land. If, however, it is not fully covered, let the Senator draw an amendment that does embrace it, and I will agree to it. I do not want to go beyond that. Whatever she is entitled to under the terms of her admission I will agree to at once as an amendment to the bill, because that is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. THURMAN. If I have accomplished that much for Ohio and I conclude to go in for the grab, I think I shall avail myself of the Senator's offer.

Mr. McDONALD. It is not a grab.

Mr. THURMAN. Well, I will take that word back.

Mr. McDONALD. I am proposing simply to do by the Senator's State just what I regard as even-handed justice under her contract of admission with reference to the 5 per cent. reservation on the sales of public lands. Whatever can be fairly proved to be a sale of lands within her limits embraced in her enabling act, and for which she has not received her 5 per cent., I am ready to have such an amendment put in as the Senator from Ohio will draw to secure it.

Mr. THURMAN. I am very much obliged to my friend for that, and I shall certainly, if I make up my mind to vote for the bill—and I do not know but that I shall come to that conclusion in the end; I cannot tell until I have looked further into it—propose such an amendment.

But, Mr. President, I want to say one thing more in respect to this report. There cannot be any mistake about this language, but I am willing to have the interpretation that is placed upon it, that land warrants located after the admission of Ohio into the Union, whether they were Virginia military land warrants or United States military land warrants, are to be counted in computing the 5 per cent. It would involve a considerable amount of work to find out how much that would be, but it would enhance Ohio's slice in this business very largely. It is very insignificant as the bill now stands. If these military districts are to be excluded the bill will give to Ohio the magnificent sum of $113,000, and she will have to pay of the debt thus created nearly $300,000. That would be a pretty bad financial operation on the part of the State of Ohio.

Mr. McDONALD. She may relinquish her interest.

Mr. THURMAN. She cannot relinquish her obligation to pay part of the public debt.

Mr. President, I did not intend to speak this long on the bill. I was only trying to find out what the bill meant, and I am not attacking the bill at all. I have heard it said—not in the Senate, but I think I saw it in a newspaper—that this was a bill to give gratuities to the rebel States, to create a public debt for the benefit of the rebel States. I want to say that if anybody has that idea he is under an immense mistake. For $1 that this bill will give to the States lately in rebellion it gives $14 to the States that were not in rebellion. It gives more to the State of Iowa twice over than to all the States that were in rebellion. That has nothing to do with this thing; but as that makeweight has been thrown in against the bill, and it has been represented as a grab by the confederate brigadiers, I want to say that of all the people of this country there are none whose interests would be subserved by this bill less than most of the States that were in the rebellion. There is not a single one of the Atlantic or Gulf States that would not be injured (in a pecuniary point of view I am speaking now) by the passage of this bill. So I wish it to be distinctly understood in the outset that if my friend from Indiana carries this bill—and whatever he carries the democracy has to bear the weight of in this country—it is not a confederate brigadier measure at all; it is an Iowa measure, it is a Minnesota measure, it is a Wisconsin measure, it is an Illinois measure, for those States get nearly the whole of it.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me right there, I desire to say that the bill has been before Congress and has been argued before committees prior to the time when this Senate became democratic, and it is a bill not pertaining to any section.

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly not.

Mr. LOGAN. But it is a bill to give equality to all the States that came in under the same agreement with the Government of the United States in reference to the public domain; that is all the bill is; and the man who does or would attempt on either side to make it a political measure would do very great injustice to himself as an honorable man.

Mr. THURMAN. I think so, too. I am glad the Senator has made that speech, and this year if I get on the stump, and somebody says, "you created so much public debt and gave it to the State of Arkansas," I will read my friend's speech at him and shut him up.

Mr. LOGAN. You are perfectly welcome; but you will not shut me up. [Laughter.]

Mr. THURMAN. No, I did not say shut you up; I could not do that, [laughter;] but shut the man up. I say the Senator is perfectly right.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to say that I have always advocated this bill because I thought it was a just measure. That is what I intended to state.

Mr. THURMAN. I have no doubt about that; the Senator would not advocate it if he did not think it was a just measure. I do not know but that I shall vote for it when I get to understand it a little better; but I must first understand what the bill is, and if I have to offer amendments to it they will be to make it perfectly clear.

In the next place I say in all good faith and seriousness that if I become satisfied on reading these statutes (which I have not had time to do) and getting possession of the facts that the bill ought to pass, I shall certainly vote for it. If I think it ought not to pass, I shall certainly vote against it, whatever may be the effect on my own State.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to say that in the absence of the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. KELLOGG,] who is not with us, I agreed with him to-day to pair my vote on all questions connected with this bill. If he were here, in all its phases he would vote for it and I against it.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio if he has examined this report and the statutes referred to sufficiently to make up an opinion in reference to the character of these bounty lands, so called, whether they were considerations given to soldiers for services as compensation or were regarded in law as mere gratuities?

Mr. THURMAN. They never were gratuities. On the contrary, the Continental Congress, before it owned one foot of land, promised these bounty lands, which were afterward located in what we called the United States military district in Ohio, and the State of Virginia, as early as 1776, to those who would enlist in what was called the Continental establishment—that is, the regular army of the Continental Congress—promised certain bounty lands in the State of Kentucky laid off between Green River and the Cumberland, I believe. They promised so much to a private, so much to a lieutenant, so much to a captain, so much to a major, so much to a lieutenant-colonel, so much to a colonel, so much to a general, and so on. These were promises made before the enlistment; they formed part of the consideration. The committee is entirely right about that. They were all just as much a part of the contract as the promise to pay so much money, and they were nearly all the value that many of those soldiers ever got, for the Continental money went away to nothing, so much so that a man whose name I will not mention, because it might seem like egotism, though of course I was not the man, told me that when he got his pay for services in the Virginia line on the Continental establishment at the end of the war in Continental money he took a whole year's pay that he received and bought with it one single bushel of salt, and had hard work to get that, and carried it on his shoulders sixty miles to his family.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to ask him, if by the act of the Continental Congress those lands were promised to the soldiers, whether, when the law was passed providing for the 5 per cent. on the sales of public lands within the limits of the States formed out of the public domain, those States did not take that promised 5 per cent. subject to the previous promise made to the soldiers of the lands for their services, and whether, therefore, there is any equity now arising in favor of those States, the lands having been located under the previous grant of the Continental Congress and of Virginia within the limits of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois?

Mr. THURMAN. Illinois stands on a wholly different footing, for she was admitted before the promise was made. The promises there relate to the war of 1812, and so she might claim the 5 per cent. on that. So far as these lands in Ohio are concerned, I am not prepared to answer the question of the Senator from Delaware. I will say, however, to be perfectly frank, that until I read the learned and able report made by this committee I had always thought that we had no right to 5 per cent. of this money, but they have poured out the argument so strongly that I do not know how it is; I shall have to study the subject; it is not clear to my mind at all. I confess that before I read the report I supposed that we had no right to 5 per cent. of the Virginia military land or the United States military land, for the Government never sold a dollar of it for cash; that is very certain. Still I do not know but that is too narrow a view of it, and I do not know but that the committee is right. I am going to study it before I vote on this bill.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I think the Senate is tired of the discussion to-day. I move that the Senate go into executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. WHYTE. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. GARLAND. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 30, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—30.

Allison,	Butler,	Hill of Georgia,	Vance,
Anthony,	Call,	Ingalls,	Voorhees,
Bailey,	Cameron of Pa.,	Jones of Florida,	Whyte,
Beck,	Cameron of Wis.,	Kirkwood,	Williams,
Blaine,	Conkling,	McMillan,	Windom,
Blair,	Davis of W. Va.,	Pendleton,	Withers.
Bruce,	Edmunds,	Platt,
Burnside,	Gordon,	Pryor,

NAYS—24.

Booth,	Hamlin,	Lamar,	Thurman,
Carpenter,	Hampton,	McDonald,	Vest.
Cockrell,	Hill of Colorado,	McPherson,
Davis of Illinois,	Johnston,	Paddock,

So the motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ROLLINS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1292) to provide for the removal of the terms of the United States circuit and district courts now held at Exeter, for and within the district of New Hampshire, to the city of Concord; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RANSOM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1293) to provide for the erection of a public building at Asheville, North Carolina; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BLAINE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1294) to enable the President to promote J. S. Payne, a captain in the United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. VOORHEES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1295) granting a pension to Lewis J. Blair; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. WALLACE, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Hannah S. Mackey, guardian of Margaret J. Yourison, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

HALIFAX FISHERIES COMMISSION.

Mr. BLAINE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be respectfully requested, if in his judgment not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the Senate any information in possession of the Government touching the alleged false statistics and fabricated testimony imposed upon the Halifax commission and used as the basis of their award in the matter of the fisheries.

Mr. WHYTE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at three o'clock and forty-eight minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 12, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

METRIC COINAGE.

Mr. STEPHENS. I ask leave at this time to present a report from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The SPEAKER. The committee is authorized to report at any time under the present rule.

Mr. STEPHENS. I have been instructed by the committee to report back certain bills to go upon the Calendar, not to be considered at this time. There is a report in writing accompanying those bills; and I have been instructed by the committee to ask that 10,000 extra copies of that report be printed for the use of the House. That proposition of course will go to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please send up the report with the accompanying bills.

Mr. STEPHENS. I am instructed by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures to report back House bill No. 410, to authorize a new metric gold coin for international use, to be known as the "stella;" House bill No. 411, to authorize the coinage of the goloid metric dollar, two dollars, and fractions of a dollar, and also the coinage of the metric gold double eagle, eagle, and half eagle, all of standard value; House bill No. 412, to authorize the mintage of ingots of metric gold alloy and of metric goloid alloy, its deposit in the Treasury, and issue of certificates therefor; House bill No. 1519, to authorize the making of ingots of fine gold and ingots of fine silver of the value of $100 each for exportation, manufactures, and other purposes; and House bill No. 1911, to authorize the coinage of silver dollars and fractions thereof of full standard value upon the metric system. I am instructed to move that these several bills be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that the report accompanying the same be printed, and that 10,000 extra copies of the report be printed for the use of the House.

The SPEAKER. The proposition for printing extra copies of the report will under the law be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. STEPHENS. I desire to state to the House that this is a very full report upon the metric system.

Mr. ATKINS. Why is there any necessity for the printing of any extraordinary number of this report, more than usual?

The SPEAKER. The proposition to print will not now be acted upon, but under the rule will go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. STEPHENS. There is an extraordinary demand for the report.

The bills were accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES STANDARD WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Mr. STEPHENS. I am also instructed by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures to report back with a favorable recommendation a joint resolution which is very short and I think will meet with no objection.

Mr. CLYMER. I will reserve all points of order until the joint resolution is read.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 186) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish States, for the use of agricultural colleges, one set of standard weights and measures was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a complete set of all the weights and measures adopted as standards to be delivered to the Governor of each State in the Union for the use of any agricultural college in the States respectively which is maintained in part by State appropriations.

Mr. STEPHENS. I suppose there can be no objection to that joint resolution. From information which I have obtained since the committee authorized me to report this joint resolution, I desire to move to amend it by adding "and also one set of the same for the use of the Smithsonian Institution."

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope my colleague [Mr. STEPHENS] will allow us to have the regular order.

Mr. STEPHENS. What objection have you to this joint resolution?

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection to the joint resolution, but I desire that we shall have the regular order until we can get through with the rules.

Mr. PRICE. It will not take more than a moment to pass this.

Mr. BLOUNT. I know that; but there will be a dozen or more applications of the same kind. I hope my colleague will withdraw the measure.

Mr. STEPHENS. If there be no objection I trust the resolution will be passed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Why not let the bill go to the Committee of the Whole on the public Calendar? I reserve a point of order on the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS. I should not suppose there would be an objection.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Why not let the resolution go to the public Calendar?

Mr. STEPHENS. Because I want it passed now.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, from which the gentleman from Georgia reports this measure, has the right to report at any time. The gentleman from Illinois now raises the point that this joint resolution will require an appropriation.

Mr. STEPHENS. If the gentleman insists on his point of order, let the resolution go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If I am the only one objecting, I withdraw my objection.

The amendment of Mr. STEPHENS was agreed to.

The joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEPHENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The title of this resolution should be amended by adding "and for other purposes." If there be no objection, that amendment will be made.

There was no objection.

UNITED STATES MONEY.

Mr. STEPHENS, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported back the memorial of William Wheeler Hubbell upon the subject of the coinage of silver, the issue of legal-tender notes, bimetallic coinage, and an increase of the volume of United States money; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

WYANDOTTE INDIANS.

Mr. BAKER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4431) making appropriations to indemnify the Wyandotte tribe of Indians; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

IMMIGRATION OF CHINESE.

Mr. WILLIS, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported back, without amendment, a resolution; which was read, as follows:

Whereas, on the 25th day of February, 1878, a resolution was unanimously reported to the House of Representatives requesting the President of the United States to open correspondence immediately with the governments of China and Great Britain, with a view of securing a change or abrogation of all stipulations in existing treaties which permit the unlimited immigration of the Chinese to the United States: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to inform this House what steps have been taken in the direction indicated by said resolution, and also to communicate any other information upon this subject as he may deem proper.

Mr. WILLIS. This resolution is reported from the committee unanimously.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, at the request of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. LADD,] asks consent that Hon. Edmund Wilson, of the Maine Legislature, be allowed the privilege of the floor during his stay in the city.

Mr. PAGE. Which legislature? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not informed on that subject.

There being no objection, the request was granted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, on behalf of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. TALBOTT,] asks the same privilege for Colonel D. K. McIntire, State's attorney of Maryland.

There being no objection, the request was granted.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES FROM STATE COURTS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the morning hour begins at twenty-seven minutes after twelve o'clock. The unfinished business is the bill (H. R. No. 4219) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of circuit courts of the United States and regulating the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, is it proper at this time to raise the question of consideration on this bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has been recognized and is on the floor. If he yields for the purpose, the question might be raised.

Mr. PAGE. My object was to have the House take up at once the consideration of the rules.

The SPEAKER. That business is out of the morning hour.

Mr. PAGE. Cannot that question be raised?

The SPEAKER. The rules are in Committee of the Whole. The morning hour is now begun; and as the business of the morning hour has been entered upon, and a gentleman is on the floor upon the pending bill, it is too late to raise the question unless the gentleman yields.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not yield, because I am not so authorized by the committee that I represent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I hesitate somewhat to ask the attention of the House to-day to remarks upon this bill because it has been discussed by so many gentlemen that possibly the whole ground has been covered and all the objections to it have been stated or suggested by the gentlemen who have already addressed the House. I know that it is very difficult to secure the attention of this House when a debate has run for some days in the morning hour; but, Mr. Speaker, it becomes my duty to say some things different from the views uttered by gentlemen who have preceded me; and I could not, in justice to myself, be silent under such circumstances.

I agree, I say, at the outset, with many of the features of the proposed bill. I think it wise to turn back somewhat toward the legislation of 1789, founded on the constitutional provisions. I agree with many gentlemen there are provisions in the act of 1875 which are not called for at the present time; and I trust the future is far distant when the condition of the country will require their enforcement.

I shall not touch much at length on points which have been elaborated, and points in which I agree. I say at once that the right of removal of causes ought to be restricted as it is in this bill, mainly, to the defendant. I say that the plaintiff should not have, under ordinary circumstances, a right to elect his forum in a State, and afterward, when he finds defeat is hanging over him, at the last moment, to change his forum and take the United States court instead. It is wise to strike out that privilege for the plaintiff.

Again, I do not quite agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BARBER] who spoke yesterday in objection to the clause relating to promissory notes. If we enact the bill as it stands now, with that provision in it, we shall have returned to the law as it was before 1875, as it has been from 1789 down to 1875, and I agree that ought to be done. If we in ninety years of experience, under that legislation, found no practical difficulty, certainly I cannot see that in the experience of the last five years we have had justification for that departure from the old way.

I may as well say here that as this bill does not touch in general terms the powers given to the circuit courts in regard to patents, copyrights, civil rights, elective franchise, or criminal prosecutions, I dismiss those features without comment, having no desire to take up the time of the House unnecessarily. But there are two other features in the bill to which I cannot give my approval, for which I cannot vote. I shall speak of them in order. In the first place the clause raising the limit of jurisdiction from $500 to $2,000. That has not been commented on at length. The proposition is to change the law as it has been from 1789 to the present time. To this very day and hour the limit is $500. Up to this time, through all the excitements consequent upon the war, upon the conflict of interests involved in the varied industries and business of this country, we have gone on under that rule, and we have come out of the darkness into the light of prosperity and success, and are on the onward march. There is no demand, then, that we should go up from $500 to $2,000.

Gentlemen will understand that it will not affect the number of causes which will come into the Supreme Court of the United States, because that right is limited by another statute, which fixes the amount at $5,000. So with regard to the flow of business from the circuit court into the Supreme Court, it is utterly immaterial whether the amount fixed in the circuit court shall be $500 or $2,000, because neither one of itself gives the right of transfer to the Supreme Court. There can be no discussion about that.

And, on this question, what is the demand we should raise the limit from $500 to $2,000? What reason has been given for it in this debate? Said the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] who opened this debate, in speaking of the clause in regard to promissory notes:

The enlargement of the jurisdiction of those courts by the exception contained in the act of 1875 has operated to increase largely the business of the circuit and Supreme Courts of the United States, and no subject of litigation has contributed more to swell and overload the dockets of the courts than the jurisdiction over negotiable instruments held by assignees. This supply of business should be cut off and the holders of such evidences of debt remitted to the courts of the States, which now have concurrent jurisdiction.

And now mark these words, Mr. Speaker:

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that if Congress had been devising a method by which to block up business in the circuit courts, to increase the burdens and expenses of litigation and at the same time prepare an easy mode by which the gravest frauds could be practiced upon the jurisdiction of the courts, it could have adopted a more successful one.

And I agree with him. And what is the logical conclusion of that? It is this plainly, that when you have taken away the right to go into the circuit court of the United States as the assignee of a chose in action, except foreign bills of exchange, you have then swept down that great mass of causes which have been accumulating in the circuit court. You have removed the great bulk, you have gone back to the condition of things in 1875. Gentlemen should not lose sight of this condition of things.

These causes have been very numerous, they have been burdensome to the country, and made so by the litigation in the United States courts, and I only dwell longer to say I heartily agree in the provision to strike that out of the law of 1875. And I say that when we have struck that out we have the relief that it is said we ought to have by striking it out. Strike it out, says the gentleman, because that provision has burdened the courts. I say strike it out and the burden drops from the courts.

Right here I will refer to the criticism made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] a few days ago. I do not see him now in his seat. I do not wish to misrepresent him.

A MEMBER. He is present.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to say something in regard to his proposed amendment that the limit should be in some way more sharply defined. I have no objection that the language should be made so clear that no one can err. But while he states that he has known cases in which actions have been brought in the circuit court of the United States upon notes of the value of $20 I must take issue with him. I cannot of course contradict his statement or question what he states to this House, but under the provisions of the law I fail to see how it can be accomplished.

Mr. BAKER rose.

Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman will later have time to explain it.

Mr. BAKER rose.

Mr. ROBINSON. Not in my time. I will not be unfair with you.

Mr. BAKER. I trust I shall have some time to make some observations on that subject.

Mr. ROBINSON. If there is any abuse of this provision, if it be found that a party has removed a cause to the circuit court when he has no right to have it there, the gentleman and all other gentlemen know that the statute provides that the circuit court shall remand that cause.

Mr. BAKER. I said nothing about removal. I was talking about the institution of the suit originally in the Federal courts under the claim of $500 damages where the real cause of action as it finally turned out amounted to only twenty or twenty-five dollars.

Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman will find provisions to meet those difficulties in the statutes—provisions giving the court power to impose costs; yes, double costs, and even terms in addition to that upon a party who brings his case wrongfully in the circuit court of the United States.

Now, we have considered this one point thus far, how the business of the court will be diminished by the removal of this one provision from the act. Is there a demand we shall go further? Is there a demand that we shall have no United States courts that shall adjudicate upon the rights of parties, citizens of different States? I think not. Events are so fresh and so powerful in their instruction that it will not be found in this House that it has a standing here, that we are to dismiss the national power—dismiss the national courts and ignore their usefulness. We want to maintain them. We are here to-day with a Union more strongly cemented than ever before, and destined to be perpetual. That Union is not by the agreement of the States, but by the decree of the people of this great country, renewed, ratified, sanctified in the blood of the war. That is accomplished and with the United States court everywhere in this land I shall look in vain to find any gentleman rise and say he would banish them or shear them of their power. Nay, the lesson of the legislation in the last Congress and in this teaches us volumes as to the opinion of the people and the legislators here assembled. Why, in the Forty-fifth Congress we passed bills securing joint action, giving additional facilities in the United States courts, establishing new courts, making new districts, and divisions of districts—in how many States? Why, in Colorado, the District of Columbia, Florida, Indiana, Kansas, Michigan, Missouri, Nebraska, North Carolina, Ohio, and West Virginia. That in the Forty-fifth Congress, What is the record in the Forty-sixth? Gentlemen have only to consult the files of the House. Go to the Committee on the Judiciary and you will find there bills in the same direction for Ohio, Indiana, Louisiana, Iowa, Mississippi, Tennessee, Illinois, South Carolina, Texas, Kentucky, North Carolina, Missouri, New York, and Kansas. Does that legislation show that the people tire of the pressure of the national power and the authority of the Federal courts? While I would not divulge the secrets of the consultation of the committee-room, yet I feel that I may say to this House that in the discussions and testimony before us in regard to the establishment of a circuit court in a certain State in this Union it appeared that the people wanted the United States court there because they had more confidence in it than they had in their State courts. And I say further, so that the credit may go where it is due, that this was in one of the Southern States of this Union.

I like that evidence. That is very gratifying. With this legislation accomplished and proposed and with that feeling prevailing I receive any such expression as that with cordiality. Let us have then this recognition of the United States power, and let us see to it that we do not here strive to strip it of its authority.

I need not enlarge, perhaps, upon the value and the interest of the cases that range from $500 up to $2,000 as that was so well put by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BARBER] yesterday. Are we making a court bill that will only avail to persons who are worth $2,000? That is this bill. The people shall open the national courts; they shall pay for jurors and marshals and clerks and judges; they shall build court-houses here and there all over the broad land; you shall tax them for that burden; but this Congress undertakes to say that no man shall have the benefits of the judiciary of the United States—I speak in general terms—unless he has a cause of action that in value represents $2,000. From 1789 for ninety years down we have been satisfied to let the people go in and out our national courts of justice for the sum of $500. What wrong came to the people of this country from that?

Apply what I say now more particularly to natural persons, to individuals, and I think the force of the argument will be at once conceded. The other branch of the question I shall touch upon later. Take the loans of money that are made all over this country, and they are not alone from the East and the Middle States; they are made everywhere; transactions are growing up and multiplying every day that affect the entire community of the United States. Wrong, supremely wrong, is that man's view who thinks by this legislation he will only affect the State of Massachusetts, the State of Connecticut, the State of New York, and other of the old States of the East. Why, you gentlemen of the South will have transactions from $500 to $2,000, many of them, which you wish to have passed upon in the Federal courts of this country. You will be debarred whatever your cause of action. You gentlemen of the West, as I believe, in the vain dream to get some relief from what I think is a false delusion, are ready to throw down the benefits that you have under the provisions of the Constitution and the laws made in execution of the Constitution, and to cast the benefits of your trade and your commerce and your credit into oblivion, never to be regained.

There are, then, great questions involved in this bill. And I undertake to say, what is the experience of every man, that the individual who has only somewhere from $500 to $2,000 is a man who demands and should receive the protection of the United States courts quite as much as he who controls millions.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Why limit it to $500?

Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman asks me why I limit it to $500. I will reply by saying to him, why did our fathers limit it to $500? And I suppose that is the question he wants to ask me. There is no reason founded upon the Constitution. The Constitution says that the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in the Supreme Court and in such other inferior courts as Congress may establish. The Constitution further says that the judicial power shall extend to controversies between citizens of different States. That is the point here. When the founders of that Constitution, or many of them, met in the Congress of the United States, and when they gave us the act of 1789, for some reason, we know not why, they said it might be well to fix the limit at $500. There is nothing that I can find in the debates of the House of Representatives of that period that gives the reason; and there is nothing to be found in any report of the debates of the Senate, because the debates of the Senate were then had with closed doors and in secrecy.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Would not your argument destroy all limit as to amount?

Mr. ROBINSON. No, sir. My argument is not that we should go from $500 down to $1, and the House of Representatives has misunderstood me if they thought I said so. What I say is this, that it is clearly within the constitutional power of Congress to provide that suits from $1 up between citizens of different States shall have cognizance in the Federal courts; and nobody will dispute that. From 1789 for ninety years the practice and experience of the country seemed to demonstrate the wisdom of the fathers in the legislation of 1789. I do not ask to go to the legitimate conclusion of distributing the power to the classes that have credits or demands of only a dollar. There is no stopping-place except in the discretion of Congress. This Congress has the discretion. I am not arguing the contrary, and gentlemen have not misunderstood me, I know. It is for us to say whether we think it wise and for the interest of the people that we should raise this limit from $500 to $2,000. That is what I am undertaking to meet. I say it is not wise; and if what I have said goes to sustain my assertion, I pass on, and leave it to other gentlemen to combat it. It is not that it is within the power of Congress merely, but that it is within its reasonable discretion as well, and I say no fact justifies the exercise of the discretion to give an enlarged limit.

Mr. WEAVER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not like to yield, because my time is limited and I have a good deal more to say. I prefer that gentlemen should not take up my time.

Mr. WEAVER. I yielded to the gentleman when I had the floor, but I will not insist upon it.

Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman was kind enough to yield to me, and I will now give one good turn for another, if his question is a short one.

Mr. WEAVER. Does not the gentleman see that at the time of the organization of the Government and the passage of the judiciary act of 1789, taking into consideration the population of the country and the relative amount of business, $500 was a proper limit and brought a limited number of suits into the courts, and that the rapid increase of population and increase of business since that time would overload the courts if the $500 limit was retained?

Mr. ROBINSON. That has been touched upon by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. WILLITS.] While perhaps it may be very easy for the gentleman to say that $2,000 now does not represent more than $500 represented some years ago——

Mr. WEAVER. I do not say that.

Mr. ROBINSON. In a certain sense that may be true. But I tell you that the man who has to-day but a thousand dollars, and wants his rights inquired into and determined, cares more about the $1,000 of his own than for the $1,000 that might have been in his grandfather's pocket. We must recollect that we are legislating for the people of to-day. Is it right and discreet that we should take away from the people of this country the privilege of going into the United States courts for the determination of suits involving sums between $500 and $2,000?

Mr. WEAVER. It is a necessity.

Mr. ROBINSON. I deny that it is a necessity, because when we have stricken out the provision in regard to promissory notes, the great bulk of causes will go out of the courts, as I have already argued. Again, we are multiplying United States courts and shall continue to do so as this country grows and prospers.

In regard to section 640 of the Revised Statutes, containing the provision in regard to corporations created by national laws, I will not dwell upon that at length, except to say that I can see no reason why a corporation created by authority of the United States should stand upon any better footing in this respect than any other corporation.

If a question arises under the Constitution or the laws of the United States, then that question should be interpreted and determined by the Supreme Court of the United States; and there are now many provisions of law for that purpose. I think that the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is substantially in the right direction; perhaps it is exactly so in terms.

If the limit is kept at $500, as applied to all parties litigant, I am very clear that section 640 of the Revised Statutes should be repealed, and I hope the House will take that position. If it is said that it will be exceedingly troublesome to try in the United States courts the suits of national corporations involving small amounts, such as the destruction of a few rods of fence or the loss or damage of some article of property, then take away those cases and place those corporations on an equality with other suitors.

Right here it may be well for me to say that the criticism upon the action of the courts under the provision that allows an appeal to the Supreme Court when a question arises under the Constitution or the laws of the United States is not quite sound. Gentlemen will find by referring to 6 Otto, in the case cited yesterday by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PHILIPS,] that the court says that only those questions can go to the Supreme Court which require the determination and construction of some provision of the Constitution of the United States or some law of the United States in order to arrive at a correct decision of the case. These corporations are not permitted to go there merely because they have been incorporated by authority of the United States.

I leave that branch of the subject, the question of the money limit, by asking gentlemen who hear me to consider for a moment that in this country the people are proportionately poor. Go into any State and you will find that the great mass of the people are utterly destitute of property. They pay a tax, if at all, upon the poll, and not upon property. If any of these persons shall accumulate the sum of $1,000 by dint of labor and saving, his right to that everywhere throughout this land should be secure.

I come now to the other provision of the bill, and in order that we may have it before the House I ask the Clerk to read that portion of the bill referring to corporations contained in the last clause of section 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That section 3 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

* * * * * * *

"That the circuit courts of the United States shall not take original cognizance of any suit of a civil nature, either at common law or in equity, between a corporation created or organized by or under the laws of any State and a citizen of any State in which such corporation at the time the cause of action accrued may have been carrying on any business authorized by the law creating it, except in like cases in which said courts are authorized by this act to take original cognizance of suits between citizens of the same State. Nor shall any such suit between such a corporation and a citizen or citizens of a State in which it may be doing business, be removed to any circuit court of the United States, except in like cases in which such removal is authorized by the foregoing provision in suits between citizens of the same States."

Mr. ROBINSON. I propose now to pass to the consideration of that feature of the bill which has just been read, and which is sometimes called the corporation clause of the bill. At the outset I must say that I cannot agree with some gentlemen who have stated that that is the great object to be accomplished. I cannot give that statement my assent and approval. Let us examine this question. In passing I want to say that the provision there does not save rights as to removal in pending suits or original actions. The gentleman in charge of the bill will, I presume, give proper consideration to this suggestion.

Again, it was not intended by the gentleman who offered this, as I understand, that corporations should be restricted as to suits for the enforcement of their rights under the patent or copyright laws. There can be no question that if this clause were adopted no corporation could go into the Federal court to enforce its rights under the patent or copyright laws, because this says "except as authorized by the provisions of this act," that is the act of 1875, which we are amending. Now the authority to go into the United States courts to enforce the patent and copyright laws is not found in the act of 1875, but in the Revised Statutes, section 629, clause 9.

Mr. NEW. That jurisdiction is exclusively in the circuit courts.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes, sir; and we should not disturb it and for the reason that not only in the judgment of Congress heretofore but in the decisions of the Supreme Court there should prevail over this country one uniform line of decision and adjudication upon questions of this kind. I need not argue the matter. There are many cases in which corporations will become interested in patents and copyrights, and have rights under them.

Corporations have been held by the United States courts to be citizens of the States in which they are created. I need not read the decisions, because members of the House are familiar with this as a settled principle. In other words, to state it the other way, the court says that when a corporation comes into court the court will consider that cause as for or against the stockholders of that corporation, and for the purposes of jurisdiction they shall be conclusively presumed to be residents of the State in which the corporation was created. That is the position of the court. It has been the adjudication of the court from the earliest cases. I need not cite them. The same rule will apply to alien corporations; that is, corporations created in foreign countries—not only in foreign states, as we use the phrase.

The Constitution, in article 3, extends the judicial power to citizens of different States. Therefore, in its language and by the adjudication of the courts it extends its power to corporations, for they are citizens of the different States. Have they that right under the Constitution? It has been asserted, and is upheld by the Supreme Court, and of course it cannot be at the present time called in question.

If, then, the citizens of different States have this right in the United States courts—and when I say citizens, I use the term in view of the adjudications of the Supreme Court and include corporations—if the corporations of this country, then, have the same right as natural persons to go into the courts of the United States, is it within the power of Congress to take that right away from them? That is the question for our consideration. Can Congress deprive corporations of a right guaranteed to them by the Constitution as asserted and vindicated by the Supreme Court?

I wish to refer the House to an early case in 1 Wheaton, the case of Martin vs. Hunter, in which the court uses the following language:

Let this article be carefully weighed and considered. The language of this article throughout is manifestly designed to be mandatory upon the Legislature. Its obligatory force is so imperative that Congress could not, without a violation of its duty, have refused to carry it into operation. "The judicial power of the United States shall be vested" (not may be vested) "in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as Congress may from time to time ordain and establish." Could Congress have lawfully refused to create a Supreme Court, or vest in it constitutional jurisdiction?

* * * * * * *

The judicial power must therefore be vested in some court by Congress; and to suppose that it was not an obligation binding on them, but might, at their pleasure, be omitted or declined, is to suppose that, under the sanction of the Constitution, they might defeat the Constitution itself. A construction which would lead to such a result cannot be sound.

* * * * * * *

If, then, it is the duty of Congress to vest the judicial power of the United States, it is a duty to vest the whole judicial power. The language if imperative as to one part is imperative as to all. If it were otherwise, this anomaly would exist, that Congress might successively refuse to vest the jurisdiction in any one class of cases enumerated in the Constitution and thereby defeat the jurisdiction as to all; for the Constitution has not singled out any class on which Congress are bound to act in preference to others.

Mr. TUCKER. From what does the gentleman read?

Mr. ROBINSON. From 1 Wheaton.

Mr. TUCKER. Whose opinion?

Mr. ROBINSON. The opinion of Judge Story; and if the gentleman wants other authority to the same effect he will find in the opinion of Chief-Justice Marshall, in Cohens vs. Virginia, 6 Wheaton, which I will not take time to read, a reiteration of the same doctrine.

I say, then, that those constitutional provisions give to the citizens of the different States their rights in the Federal courts. I say again it is not within the constitutional power of Congress to make discriminations as to citizens in this matter. It has been taken as settled that the corporations of the States for purposes of jurisdiction are citizens of the States in which they are created. If citizens, they have the rights of all other citizens; and Congress is bound to secure those rights by legislation.

Can you discriminate? Why, in the famous Dred Scott decision, the Supreme Court did discriminate, and said that a negro was not a citizen within the meaning of the Constitution, nor entitled to sue in the circuit court of the United States? The nation paused and held its breath, and never recovered itself until after the bloody strife of the war, when was put into the Constitution that guarantee that no such doctrine should ever be repeated in this country; and to-day it is impossible for any Supreme Court to make that discrimination again.

That, I believe, is the only discrimination against the citizen that was ever attempted. It took us years to correct it; it cost blood and treasure. That is well settled. I am discussing simply the question of jurisdiction, not any other provision of the Constitution.

Discriminate! Can this Congress, can you here? I think no one will claim it. Can you say here that the corporations, for instance, of the State of New York, created there and doing business there, shall not be citizens of New York, but shall be citizens of the various States wherever they may go and transact business? No, indeed. That is not within the power of this Congress. Can you say that I, a citizen of Massachusetts, shall not be a citizen of Massachusetts when I want to come to the United States court, but shall be a citizen of Louisiana, or it may be of Ohio, or it may be of Illinois? Certainly not. Can you say by your legislation that the State of Massachusetts, for instance, shall have no rights in the circuit court, that the citizens of Massachusetts shall have no rights in the circuit court? Why, not at all.

"Citizens," say the constitutions of the different States, and that, I am happy to say, includes the people of the State of Massachusetts. Then you will not attempt that. And so this bill does not limit and say that directly, but seeks to gain by indirection what it has not the courage and the power to do directly. That is what it tries to do. If gentlemen believe it is in the power of Congress to legislate citizenship out of the different individuals, whether natural or artificial, that is recognized under the Constitution, let them meet that question fairly.

If Congress can exclude the citizens of a locality, or the citizens of one color, or the citizens of one occupation, or the citizens of certain classes of wealth or industry, surely it can exclude any other citizens. If you can, in this bill and under our Constitution, declare that the citizens, or any portion of them, in this country, because they act in their corporate capacity, shall lose their rights in the Federal courts, it is but the next step to legislate that the man who is engaged in rolling iron, or in the manufacture of cotton or of woolen goods, or is a banker or "bloated bondholder," shall not have any rights in the Federal courts. There is no stop between them.

"Well, but this bill," it will be said, "does not declare that they shall not be citizens." And it may be said that this Congress certainly has the power to decline to exercise the whole of its jurisdiction; that the Supreme Court has recognized that as within the discretion and power of Congress. So the court has, but I ask you to observe that the court has never given any countenance, except in the case I have referred to, that upon this matter of jurisdiction there may be any discrimination as to citizens. There may be a discrimination as to subject-matter, but not as to citizens.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. NEW] has cited Sheldon vs. Sill, 8 Howard, 441, and other cases, in justification, as he seems to believe, for the provision now under discussion. But all those cases are in point only to sustain the authority of Congress to exercise its discretion upon the subject-matter or amount in controversy, not to discriminate against any citizen. The distinction is very broad, and in recognition of it my argument is made. The opinions of courts have no binding force whatever, except upon the precise points in issue.

Corporations are citizens for all purposes under the Constitution and laws of the United States relating to the Federal courts, and as such have equal rights. It is not material in this consideration that they are declared not to be citizens under other clauses of the Constitution and for different purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, in the chair.) The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think not, Mr. Speaker; but that I am to take up the whole morning hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman had twenty minutes yesterday and was entitled only to forty minutes this morning.

Mr. WILLITS. I hope by unanimous consent the gentleman will be permitted to proceed until he concludes his speech.

Mr. WAIT. I move that the gentleman be allowed to go on and finish his remarks.

Mr. ROBINSON. It will be agreeable, I think, to the gentleman from Kentucky who is to follow me, to begin to-morrow, rather than for the few minutes remaining of the morning hour.

Mr. TUCKER. I move that the gentleman be allowed to go on for the remainder of the morning hour.

Several MEMBERS. Go on; go on.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I am under obligation to the House for its courtesy, and I will not trespass on it. I was saying that this bill did not do its work directly, but sought to do it indirectly. What does this bill say? Not flatly and plainly, as some perhaps would have it, that these corporations shall forfeit their citizenship; but it says we will close the doors of the United States courts against this class of citizens. Is that any more manly? Is that any more honorable? Is that any more within the constitutional power of Congress? Shut your doors! We tore down the placard "no negroes here;" shall we now write over the vestibule "no corporations can be heard." Why, if you say the circuit court shall not consider the causes which may come from one class of citizens, you may go on to classify your litigation to suit the prevailing temper of Congress, and you may in this Congress provide the circuit court shall not hear a black man, and in the next place you may provide the black man may be heard but no gentleman from South Carolina shall be heard. I need not enlarge further. I have submitted the point with confidence in its soundness.

And I go further. Whether or not it is sound in law, it is eminently fair and wise in comity and statesmanship. Let us look at the status of this matter. What are corporations? Creations of States—local creatures born of the parent States. They have their home in the States of their creation, and they are hedged and bounded in their power by the territorial limits of the States creating them. Why, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] wandered far when he said, the other day, in these words:

> Take for illustration a railroad corporation. It is organized, perhaps, under the law of Massachusetts. It stretches its iron arms westward until it reaches the Missouri River, passing through the great States of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, and perhaps others. It enters these States, and by the right of eminent domain condemns the property of the citizen, proceeds to build and lay the foundation of a colossal fortune. It builds its road and occupies the territory, and proposes to occupy for all future time.

Why, Mr. Speaker, that is eloquence, but it is not law. I want to say, and the gentleman knows well, that no Massachusetts corporation can go into Iowa and exercise the right of eminent domain except with the authority of the great State of Iowa.

Mr. WEAVER. Let me make this remark. They do do it by indirection.

Mr. ROBINSON. I cannot yield.

Mr. WEAVER. It will not come out of your time, and the gentleman should not misrepresent me.

Mr. ROBINSON. It will come out of my time, as the morning hour has nearly expired.

No corporation, as we all know, can go outside of the limits of its State and enter another State, except by the authority of the State which it will enter, whatever may be its business. Eminent domain! Why, that is the high prerogative of the sovereignty of the State which holds the territory, and that State may, in its discretion, part with it or apportion it to such objects and purposes as commend themselves to its best judgment. So Legislatures give to great corporations organized for the public benefit, as the Legislatures believe, the right to take land. I need not defend railroad corporations; they have their defenders in this House. Gentlemen who have practiced at the bar for years as attorneys of corporations know that, sentiment aside, there are rights on one side as well as rights on the other. Railroad corporations! Why, you take the great lines across this country; take them as they come to this capital; take, for instance, the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad. Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland all joined to give consolidation, force, and vigor to that corporation; and the State of Pennsylvania, by its supreme court, said in a case of that character that when the Legislatures of the different States had authorized a consolidation of that kind, it was not to be taken as an act of one State with the corporation alone, but was in the nature of a compact; and that the different States were bound to maintain that compact, not only with respect to the corporation but with respect to each other. You rejoice, some of you, in the great line that will take you to Chicago, if that will be effected by consolidation. The State of Iowa has but a single home corporation that crosses or runs within its border, I understand. And how came the great ones there? By the act of the Legislature of Iowa, by its consolidation statute, which said to the corporations approaching its borders, "Come, we want the convenience and the power and the facilities and value of your combined line."

It has been well said here that this country, however much some men may talk against the corporation power, cannot get along without associated capital. No individual alone can undertake these enterprises. No man would dare to risk his fortune in such great undertakings. The people, wherever they are, who have been living hundreds of miles out of the sound of the locomotive's shriek will always welcome the iron horse when he comes into their locality. Why, sir, in these discussions about United States courts, how ready gentlemen have been to tell us how many railroads they have running to this and that town, and how the people are benefited and the courts accommodated!

I pass on. Savings-banks and trust companies are organized in many of the States. They are authorized to loan their funds, many of them, outside of the borders of the State in which they exist. That is not so in Massachusetts, but it is so in many States. Are savings-banks rich corporations? They are the trust companies, the trust establishments of the poor people of the States. You examine their accounts, and you find them, from $1 up to $1,000, composed of the slow and painful earnings of the people in the shops and the mills or on the farms of the States that have fostered those institutions. Suppose they lend their funds in the West or the South; suppose they lend them in New York or elsewhere; I say they ought to have the rights of the citizens who have saved their money and intrusted them to the officers of those corporations. In nearly all cases the officers of those corporations serve without pay.

But there are foreign insurance companies; gentleman say, they are the trouble. Well, let us see. Is that real or is it fancied? How come the foreign insurance companies in any State? I mean the foreign insurance companies of this country, foreign as to the State in which they do business. Unless a State by express act or by implied recognition allows an insurance company to do business within its borders it has no right there—I mean a foreign insurance company. The States have regulated that. Ohio has its law; Indiana has its law; Wisconsin, Michigan, Massachusetts, New York, Connecticut, and nearly all the other States make provisions for those corporations to come. They provide that they shall come in and make certain deposits; that they shall have an agent upon whom process shall be served; they make such provisions as they choose, and the corporation must abide by those conditions, provided that they are not repugnant to the Constitution and laws of the United States. When the State of Wisconsin exacted from a foreign insurance company as a condition of its doing business in that State an agreement that it would not remove any cause to the circuit court of the United States the Supreme Court of the United States put its hand on that legislation and said, that is repugnant to the Constitution and laws of the United States and the company may remove its cause. I refer to 20 Wall., 445, Home Insurance Company vs. Morse. But when the same State of Wisconsin, as the next step, revoked the license of a foreign insurance company for a similar act and that question came to the Supreme Court of the United States, the court said, Wisconsin has the power to give license and she has the power to revoke it. I cite Doyle vs. Continental Insurance Company, 4 Otto, 535.

Other States, as Missouri, have attempted legislation perhaps more dangerous. Indiana has gone a step further. Less than a year ago, in March last, the State of Indiana passed a law in which it provided that if a foreign insurance company shall remove a cause from the State court into the Federal court under the United States Constitution and laws it shall forfeit its right to its real estate and to its liens and to its contracts, and that the contract, while not binding upon the individual unless he chooses to have it, shall be binding upon the corporation. That is Indiana legislation in this same line. The act is as follows:

> An act touching foreign corporations, and providing that certain acts thereof shall work forfeiture.
> [Approved March 15, 1879.]
> SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, That every foreign corporation now doing or transacting, or that shall hereafter do or transact any business in this State, or acquire any right, title, interest in, or lien upon real estate in this State, that shall transfer or cause to be transferred from any court of this State to any court of the United States, save by regular course of appeal, after trial in the State courts, any action commenced by or against such corporation in any court of this State, by or against any citizen or resident thereof, or that shall commence in any court of the United States in this State on any contract made in this State, or liability accrued therein, any suit or action against any citizen or resident of the State of Indiana, shall thereby forfeit all right and authority to do or transact business in this State, or hold real property or liens thereon, and all contracts between such corporations and citizens, or residents of this State, made after the passage of this act, shall be rendered void, as in favor of such corporation, but enforceable by such citizen at his election.

SEC. 2. The provisions of this act shall be, and the same are hereby, made conditions upon which such corporations may be authorized to do business in this State, or hold title to or liens on real estate therein.

SEC. 3. There being now no law of this State covering the provisions of this act, therefore an emergency exists, and the same shall be in force from and after its passage.

The Legislature of Indiana considered there was such a public emergency that they had that act by its terms take effect on its passage. The very instant the governor of the great State of Indiana wrote his sign-manual upon that act every corporation from another State doing business in Indiana was subject to that legislation. Is it constitutional? I think not. And is there any cause for wonder that any attempt to remit citizens of other States to the courts of Indiana controlled by the sentiments and policy expressed in such legislation is viewed with alarm?

I have only to say a word or two further and then I will close. I have said the States may exclude corporations. We all know that. And with such power in the States let their Legislatures exercise it as they may deem best. Surely Congress should not, by any policy that is unwise or unsound, attempt to impose conditions or restrictions that the States do not establish. Again, money may be loaned the towns and cities and counties throughout this country. And is it not fresh in your recollection that a good many of your towns and cities have seen fit to deny the obligation of loans made to them? And was it not best and right that the citizen of another State, natural or artificial, whether from the West, the South, or the East, should have the right to go into the United States court to try the question whether a certain county should pay its debts rather than go into the courts of that county? This bill says if you lend money to the town or city or county, and you are a non-resident of that State and a corporation, you shall seek your remedy against the town or city or county in its own court at the hands of its own people, who are to pay the taxes and take the law from the judges who sit on the bench elected by the votes of the people who pay the taxes, voted for generally by the defendants in the cases, and who expect to be elected next time, sometimes because they make this decision or the other that may suit the popular whim.

I will not apply that to the West only. In all parts of the country there occur times of excitement. You say that if a corporation shall go into a State to do business, let it abide by the law of the people where it seeks to do business. Yes, gentlemen, in times of peace and harmony and when there is no prejudice or excitement. But no State is always free from that. Massachusetts has had its periods of jealousy and prejudice; and there have been times in my recollection when some gentlemen of the South, if they belonged to incorporated companies, could not have gone to Massachusetts and submitted their cases to the State juries and obtained the judgments that they ought to have obtained on the law and the facts.

And in the West there have been granger laws and granger excitements that have led people to commit enormities in legislation and extravagances in practice; and in the South—why, sir, history is too full for me to particularize.

Capital is needed to restore the waste places of the South and to build up the undeveloped West; it must flow largely from the older States of the East and from foreign lands. But it will not be risked in the perils of sectional bitterness, narrow prejudices, or local indifference to integrity and honor.

I say, then, let us stand by the national courts; let us preserve their power. Let us take out of those courts the causes of litigation that have multiplied and burdened the court and weighed it down, so that it may transact its business. But let us stand upon the legislation which the country has prospered under, which it has approved by its ninety years of life. Let us give our Constitution that construction which the fathers gave it that we may indeed be not merely a community of States. Let us no more in practice talk of State rights as against the power of the Government or against the rights of the citizens of the nation. Let us have a national power, national rights; and let us have individual interests and rights recognized under the Constitution and the laws of this great Government.

I am under great obligations to the House for its kind attention.

APPROVAL OF BILLS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced he had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 325) for the erection of a public building at Danville, Virginia;

An act (H. R. No. 2188) for the relief of Thomas Kearney;

An act (H. R. No. 3497) to provide for deficiencies in the appropriations for contingent expenses of the Senate and House of Representatives;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 93) for printing the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 163) authorizing the Secretary of War to expend a sum of money heretofore appropriated for the erection of a storehouse and depot building at the city of Omaha, in the State of Nebraska.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia.) It has.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I move that the House go into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. WELLS. I desire to report from the Committee on Appropriations a deficiency Indian appropriation bill for consideration at this time.

Mr. BLACKRURN. I would make no objection to it if it did not give rise to debate.

Mr. HAYES. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order being called for, the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] to go into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. WELLS. Then I ask to report this bill to be printed and recommitted.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have no objection to that.

INDIAN DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WELLS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4432) making additional appropriations for the support of certain Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1880; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now insist upon my motion to go into Committee of the Whole upon the report of the Committee on Rules.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. CARLISLE in the chair.

The pending provision of the rules was the following:

RULE XVII.

PREVIOUS QUESTION.

1. There shall be a motion for the previous question, which, being ordered by a majority of members present, if a quorum, shall have the effect to cut off all debate and bring the House to a direct vote upon the immediate question or questions on which it has been asked and ordered. The previous question may be asked and ordered upon a single motion, a series of motions allowable under the rules, or an amendment or amendments, or may be made to embrace all authorized motions or amendments and include the bill to its engrossment and third reading, and then, on renewal of said motion, to its passage or rejection. It shall be in order, pending the motion for or after the previous question shall have been ordered on the final passage, for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit, with or without instructions, to a standing or special committee; and a motion to lie upon the table shall be in order on the second and third reading of a bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to suggest merely a verbal correction in accordance with one which we have already made in a previous rule. It is in the last sentence of clause 1 of Rule XVII, to strike out the word "lie" and insert the word "lay;" so that it will read: "a motion to lay upon the table," &c.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not believe the amendment is proper or defensible in grammar. But I will say again to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] that so long as he confines himself to such small amendments I have no objection; let him go on.

Mr. HAWLEY. I beg leave to say that I have allowed to pass unnoticed many expressions in the gentleman's report that are objectionable grammatically. I do not make this amendment in a captious spirit at all. If the gentleman had been an editor and a proof-reader as long as I have he would have got over any tenderness of feeling in regard to such correction. Twenty years ago I had a hide as thick as that of a rhinoceros on that subject. I could write as carefully as I pleased and put what I wrote into the hands of the best compositors, and the next day I would find errors in it.

I will call the gentleman's attention to this illustration: some years ago the University of Glasgow undertook to print an edition of some Greek classic, and day after day a page of the work was publicly posted on the university grounds, with a reward offered for the discovery of an error therein. After the edition had been published, and many pounds paid by way of rewards for errors, it was found that there was a gross error on the title-page.

I make these corrections in no spirit of captiousness, I repeat, but only in order that we may have as little bad English in the rules as possible—that we may avoid what has occurred heretofore, the reference to this identical error as one of the ridiculous vulgarisms in language that have occasionally crept into high places.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am trying not to avoid the gentleman's amendments, for they are too small to be objectionable, but to avoid his speeches. I do not think he is correct as a matter of grammar. Such authorities as Cushing and others on parliamentary law for a hundred years past are at variance with him. But I am not disposed to cavil about or to stickle upon such things. I am not a proof-reader, and the gentleman may be correct in this little matter.

The amendment of Mr. HAWLEY was then agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading, and read as follows:

2. A call of the House shall not be in order after the previous question is ordered, unless it shall appear upon an actual count by the Speaker that a quorum is not present.

3. All incidental questions of order arising after a motion is made for the previous question, and pending such motion, shall be decided, whether on appeal or otherwise, without debate.

RULE XVIII.

RECONSIDERATION.

When a motion has been made and carried or lost, it shall be in order for any member of the majority, on the same or succeeding day, to move for the reconsideration thereof, and such motion shall take precedence of all other questions except the consideration of a conference report, a motion to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, or to take a recess, and shall not be withdrawn after the said succeeding day without the consent of the House, and thereafter any member may call it up for consideration: Provided, That such motion, if made during the last six days of a session, shall be disposed of when made.

2. No bill, petition, memorial, or resolution referred to a committee, or reported therefrom for printing and recommitment, shall be brought back into the House on a motion to reconsider; and all bills, petitions, memorials, or resolutions reported from a committee shall be accompanied by reports in writing, which shall be printed.

RULE XIX.

OF AMENDMENTS.

When a motion or proposition is under consideration, a motion to amend and a motion to amend that amendment shall be in order, and it shall also be in order to offer a further amendment by way of substitute, to which one amendment may be offered, but which shall not be voted on until the original matter is perfected, but either may be withdrawn before amendment or decision is had thereon.

RULE XX.

OF AMENDMENTS OF THE SENATE.

Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

RULE XXI.

ON BILLS.

1. Bills and joint resolutions introduced for reference and those reported by committees without such introduction shall be read a first time by their titles and printed, the second time in full, the third time by their titles, unless the reading in full shall be demanded by a member.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I offer the following as a substitute for the first clause of Rule XXI:

Every bill and joint resolution shall receive three readings before its passage, which shall be as follows: The first reading by title on its introduction for reference, or being an original bill on its report from a committee for commitment, or by unanimous consent for present action; the second reading in full; and the third reading by its title, unless the reading in full shall be demanded by a member.

Mr. FRYE. Does the gentleman offer this amendment by authority of the Committee on Rules?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The committee agreed to this, except possibly as to one point, upon which there was probably some dissent on the part of one member of the committee; that was in reference to the second reading of a bill being in full. I do not understand that there is any objection upon the part of any member of the committee to this amendment; and, if not, then it is offered by the authority and direction of the committee.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I suppose the second reading in full under the proposed amendment can be dispensed with by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The amendment speaks of dispensing with the third reading by unanimous consent, but it does not speak of dispensing with the second reading by unanimous consent. This is the reason I made the inquiry.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that it is not the purpose of this rule to restrict the right of any member to demand the reading of any bill in full upon its passage after it shall have been engrossed. This simply waives the necessity of a demand for the full reading of the bill prior to its engrossment; and after its engrossment it will be in the power of any member to call for the reading of the bill in full.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

2. Bills and joint resolutions on their passage shall be read the first time by title and the second time in full, when, if the previous question is ordered, the Speaker shall state the question to be: Shall the bill be engrossed and read a third time? and, if decided in the affirmative, it shall be read the third time by title, unless the reading in full is demanded by a member, and the question shall then be put upon its passage.

Mr. WHITE. I move to amend by inserting after the clause just read the following, to come in as clause 3:

The general appropriation bills shall embrace nothing but appropriations for the ordinary expenses of the different departments of the Government and interest on the public debt. All other appropriations shall be made by bills containing only items of appropriation relating to the subject-matter of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, this is substantially the amendment which I offered during the consideration of the eleventh rule, when we had reached the clause defining the duties of the Appropriations Committee. At the suggestion of my colleague, the Speaker of the House, I withdrew it then to offer it at this time. This is the proper place, I apprehend, to offer it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania offer this as a substitute for the third clause?

Mr. WHITE. No, sir; I offer this as an independent clause to come in ahead of the present third clause. If this amendment should prevail, it will be prudent to amend the present third clause by striking from it that portion which provides—

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this proposition clearly and distinctly raises before the House the issue, is it proper to put general legislation on appropriation bills? If this amendment prevails it will be hereafter impossible, certainly irregular, for the Committee on Appropriations to report in an appropriation bill any proposition for a change of existing laws. It will also be out of order for any amendment changing existing law to be received upon the consideration of an appropriation bill. In a word, it clearly and distinctly confines the Appropriations Committee and the appropriation bills of this House to the appropriation of public money to carry on the different departments of the Government. If this is made the rule it will be impossible to have a recurrence of such debates as we had during the extra session of the present Congress. I think the amendment meets the necessities of the hour. Its wisdom should commend it to the approval of all fair-minded men in this body.

There are no politics whatever in the amendment. Both parties in the past history of the Government have offended (if it is an offense) by proposing changes of existing law upon appropriation bills. All parties which have had at different times control of legislation have been alternately criticized for the practice of adding riders to appropriation bills. If this rule be now adopted it will be a new departure in a direction which I think the sentiment of the country demands. I call the attention of members from the different States to the fact that this amendment embodies, briefly and tersely expressed, provisions to be found in the recently adopted constitutions of many of the States. I think it is very similar to a provision in the new constitution of Illinois. It certainly is almost in totidem verbis the provision regulating appropriations as contained in the new constitution of Pennsylvania. This constitution met the approval of the popular will by a majority of some one hundred and fifty thousand votes. No feature of this constitution commended itself more to the people of our great State than this change of the manner of passing general appropriation bills. It is not necessary for me to argue what every gentleman is familiar with. This proposition clearly defines the issue between those who favor making appropriation bills the wager of battle for general and partisan legislation and those who oppose it. Let us see how it will end.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose this amendment. I oppose its insertion in the place where it is proposed to be inserted. When we reach the next paragraph I should be in favor of some provision of this kind. As I said on a former occasion, I desired when we should reach this subject to make some remarks in regard to the clause permitting legislation on appropriation bills. The whole history of Congress shows that no such power was ever claimed when a party had control of the three departments of the Government—the House, the Senate, and the executive—never.

My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] has referred to the provisions of many of the State constitutions. I wish to show how utterly inconsistent, under the leadership of our Speaker, (who is present, I believe,) have been the votes of all my southern friends in the adoption and enforcement of the provision now contained in our rules. Those who regard as of binding force the example of southern gentlemen in framing the constitution of the confederacy will bear in mind that that constitution contained a clause preventing legislation on appropriation bills. Those who adopted that constitution were uninfluenced by any desire to override any party or any people, uninfluenced by any desire to have an opportunity to slip in any legislation against the will of a portion of the House or against the will of the Senate or against the will of the President. I only refer to this because of the rebuke it carries with it to gentlemen who uphold the proposition now contained in our rules. The clause in the constitution of the confederacy to which I have referred was adopted as the solemn sentiment of gentlemen who now represent the South, and whom I from time to time in my innocent manner charge with carrying out so effectually the views of southern men in old times even up to the present.

Mr. ATKINS. There is one good thing, then, in the South.

Mr. CONGER. It is in direct opposition to the vote of every man in the South as to its expediency, as to its propriety, for when reporting their own constitution they adopted a provision prohibiting legislation on appropriation bills.

Mr. ATKINS. Circumstances alter cases.

Mr. CONGER. I say circumstances alter cases. This proposition never was made until it became necessary for the Speaker of this House to ask his southern friends from the late confederacy to change their entire views which they had embodied in a constitutional provision, change their entire course of action, and sustain him in a change of the rules, a change from that which had been the rule of this House, compelling his associates from the Confederate States service to violate their judgment as embodied in their own constitution——

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. CONGER. After my five minutes are up. [Laughter.] I look upon that action of the Speaker of this House when he placed himself at the head of the whole confederate army in this House and compelled them to ignore the action of their wisest and best and follow in his lead—I say I look upon that as one of the greatest triumphs that a northern man ever gained over the confederate brigadier-generals of this House. [Laughter.] No member of this side of this House, sir, ever could have begun to influence these friends of the South so suddenly, so unitedly, so earnestly as to cast reproach, disgrace, and shame upon those of their friends, if not themselves, who had incorporated into the solemn instrument of organization of the southern confederacy a clause which prevented legislation even for the reduction of expenses upon their appropriation bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CONGER. Is my time quite up. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. CONGER. I have a word or two to say about the Speaker, but he knows my estimate of his power. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The gentleman from Michigan is generally accurate and I wonder he is not so in reference to what he has just stated. I am not perhaps as familiar with the confederate constitution as he is; but, if I recollect aright, the constitution of the Confederate States contains no such clause as that which he alleges.

Mr. CONGER. I think it does.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I think not. The clause, as I recollect, in that constitution, gave to the president of the confederacy the right to veto any part of an appropriation bill.

A MEMBER. Any item.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Any item of an appropriation bill; but it did not restrict the confederate congress in any respect, as to what legislation should be placed upon appropriation bills. So that "noble army" he speaks of from the South as having battled for economy—and I join him in every commendation of their conduct—was not inconsistent when they assumed the position upon this floor in favor of legislation upon appropriation bills, in favor of retrenchment and reform. [Applause.]

Mr. CONGER. And if it should appear that was in the confederate constitution as I have stated it—I have it not here and I cannot refer to it—then the gentleman will agree he had the power to lead the whole army of southern men against their will.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I do not want to lead a better army than the army in the Forty-fourth Congress, first session, without regard to where they came from, which fought in defense of economy and reform. [Applause.]

Mr. CONGER. We all know that; we all know the pride with which the Speaker leads that army against the North and against the people.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Mr. Chairman, I have no answer to make to that remark.

Mr. GOODE. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Inasmuch as this is a very important matter, unless some gentleman insists on it the Chair will not require these formal amendments to be made, and will endeavor to recognize gentlemen alternately—first, those for, and then those against—until such time as the committee sees proper to ask that the rules shall be strictly enforced.

Mr. GOODE. Mr. Chairman, we are not here now to make a constitution. Whatever may be in the constitution of the late Confederate States, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan who has just spoken to the fact that the Constitution of the United States, under which we now live, provides that each House may determine the rules of its own proceeding for itself. And if the House of Representatives, in the adoption of its rules, shall determine that it is judicious and proper to ingraft general legislation upon an appropriation bill, then neither the Senate nor the President nor anybody else has the right to make any complaint or objection. It is a matter, sir, within the discretion of the House of Representatives, in which is vested the sole and exclusive power to originate money bills.

Now, Mr. Chairman, while I concede as a general proposition that it may be an unscientific method of legislation, yet I maintain that occasions may arise when the public liberties may be so seriously imperiled that the House of Representatives ought not to surrender this power and ought not to consent under any circumstances not to resort to its exercise. If bad and vicious legislation is fastened upon the statute-book which we are unable to repeal on account of the executive veto, then it is not only the right but in my judgment it is the duty of the House to stand and withhold the appropriations of money until——

Mr. ROBESON. Let me interrupt the gentleman for a mere question.

Mr. GOODE. We ought to withhold the money until we can obtain a redress of the grievances complained of.

Mr. ROBESON. I merely wish to ask the gentleman a single question in this connection.

Mr. GOODE. I have not time to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ROBESON. I merely wish to ask the gentleman whether the House of Representatives have the right under any circumstances under the Constitution to usurp the rights of the Senate or of the Executive?

Mr. GOODE. No, sir; but under the Constitution the House may determine the rules of its own proceeding.

Mr. Chairman, there is no better teacher than experience. There is no safer criterion to judge of the future than by the past. And I ask any gentleman on this floor if we could ever have succeeded in incorporating the legislation which was incorporated in the appropriation bill during the first session of this Congress, to wit, that no money appropriated should be used for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force at the polls, if it had not been for the provisions of Rule 120? And does any man believe that we should have succeeded in forcing a repeal of those relics of war legislation—sections 801, 820, and 821 of the Revised Statutes, which practically excluded from the jury-box nearly all of the white people in eleven States of this Union, if it had not been for this same Rule 120? In my judgment, sir, that much-abused rule has not only been the means of enabling this Congress to save $30,000,000 of the people's money per annum in the expenditures of the Government, but it has been the bulwark behind which we have been able to keep the Army from the polls and to break down the barriers which excluded fair and impartial jurors from the jury-box. This is my judgment in regard to this rule, and I am not willing as a member of this House to have it repealed. It has enabled us to accomplish great and salutary measures of reform which entitle this House to the gratitude of the country; but we must not stop in the good work until we have secured the repeal of certain sections of the Revised Statutes which permit the presence of Federal marshals at the polls with power to interfere in the conduct of elections and arrest American citizens on suspicion with or without process of law.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I must say that I am surprised to hear the language of the gentleman from Virginia, for no man knows better than he that the legislation to which he has alluded would have received general approval but for the forceful fashion in which it was tried to be put on in this House.

Mr. GOODE. We tried it time and again in separate bills.

Mr. REED. But I am sorry to see in the enumeration of the various benefits received from Rule 120 he has forgotten to enumerate that great benefit yet to accrue to the country from the actions which took place under that rule in the extra session, namely, the extirpation of the democratic party, which is to occur the next time the people of the United States have an opportunity to pass upon it. [Applause on the republican side.]

It gave the country a good opportunity to see what these gentlemen were so eager to do, and what they were disposed to do, and did do, when they had the power; and the result of the airing of the democratic party before the people of the United States is always of great interest and benefit to the country. Not only that, it is not only national but local. Wherever we can get a fair opportunity for a review of that collection of gentlemen, a good result has always followed for the country.

It seems to me bad this matter should be brought up and discussed upon such a basis. We are endeavoring to fix some rule for the government of the House, and we are endeavoring to do it upon principles which will hold not only for the present, but for all future time. I think if we have a mind to come to this question in a dispassionate and decent fashion we will be enabled to fix upon some rule, and that we shall be able to do it by a suitable amendment to this Rule 120. And when the time comes I purpose to offer an amendment to the third clause; of which I wish to give notice now to the House. It is to strike out from the third clause all after the word "order," in the sixth line, and insert the words "but it shall be in order to strike out any sum of money appropriated in a bill and insert a less sum."

That will give every opportunity for retrenchment and reform, and reduction of expenditures, and at the same time it will keep out these firebrands that prevent calm and dispassionate legislation. My objection to the proposition presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is, among other things, that it presents the idea that an appropriation is necessary in the general appropriations for the interest of the public debt; I believe that that is already provided for under our general appropriation laws.

Mr. SPEER. With the concurrence of the chairman of the Committee on Rules, I move that, as this is a very important subject, the committee rise for the purpose of extending the time for debate upon it.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have no objection to that motion being made. I desire to say so far as the Committee on Rules is concerned it does not propose to put any limit on the debate on this rule to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. By a strict enforcement of the rule only five minutes would be allowed in favor of an amendment and five minutes against, but the debate can be extended by means of pro forma amendments.

Mr. GARFIELD. Allow me to suggest that for a time at least it seems to me it will facilitate the discussion of this matter if we could have the ten-minute rule instead of the five-minute rule prevail. That would allow a large number of gentlemen to speak, while five minutes is hardly enough in view of the importance of this question and the state of feeling upon it. I believe that if we should agree to adopt the ten-minute rule for to-day it would greatly facilitate the debate.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The House would have to do that, and in the House it could only be done by unanimous consent, for it vacates a rule.

Mr. GARFIELD. Could not unanimous consent be given without the committee rising?

Mr. BLACKBURN. It would require unanimous consent to be given in the House.

Mr. WARNER. In the present state of feeling this debate is likely to take about five hundred minutes, even if we proceed under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HAYES. Does the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] require unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. As the proposition is to change the time allowed for debate, it would be necessary for the committee to rise, and in the House such an order could only be made by unanimous consent.

Mr. WHITE. It strikes me, Mr. Chairman, that the same thing could be accomplished by gentlemen rising and yielding their time to each other.

Mr. WARNER. From the indications, the debate will take three months under the five-minute rule.

Mr. SPEER. I desire now to offer the amendment of which I gave notice some days ago, as follows:

In Rule XXI, clause 3, strike out all after the word "except," and insert——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia that the third clause of Rule XXI is not now under consideration. It has not been reached.

Mr. SPEER. I withdraw the amendment, then, until that clause is reached.

Mr. SPRINGER. When this question was before the committee for consideration a few days ago the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] stated that Rule 120, permitting legislation on appropriation bills, was the rock upon which the democratic party had split. I do not know to what he referred, because the democratic party has not split upon anything. But is the placing of legislation upon appropriation bills unconstitutional or a departure from legislative precedents? Not at all. I want to call the attention of the House and of the country and of the honorable gentleman from Ohio to the fact that during the time when he occupied the responsible position of chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of this House in the Forty-second and Forty-third Congresses there were passed by Congress appropriation bills which contained, as I have computed them here, eighty-eight sections of new legislation upon such bills. You can scarcely find one appropriation bill reported to this House during the time the gentleman from Ohio was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that did not have one or more sections upon it of general legislation. A gentleman near me suggests I should put the sections in my printed remarks. I would have to reproduce a large part of volumes 17 and 18 of the Statutes at Large of the United States in order to show the new legislation on appropriation bills reported and enacted while the honorable gentleman from Ohio was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. It was during this time the practice to legislate upon the appropriation bills and many of the most important provisions of law enacted during the Congresses when the gentleman from Ohio occupied that position were placed upon those bills.

I call the attention of the committee to the following table of appropriation bills which passed during the Forty-second and Forty-third Congresses and to the sections thereof which contained new legislation:

New legislation on appropriation bills in the Forty-second and Forty-third Congresses, during which time Mr. Garfield was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if there was ever a time when such legislation was not put upon appropriation bills?

Mr. SPRINGER. There never was a time when such legislation was not put upon appropriation bills. And, so far as I am concerned, I assert here that it is a constitutional and righteous mode of legislation, and necessary in many cases; and that the propriety of such legislation is solely within the discretion of the House, and nobody outside of it, or inside of it, has the right to question our authority to legislate in any way we please.

If we give up this Rule 120 we give up one of the prerogatives of this House, secured to us by the Constitution, a prerogative which Mr. Madison believed was the greatest and most important to the representatives of the people which was embodied in our Constitution. I refer gentlemen to No. 58 of the Federalist, where Mr. Madison says:

The House of Representatives can not only refuse, but they alone can propose the supplies requisite for the support of the Government. They, in a word, hold the purse, that powerful instrument by which we behold, in the history of the British constitution, an infant and humble representation of the people gradually enlarging the sphere of its activity and importance, and finally reducing, as far as it seems to have wished, all the overgrown prerogatives of the other branches of the Government. This power over the purse may, in fact, be regarded as the most complete and effectual weapon with which any constitution can arm the immediate representatives of the people for obtaining a redress of every grievance, and for carrying into effect every just and salutary measure.

Mr. Madison, who has been appropriately styled the "Father of the Constitution," here informs us that the power of this House over the purse, the power of framing appropriation bills, is a complete weapon for securing "every just and salutary measure" of legislation. The amendment now under consideration would put it in the power of one member to defeat all legislation on appropriation bills, and to prevent any reduction of expenditures below what are now authorized by law, unless by a two-thirds vote on Mondays the rule could be suspended. We have no right to yield one of the most important powers of this House to the minority. I propose to adhere to Rule 120 as it is. No change is demanded by the people. As Representatives we have no right to surrender our trusts. We must exercise the functions of Representatives in the interest of the people who sent us here. We have the right to make our own rules and to legislate in any manner we may deem best. I deny that any harm has resulted to the people from the operation of Rule 120. I will not consent to its repeal. It is a salutary rule, strictly in accordance with the Constitution of the United States.

The right to legislate upon appropriation bills is one of the surest and most important bulwarks which we have for defending the rights and the liberties of the people. It was never discovered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] that such was vicious legislation until Rule 120 was used by the majority of this House in the Forty-fourth Congress for securing a vast reduction of expenditures.

This rule has been used in the interest of the people to the extent of a reduction of public expenditures to the amount of $84,000,000 since the majority of this House passed under the control of members of the democratic party. We cannot surrender this power; we must not give it up. We must adhere to the rule as it is, for by it we have already saved many millions of dollars to the people, and if we adhere to it we will save millions more in the same way. Let us stand by this rule. It is the rule adopted by the democratic House of Representatives of the Forty-fourth Congress. We have adhered to it since that time; it has produced no bad results; but on the contrary it has secured many wise and salutary reforms and saved millions of dollars of the people's money.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHITE. I rise to make a proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to withdraw the amendment which I have offered to the second clause of Rule XXI, inasmuch as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SPEER] has given notice of his intention to offer an amendment to the next clause which will accomplish the same purpose. For that reason I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. Allow me to suggest to gentlemen on the other side that we pass without further debate the second clause, so that we may proceed to consider clause 3 in this rule.

Mr. WHITE. I offered my amendment as a new clause, but withdraw it for the purpose of allowing the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SPEER] to offer his amendment to the next clause.

The amendment of Mr. WHITE was accordingly withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

3. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Mr. SPEER. I move to amend the clause just read by striking out of the latter portion of it the words "except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures" and to insert in lieu thereof that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

But it shall be in order to strike out any sum of money in an appropriation bill and to insert a less sum.

The latter portion of clause 3 as propo d to be amended was as follows:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, but it shall be in order to strike out any sum of money in an appropriation bill and insert a less sum.

Mr. SPEER. I think that amendment will accomplish the object which is sought to be attained by all of those who desire to see general legislation divorced from the general appropriation bills; and it will also accomplish fully the object of retrenching expenditures when necessary.

Mr. Chairman, in presenting the reasons why general legislation should be divorced from the unnatural union with the appropriation bills, I protest that I am not, in the slightest degree, influenced by partisan feeling. I take no interest in the inquiry who began to affix riders to the appropriation bills. I shall not remind the republican party of the vital legislation they have accomplished by these methods, nor is it necessary for me to occupy the attention of the House in defending the motives of my democratic brethren, their patriotism, or the purity of their purposes in the uses they have made of the same resources.

Sir, if it is possible, at any time, to rise above the sordid considerations of party, it should be in the discussion of rules for the permanent guidance and control of the business of legislation by this House. Mr. Chairman, all men of all parties, it seems to me, must agree that the practice of attaching positive laws on other subjects or on any subject to the money bills of this House is a practice which finds no legitimate parentage in the Constitution of this Government, and is fraught with mischief which at any time and when least expected may become irreparable. To abolish the practice would be a stride in the advancement of political science which would excite the interest and the admiration of every intelligent patriot in this country.

In the discussion of questions like this we are to some extent remitted to the discussion of elementary principles. The three coordinate departments of our Government are supported by the appropriation bills of the House of Representatives. Have gentlemen considered what the failure of these bills means? I do not mean a temporary failure; I do not mean a failure which can be cured by an extra session of Congress, or which can be tided over by the credit of the Government; but I mean a refusal on the part of the people's Representatives to grant the money necessary to sustain the Government. Sir, it means anarchy; it means the paralysis of every department of this Government; it means the repudiation of the national debt; it means the destruction of the judiciary; it means the abdication of the Executive; it means the dispersal of Congress. Whenever the Representatives of the people permanently and continuously refuse to vote the people's money to sustain the people's Government red-handed revolution or the iron grasp of despotism will seize upon and ravage the unprotected heritage of freemen.

Mr. ATKINS. Has any party ever done that?

Mr. SPEER. I decline to yield to the gentleman. I am not discussing this with regard to party now. It may be very easily demonstrated that the practice of riders on the appropriation bills may at any time eventuate in the refusal of the supplies. If there is one national characteristic of the American people which is strong and intense, it is a strong and intense party spirit. If this characteristic finds unbounded expression and demonstration anywhere, I say with profound deference to this imposing presence it is in the House of Representatives. Now, sir, let us do what it is not very difficult to do. Let us suppose that the two great parties of this House are divided on what they conceive to be a vital political question. Let us suppose that the measure in which this vital political difference presents itself is in a rider on the Post-Office appropriation bill. Let us suppose that the party which is in a majority in this House is in a minority in the Senate; or that the occupant of the presidential chair belongs to the minority school, the Post-Office bill for the support of the post-routes and post-offices and mail carriers of the great and complicated and beneficent postal system of the United States passes the House with the rider attached.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The five minutes' time to which the gentleman is entitled has expired.

Mr. HAYES. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. SPEER].

The CHAIRMAN. That will be done if there be no objection.

Mr. COFFROTH. I object. [Cries of "Oh, no!" "Oh, no!" from different parts of the House.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his objection?

Mr. COFFROTH. I do not.

Mr. HAYES. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. It has been the custom here in discussing questions to allow that to be done.

Mr. COFFROTH. This discussion must stop at some time, and I propose to stand by the rule.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let somebody else speak in opposition to the amendment, and then the gentleman from Georgia can move an amendment to the amendment and speak on that.

Mr. MCMAHON. I do not see how that arrangement can be made under the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, of course, in recognizing gentlemen will endeavor to conform to the rules.

Mr. BLOUNT. I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COFFROTH] to withdraw his objection to my colleague's proceeding. There is nothing unusual in it; it has occurred in every session of every Congress.

Mr. SPEER. If the gentleman cannot bear to hear my argument, he can make his objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the objection is not withdrawn.

Mr. SPEER subsequently obtained the floor, and concluded as follows:

When interrupted I was giving a hypothetical case of the effect of a rider of political legislation on the Post-Office appropriation bill. The Senate refuses to concur. On a committee of conference, both the Senate and the House decline to recede from their positions. Neither party desires to strike down the postal system. The political rider is the rock on which they split. They are conscientious, and they will not surrender their convictions. They are firm, and they will not abate a jot or tittle of their just demands. The closing hour of the session approaches. The session expires. Not a dollar is voted for the maintenance of that system which to-day is one of the greatest agencies of civilization on the earth, without which no modern nation can preserve its decency, and whose destruction will carry confusion and misery and distress into the home of every American citizen. Sir, it is the political rider that has done the work. Sir, is this contingency impossible? Is the picture fancifully drawn? What man among you is there who can lay his hand on his heart and, with the history of this country in his memory, say that the conjuncture which I have foreboded is either impossible or improbable?

Mr. Chairman, to place a measure of general legislation on an appropriation bill which must of necessity be passed deprives the Representative of all opportunity of criticism or of independent action with regard to that measure. How is it possible in the closing hours of a session for the Representative to make his notions of right and wrong effective, when if he votes against the general legislation he must of necessity vote against the entire appropriation? He must vote for the bill, or he may defeat the appropriation. He surrenders, may be, his judgment and his conscience, and votes for the bill with the rider attached. Or he votes against it, and is liable to have his motives misconstrued, and not improbably will incur the disapproval of others when perhaps he least deserves it. But, sir, it is not alone the independence of the Representative to which this practice is inimical, but it is aimed likewise, whether intentionally or not it matters not, at the independence of the other branch of Congress and at the independence of the Executive.

Sir, the most admirable feature of our most admirable system is the complete independence of its co-ordinate branches. It was said by Hamilton, in the Federalist, along with his honest, zealous, luminous, and masterly advocacy of the Constitution, "that no political truth is of greater value, or stamped with the authority of more enlightened patrons of liberty, than that the legislative, executive, and judicial departments ought to be separate and distinct, and that if this Constitution was justly chargeable with a mixture of these powers no further argument would be necessary to inspire a universal reprobation of the system."

Montesquieu, before the day of Hamilton, in his oracular treatise on this subject, had declared "there can be no liberty where the legislative and executive powers are united in the same person or body of magistrates, or if the power of judging be not separated from the legislative and executive powers."

Now, sir, does not the political rider destroy this independence? Is it not intended as a threat to the Senate and to the Executive? Does it not impliedly declare that the money shall not be forthcoming to sustain the Government unless the Senate and the Executive will accede to the demands of the House of Representatives? We have, within the past decade, been regaled with a great deal of eloquence in the discussion of measures of this character on the subject of parliamentary heroism. What does parliamentary heroism in this connection mean? It means, sir, to refuse to vote the money unless the Senate or the Executive shall conclude to coincide with the House of Representatives.

Now, sir, is not this an illegitimate exercise of our prerogative? Has not the Senate the same constitutional right to pronounce upon the merits of a measure that we have? Has not the President, with the power of the veto, functions just as important toward the enactment of law as Congress itself? And yet, though it is our imperative duty to sustain all the departments, when we send the Senate and the President an appropriation bill, with the proviso attached, it means that we will consent to support the Government, provided you, the Senate, or you, the President, will consent to agree with our proviso. This is usurpation. This is the aggrandizement of senatorial prerogatives and the veto power in the House of Representatives. But, sir, there is another most insidious effect which this species of legislation may have upon the independence of the executive and judicial departments of the Government. I am discussing this question abstractly; I am speaking impersonally. I mean the facility it gives to Congress to withhold the salaries of the officers of these departments beyond the period of payment fixed by the Constitution. It is useless for gentlemen of an optimistic turn of mind to deny the proposition that the control over a man's salary is very likely to be a control over his will. Human nature is pretty much the same thing it always has been. We have advanced but very little toward that state of perfectibility which was imagined by Plato while dreaming in the gardens of the academy. It was for this reason that the Constitution wisely provides that the President shall receive for his services a salary which shall be paid at stated intervals, and shall neither be increased nor diminished during his term of office. In similar terms, it provides that the judges of the supreme and inferior courts shall at stated times receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office. The Constitution seeks to deprive Congress of the power of discretionary action with regard to the salaries of these officials.

Sir, I again cite the authority of Hamilton, whose splendid exposition of the Constitution cannot be too frequently or too carefully consulted by those who desire to place a patriotic and rightful interpretation upon that instrument. It is in the Federalist, in the seventy-third number, that he declares "the Legislature, with a discretionary power over the salary and emoluments of the Chief Magistrate, would render him as obsequious to their will as they might think proper to make him. They might in most cases either reduce him by famine or tempt him by largesses to surrender at discretion his judgment to their inclinations. There are men," he continues, "who could neither be distressed nor won into a sacrifice of their duty, but this stern virtue is the growth of few soils, and in the main it will be found that a power over a man's support is a power over his will. It is not competent for Congress to weaken the fortitude of the President by operating upon his necessities, nor corrupt his integrity by appealing to his avarice."

Sir, the same reasoning applies with equal force to the injurious effect on the independence of the judiciary, which a discretion to delay and refuse the salaries of the judges would occasion. But it will be contended that the political rider on the appropriation bill will not diminish the constitutional salaries of these officials. Sir, it will directly diminish such salaries. At best it postpones the payment. This deprives the President or the judge of the use and interest of his money, which is to diminish the salary. It does more. It violates that provision of the Constitution which declares that the salaries shall be paid at stated times. That is to say times which are to be fixed by law. To illustrate: the statutes now declare that the salary of the President shall be paid monthly. This was the law when he was inaugurated, and cannot lawfully and rightfully be changed so as to affect his salary during his term of office. In other words, he has an undeniable, vested right to monthly payments.

Now, sir, I ask what difference does it make to the rights of the President whether you postpone the payment of his salary until his term of office expires, or whether, because of a political rider on the appropriation bill about which you disagree, you do not vote the money to pay his salary until his term of office expires. To him the effect is the same. He is deprived of his money. The Constitution which sought to deny to the Legislature any control over the emoluments of the Chief Magistrate during his term of office is disregarded and nullified; and, dependent upon your caprice for a support, to recall the language of Hamilton, "you may reduce him by famine or tempt him by largesses to surrender his judgment to your inclinations." Sir, is it safe? Is it wise? Is it patriotic? Is it indicative of permanency and durability in our institutions when constitutional and fundamental distinctions are obliterated upon the merest pretext of the exigency of the moment, upon the most insufficient reason of party necessity?

Sir, gentlemen are fond of citing British precedents for the practice of refusing the supplies as a legitimate parliamentary resort. I should be delighted to hear the distinguished parliamentarians who so earnestly and zealously contend for the rider on the appropriation bills point out the analogy between the refusal of the British Parliament to vote a gratuity to a French sovereign to carry on one of his wars and the refusal of the American Congress to pay the men who have devoted the best years of their lives to the public service the compensation for their meritorious services. The cases are entirely dissimilar. When in British history, save in times of actual revolution, did this "parliamentary heroism" refuse to maintain every department of the government, from the chief-justice of the realm to the light-keeper on Eddystone Reef? The waves of party feeling have run as high in Great Britain as in America. They have submerged the lives and the reputations of the most illustrious patriots. They have dashed with all the fury which the whirlwind of passion could impart against the granitic foundation of that unwritten constitution. But, sir, the government was maintained in all of its usual functions; and though the eloquence of Pitt and Fox had lashed the public mind into a frenzy of sympathy, though the death grapple of Brougham and Canning made the world hold its breath, the British public were secure; they were confident; they did not question that their institutions would survive the struggle.

Sir, children yet unborn will pronounce blessings upon the Forty-sixth Congress of these United States, if by your wisdom you relieve the public mind from the possibility of apprehension that your institutions may be destroyed, your Government paralyzed, your departments disorganized, your armies disbanded, your fleets scattered like the Spanish armada, by withholding, from the excess of party spirit, the power to deprive this great Government of its usual, its legitimate, its necessary support. Sir, if gentlemen suppose that in this discussion of an abstract and yet a most practical question I have any allusion to the action of any party, they entirely mistake the scope of my remarks. I do not mean to say that any rider on any appropriation bill would have occasioned the consequences which I have depicted, but these are consequences which may ensue at any time, and this in itself is sufficient argument that the practice is to be deprecated, must be abandoned. Will it require any particular degree of fortitude or patriotism for gentlemen to support the reform which I advocate? I know that it will place it out of the power of the majority to repeal at present certain measures of political legislation which I most heartily desire should be blotted from the statute-book, but the good to be attained is worthy of that sacrifice.

Let us divorce general legislation from the appropriation bills. Let us enter up a decree of perpetual divorcement, and we will have given to the republican party, to the people, to history, and to the world a signal instance of what the Representatives of the American people are willing to do and to suffer in the cause of that free Government which was conveyed to them in title deeds indented with the good swords of their revolutionary sires. Sir, when the Continental Army, with unparalleled devotion to country and to liberty, had fought out the great battle of revolution which gave liberty to a continent and the hope of freedom to the world, in the hour of their final triumph insidious efforts were made to induce them to misuse the strength which had crowned their sacrificial struggles with victory. The poison worked rapidly, and the agitation of the troops was alarming. Washington, apprised of the designs of the mischievous advisers, appeared in a meeting of the general and field officers, and conjured them to adhere to the line of moderate counsels and patriotic duty.

By thus determining and thus acting—

Said he—

you will pursue the plain and direct road to the attainment of your wishes; you will defeat the insidious designs of your enemies, who are compelled to resort from open force to secret artifice; you will give one more signal proof of unexampled patriotism and patient virtue, rising superior to the pressure of the most complicated sufferings, and you will, by the dignity of your conduct, afford occasion for posterity to say, when speaking of the glorious example you have exhibited to mankind, "had this day been wanting, the world had never seen the last stage of perfection to which human nature is capable of attaining."

Sir, under changed conditions this House may profit by the timely admonitions of Washington. The peace of the country, the regular discharge of all the functions of the Government, the confidence of our commercial and industrial interests, the quiet of the public mind, and above all, the supreme necessity of maintaining the Government, are so far superior to the importance of any mere party victory that reason will not brook hesitation, and patriotism but obeys the dictates of reason.

Sir, as no man can question the consistency of my opinions upon this subject, so no man should doubt the sincerity of my convictions or the patriotism of my motives. Sir, I reiterate that the political rider on the appropriation bill imports that the money to maintain this Government may be refused at any moment. Refuse the supplies, and your Government will be first palsied, then paralyzed; refuse the supplies, and the mariner, as he approaches your shores, will look in vain for the welcome ray of the light-house to warn him from hidden dangers or to direct him to the secure harbor and the placid roadstead; refuse the supplies, and thousands of families of innocent women and children who depend for their support on the good faith of the Government will suffer from hunger and penury; refuse the supplies, and in the absence of the gallant defenders of our border the vile peons and fierce banditti of Mexico will sweep across the frontier, and devastation and robbery, rapine and murder will mark the places once the happy homes of your citizens. Leave the Indian frontier unprotected, give unrestrained license to the cruel tribes of merciless and revengeful savages, even now with difficulty restrained by the mailed hand of the Government, and picture, if you can, the shapes of terror and despair which will sit for household gods upon the hearths of the people of your western borders. Refuse the supplies, and you shake the credit of the Government at home and abroad; you humiliate the American people; you shake the confidence of the world in the stability of our institutions; and instead of a secure, and peaceful, and prosperous country of refuge for the toiling subjects of despotism and victims of tyranny in the Old World, you will afford the spectacle of a decaying republic, a government torn by great and ambitious factions, and where power has usurped the prerogative of the law.

Sir, I do not arrogate to myself any love of country superior to those with whom I am associated. I am sure it is the proudest delight of the American citizen to dwell upon the marvelous future which it requires no prophetic eye to see is the inheritance of this great Union of States. There is but one danger ahead of us, and that is that we may be induced to take some departure from the Constitution. As long as we hold to this rock we are safe. There is no wave of popular commotion strong enough to sweep us down. Let us hold to the Constitution; let us support the Government; then, esteeming country superior to party; then on the plane of a common humanity, a common destiny, a common brotherhood, a common country, oblivious of the past, let us labor to protect the liberties, to increase the happiness of the Union, and to augment the prosperity of that goodly heritage with which Divine Providence has blessed the American people.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall try to continue this discussion in the good temper manifested by my friend from Georgia. I speak now utterly without regard to partisan views, and my argument will be chiefly historical.

Attention was called during the debates of the extra session last summer to the existing rule of the British House of Lords which prevents "tacking," as the phrase there is, to appropriation or "supply" bills in the House of Commons, the express purpose of that rule being to protect the House of Lords in the exercise of its independent judgment. This question has not been without discussion and consideration in this country outside of this House, and long before either of the present political parties had in view any partisan purpose in connection with this question. I have collated references to the constitutions of all the States of the Union, and I will briefly refer to them.

Alabama in her constitution of 1865 provided that "each law shall embrace but one subject, which shall be described in the title." The constitution adopted by the same State in 1875 contains this provision:

Each law shall contain but one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title, except general appropriation bills, general revenue bills, and bills adopting a code, digest, or revision of statutes.

The constitution of Arkansas adopted in 1868 provided that—

No act shall embrace more than one subject, and that shall be embraced in its title.

The constitution of the same State adopted in 1874 provides—

The general appropriation bill shall embrace nothing but appropriations for the ordinary expenses of the executive, legislative, and judicial departments of the State. All other appropriations shall be made by separate bills, each embracing but one subject.

The constitution of California adopted in 1849 (I have not the last one) declares—

Every law enacted by the Legislature shall embrace but one object.

Colorado in her constitution adopted in 1876 has provided—

No bill, except general appropriation bills, shall be passed containing but one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title.

And any such act is made void as to so much as is not expressed in its title.

The constitution of Connecticut, which was adopted in 1818, contains nothing on this subject.

Delaware by constitution adopted in 1831 provides that—

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the house of representatives; * * * nor shall any matter or clause whatever, not immediately relating to and necessary for raising revenue, be in any manner blended with or annexed to a bill for raising revenue.

Several of the State constitutions contain provisions of this character, which are equivalent to a prohibition of legislation on appropriation bills, because in the olden time many of the States did not, as some do not now, pass annual appropriation bills, but had standing laws under which the annual expenditures were made.

Florida in her Constitution of 1868 has declared—

Each law enacted in the Legislature shall embrace but one subject, and matters properly connected therewith, which subject shall be briefly expressed in the title.

The constitution of Georgia, adopted in 1865, contains the following:

Nor shall any law or ordinance be passed which refers to more than one subject-matter, or contains matter different from what is expressed in the title thereof.

The constitution of the same State, adopted in 1868, contains the same provision. The constitution of Illinois, adopted in 1870, provides:

No act hereafter passed shall embrace more than one subject, and that expressed in the title.

And an act is made void as to so much as is not expressed in the title. Indiana in her constitution of 1851 has declared:

Every act shall embrace but one subject and matters properly connected therewith, which subject shall be expressed in the title.

Any provision in violation of this is declared void.

The constitution of Iowa, adopted in 1857, contains the same provision as that I have just read from the constitution of Indiana. Kansas in her constitution of 1855 (and substantially in the constitutions of 1857, 1858, and 1859) provides:

Every act shall contain but one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title.

Kentucky, by her constitution of 1799, provides that revenue bills shall originate in the house, but the senate may amend, not introducing new matter not relating to raising revenue. Her constitution adopted in 1850 contains a similar provision.

A clause of the same kind is to be found in the constitutions of Louisiana, as adopted in 1812, 1845, 1852, and 1868. As to the last constitution of Louisiana I have no information. A similar provision is found in the constitution of Maine, adopted in 1820.

Now I call the attention of members, and especially of my friends from Maryland, to the constitution of that State adopted in 1776—a very good year. The section on this subject is a very strong one, giving the reason why legislation should not be contained in "money bills;" namely:

That the senate may be at full and perfect liberty to exercise their judgment in passing laws, and that they may not be compelled by the house of delegates either to reject a money bill which the emergency of affairs may require or to assent to some other act of legislation, in their conscience and judgment injurious to the public welfare, &c.

The house of delegates is forbidden to blend with bills to raise or apply money any matter not immediately relating thereto and necessary therefor.

The constitution of the same State adopted in 1851 declares:

Every law enacted by the Legislature shall embrace but one subject, and that shall be described in the title.

The constitutions of the same State adopted in 1864 and 1867 contain a similar provision.

Massachusetts retains her old constitution of 1780, which contains nothing directly on this subject, except the provision that money bills shall originate in the house and the senate may amend such bills.

The constitution of Michigan adopted in 1835 does not touch this subject; that of 1850 provides that:

No law shall embrace more than one subject, which shall be expressed in the title.

The constitution of Minnesota, adopted in 1857, and the constitutions of Mississippi, adopted in 1817, 1832, and 1868, contain no provisions on this subject. Missouri, in her constitution of 1865, has declared—

No law enacted by the General Assembly shall relate to more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title.

It is provided that anything further than this shall be void. And a constitutional provision of 1875 is to the same effect.

Nebraska, by a constitutional provision adopted in 1866, and again in 1875, provided that—

No bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in the title.

The constitution of Nevada, adopted in 1864, contains the following:

Each law enacted by the Legislature shall embrace but one subject and matter properly connected therewith, which subject shall be briefly expressed in the title.

New Hampshire, having no constitution of later date than 1792, has no provision on this subject.

I come now to the constitution of New Jersey, adopted in 1844, before these contests had begun. Hear this provision from the constitution of New Jersey:

To avoid improper influences which may result from intermixing in one and the same act such things as have no proper relation to each other, every law shall embrace but one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title.

I next read from the constitution of New York, adopted in 1846:

No private or local bill which may be passed by the Legislature shall embrace more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title.

But although New York has no direct provision on this subject as to general legislation, her constitution allows the governor to veto one or more items in an appropriation bill, while approving other portions of the bill, thus enabling the executive to escape the compulsion of "tacking."

The constitution of North Carolina adopted in 1876 contains no provision on this subject. Ohio, in her constitution of 1851, has declared—

No bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title.

Oregon, in her constitution of 1857, has provided—

Every act shall embrace but one subject and matters properly connected therewith, which subject shall be expressed in the title.

Pennsylvania, by constitutional provision adopted in 1873, has declared—

No law shall be passed except by bill; and no bill shall be so altered or amended on its passage through either House as to change its original purpose.

No bill except general appropriation bills shall be passed containing more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title.

And furthermore, the governor shall have "power to disapprove of any item or items of any bill making appropriations of money making distinct items," the items so disapproved to be subject to the limitations prescribed for other bills vetoed.

Rhode Island, whose constitution was adopted in 1841, has no provision on this subject.

The constitutions adopted by South Carolina in 1865 and 1868 respectively contain the following:

Every act or resolution having the force of law shall relate to but one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title.

The constitution of Tennessee adopted in 1870 provides—

No bill shall become a law which embraces more than one subject, that subject to be embraced in the title.

Texas, by constitutions adopted respectively in 1866, 1868, and 1876, gives the governor power to veto separate items of appropriation bills while approving others, and he is allowed twenty days after the adjournment of the Legislature to decide upon approval or disapproval and make proclamation thereof. The constitution of 1876 also provides:

No bill (except general appropriation bills which may embrace the various subjects and accounts for and on account of which moneys are appropriated) shall contain more than one subject, which shall be expressed in its title.

And so much as is not thus expressed is to be void. I consider the constitutional provisions of Texas and Pennsylvania the best on the subject to be found in the Union, and they completely protect the several branches of their government from the tyranny of legislation in money bills.

The constitution of Vermont, adopted in 1793, contains nothing on this subject. Virginia, in her constitutions of 1850, 1864, and 1870, respectively, has provided that—

No law shall embrace more than one object, which shall be expressed in its title.

The constitution of West Virginia, adopted in 1861-'63, corresponds on this subject with that of old Virginia. The constitution of 1872 declares that—

No act hereafter passed shall embrace more than one object, and that shall be embraced in its title.

Anything further is declared to be void.

Wisconsin, by her constitution of 1848, provides merely that private or local bills shall contain one subject.

By this review it will be seen that the constitutions of twenty-five States imperatively forbid that bills shall embrace more than one subject. Some of them give emphatic reasons, such as republicans have urged here in debate. In some cases the provisions are minute and careful, and in some the governor is permitted to veto items or parts of appropriation bills while approving the remainder. Five constitutions, ranging between 1779 and 1780 and 1831, assert the same principle and aim at the same effect by giving the initiative in revenue bills to the lower house and forbidding the upper house to add any foreign matter. These may properly be included, so that we have thirty of the thirty-eight State constitutions, ranging in their years of birth from 1776 to 1876, under federal, democratic, whig, republican, and other party auspices, North and South, East and West, before, during, and since the rebellion, which give solemn and deliberate judgment against that oppressive and revolutionary combination of "money" or "supply" or "appropriation" bills with general legislation which the democratic party is seeking to maintain in the face of the wisest precedents in the history of modern parliamentary government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I perfectly agree with my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] that we ought if possible to guard our appropriation bills against these extraneous matters. I know that all at once, on the other side of the House, since they are in a minority, there is an impulse to cut off all "riders" from appropriation bills. I applaud the diligence of the gentleman from Connecticut in making this collation of authorities. I made the same point at the extra session of this Congress, as will be found by reference to my speech of April 17, 1879; but I made one important reservation. While I would not encourage a loose construction of Rule 120, while I would not pile upon appropriation bills whole codes of legislation, I would nevertheless, under a fair ruling of the Speaker, use that rule for retrenchment. I would not, if I could help it, use it for other purposes except this: I would resort to "riders" for the purpose of repealing laws which had been enacted in the form of "riders." This is what I said at the extra session—to repeal a mischievous law by legislation upon an appropriation bill is by no means a similar case with its enactment. I would use this power in a negative way to strike down vicious legislation.

Rule 120 has served a noble purpose. It enabled the Committee on Appropriations in the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress to cut down the estimates from $65,000,465.77 to $40,430,172—a saving of $25,000,000. The House also under this rule made a reduction of nearly $26,000,000 upon the estimates, and a reduction of nearly $25,000,000 upon the appropriations of the year before. Thus at the lowest calculation we saved that Congress about $40,000,000 as claimed by the Speaker of this House and other gentlemen, basing their calculation upon tabular statements. Even on the other side of the House it was confessed—notably by the present governor of Ohio, Mr. Foster—that by this rule we had saved in our legislation during the Forty-fourth Congress $21,000,000 per annum.

Why did not gentlemen on the other side commence their saving after the war? Ten years after the war they had the opportunity had they followed democratic precedent to have saved over $200,000,000, and yet the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] talks about airing the democratic party. He says the country is all the better when it is aired. Why, Mr. Chairman, if airing the extravagance of the republican side of the House does it any harm we will keep on airing it. The people like economy. If we could have saved over $200,000,000 under this rule, let us stand by the rule, giving it a proper interpretation. If the gentleman wants to go before the people with such an exhibit, let him go.

He says with the hilarity which becomes such prophecies, when we go to the people we will be beaten. I do not know about that. I never crow until I am over or out of the woods. It would not be wise for the gentleman to talk about what will be the future. One thing is sure, however, and that is that out of the black mud of radical abomination there did arise economy, there did arise the lily of democracy. [Applause.]

Mr. SPEER. I will withdraw my amendment for the present and yield to the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. LOWE. I offer the following amendment as a proviso to the third paragraph, and ask that it be reported to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, however, That no provision or amendment of a partisan character shall be in order.

Mr. LOWE. The rule, Mr. Chairman, under consideration, is fair on its face; it retrenches expenditures and favors economy. But, sir, the power it confers on the committee "to change existing law" is of a doubtful, if not dangerous character. It was used during the extra session, may I not say abused, to intrude politics into the appropriation bills; and to needlessly alarm and agitate the country. We all remember, indeed, sir, we can never forget, what a gust of passion arose in the House and swept over the nation. I am sure that none of us are willing to invite a recurrence of such scenes. I thought then as I think now—reflection confirms my opinion—that political riders on bills essential to the Government are unwise in practice, revolutionary in tendency, and contrary to the spirit and genius of the Constitution. They call in question the veto power, and attack the executive department. The President's right to veto a bill is, of course, as absolute as the right of Congress to pass it. It is an express grant of power. But Congress denies, in effect, this right when we force the Executive to exercise it with peril to his conscience or to his administration; when we place him in a dilemma, with the alternative to yield his political convictions or to stop the Government. In other words, sir, we virtually deny his right to veto.

The departments, Mr. Chairman, are co-ordinate branches of the Government, and under the organic law each is, of course, absolutely independent of the others. "This," in the language of Mr. Calhoun, "is the beautiful and profound system established by the Constitution." I speak, sir, as a democrat—a federalist. The whole current of authority sustains me. The preservation of the rights of the States, which are but the reserve powers of the people, has always been a cardinal doctrine of the democratic party. But not more so—not older in point of time, nor more sanctioned by reason and authority—than the doctrine of the limitations of the departments; the freedom of each from the others and the restriction of all to their exact duties under the Constitution. Indeed, sir, the rights of the States and the autonomy of the departments are connected as interdependent, constitutional questions. Under that system, fairly enforced, I am not afraid of the power of the Executive. Aside from other considerations, impeachment is an all-sufficient check upon him.

If danger shall threaten our institutions, it will not develop itself, I think, in that Department. The great Carolinian to whom I have already referred, in his luminous and exhaustive argument in favor of the veto power, enlarges upon its "conservative character" and "salutary, restraining influence;" upon its tendency to "soften sectional feeling and party spirit," and to bring out "a more full and perfect response from the voice of the people." Indeed, sir, Mr. Calhoun did not distrust, but rather sought to magnify the veto power. And this is true also of Mr. Jefferson. Although jealous and distrustful of all government, he had but little apprehension from "the one-man power" in this country. He feared at first the Federal judiciary, "the sappers and miners of the Constitution;" but subsequently, later in life, he expressed the gravest fears from "the turbulence and aggressions of the legislative department." This also was Mr. Madison's opinion, and shared to a large extent by Mr. Hamilton, Judge Marshall, and the earlier writers on our Government; and I may add that this is also the recent view of the venerable and illustrious author of "The War Between the States." I regret, sir, that my own humble observation and limited experience leads me to the same conclusion.

If danger ever assails our institutions from within the system, I fear it is more likely to come, and more dangerous when it does come, not from the veto, but from an oligarchy in Congress led away by party passion and inflamed with the lust of party power. We hold the discretionary authority, necessarily indefinite, to enforce express grants by "appropriate legislation." Nothing is more liable to perversion and abuse. And moreover, sir, we must consider that almost every encroachment by Congress tends to facilitate and open the way to aggressions from the other departments; increasing, for instance, the patronage of the Executive and enlarging the jurisdiction of the courts. I think, therefore, in view of these and other considerations, that the veto power imposed by the Constitution as a check on Congress is a wise and wholesome restraint. It should be preserved in all its constitutional vigor. The Executive himself is more liable to lose than to gain by its exercise; more likely, in the nature of things, to relinquish than to acquire power.

Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a valuable relic, preserved in the Library of the House, an original copy of the confederate constitution. This document—the wisdom of the South after eighty years' experience in the old Government—is a strong and pertinent authority to the point under present discussion. It enlarges the veto power. It gives the President the right to "approve any appropriation and to disapprove any other appropriation in the same bill." It embodies in an express provision the canon of parliamentary law we now seek to enforce. This certainly is good democratic authority, or used to be, for one side of this House; and must also commend itself to the republicans here as an advanced position of hostility to "coercing the Executive," or to "starving the Government." It obviates, in the outset, every possibility of conflict between the two departments. The House, moreover, has not forgotten that President Grant in his annual message in 1873 advised an amendment to the Federal Constitution very similar to the provision I have quoted from that of the confederacy. It seems that having captured that constitution in war he was wise enough to utilize it in peace.

Indeed, sir, his language and purpose seem to go as far if not farther in the line of executive power than was contemplated by the South. He recommends that the President be authorized to "approve so much of any measure of Congress as his judgment might dictate, without approving the whole;" not appropriations alone, but "any measure of Congress." And why not? It would allow the Executive, by his own veto, without the need of this rule, to protect himself and party, and would to that extent be an additional check upon Congress.

This, Mr. Chairman, has, of late years, been the general drift of public sentiment throughout the country. Identical provisions, or provisions very much to the same effect, may be found in all the recently revised State constitutions—in those of Alabama, Arkansas, Illinois, Texas, Georgia, Louisiana, Maryland, Missouri, Nebraska, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and West Virginia; and also in the legislative enactments and parliamentary rules of a majority of the States. They are all designed, sir, and wisely designed, to preserve the executive from usurpations by the Legislature.

It may be remembered, sir, that during the extra session I moved to strike the rider from the Army appropriation bill, because I thought then, as I think now, that it was an encroachment by Congress upon the Executive. I sought in vain to save the House and the country from the evil results that have since accrued in the defeat of the democratic party and the triumph of the united North over the solid South on sectional and sentimental issues. I never doubted the honest but rather small economies of this rule. I never questioned the thrifty motives of the majority. I think I fully appreciated their position. In fact, sir, we were very well agreed on measures, but differed as to means. I opposed the so-called "army at the polls"—an imaginary, fictitious evil—and also "political oaths" and "partisan juries;" but neither then nor now, sir, would I seek to enforce my opposition by doubtful and absurdly inadequate methods.

To be candid, sir, we all know that the extra session was, at bottom, a party fight for power—a struggle for position in 1880 between a Congress of one party and an Executive of the other. The issues have passed away as if they had never been, coming and going at the instance of a few men in this House. But it may be well, in the calmness of this moment, to inquire what interest the people, the country at large, had in that struggle. If I am not greatly mistaken they had this interest, from first to last, whether of one side or the other, to keep each department within the prescribed limits of the Constitution and laws. The mere contest for party power seems over, but, sir, that paramount and abiding interest remains. That is the only concern I feel in the result of this debate and in the final action of the House.

Mr. Chairman, it is objected that my proviso gives whoever may be Speaker the right to judge what constitutes a "partisan amendment." I am aware of the apparent force of this objection. The power to decide is discretionary, and therefore indefinite; but I am reluctant to believe that any one chosen to the high position of Speaker would basely stultify himself before the House and the country. It will, of course, be a matter of personal judgment and conscience. But in the light of this contemporaneous debate, no honest mind could well doubt as to what is meant by an "amendment of a partisan character." But if by possibility any doubt should arise, we would not be remediless; we would have a remedy in an appeal to the House. And that remedy, under the circumstances, would be absolute and conclusive; for if the members voting on the appeal should actually divide on the lines of party, that fact of itself would ascertain the truth, vindicate the minority, and sustain the subsequent veto of the Executive.

But, sir, I am not wedded to my own proposition. I would gladly abandon it for something better. I should prefer to retain the economic features of the rule with my amendment as a proviso against perversion and abuse. But, if necessary to enforce the general views I have expressed, I will vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER,] or for the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. SPEER,] and act outright with those who oppose all general legislation on these bills. I believe a majority of the committee desire to settle this vexed question now, as far as the rules can settle it. An amendment to the Constitution such as that adopted by the confederacy, or as that recommended by President Grant, would no doubt be the most efficient remedy; but in the absence of such provision I favor the next best thing that can be done by the House. I trust both sides will come to some agreement to abandon the vicious and dangerous practices which of late years, under both parties, have grown out of this rule, and to return to the normal and legitimate methods of legislation.

Mr. McLANE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment and support the original rule. I am very much struck with the fact that all the opposition to this rule, although it develops the charge of partisanship against those who advocate it, I am struck by the fact—I say, that the whole spirit of the opposition to the rule is a partisan spirit. The rule itself is the rule of this House under the Constitution of the United States, and it might with perfect propriety allow all legislation on appropriation bills, so far as the Senate is concerned, and so far as the Executive is concerned. The Senate now do permit legislation on appropriation bills and nobody has ever contended that the rules of the two bodies ought to be uniform; or that we had any right to complain that the Senate permitted original legislation on appropriation bills, provided we of the House enjoyed our right to originate the title. This right to originate is our only constitutional right; that once settled, each House is left to its own discretion as to how it shall regulate itself in the details of legislation.

The truth is that all that can be said against the rule is against the administration of the rule. It is the abuse of the rule and not the rule itself; and gentlemen who now oppose the rule have throughout the whole history of this country, so far as its political organization is concerned, set the example of excessive abuse of the rule. The gentlemen on the other side of the House have for twenty years given the very construction to the rule which they now oppose. It is the abuse of the rule, and the abuse of the rule as developed by the republican party for the last twenty years, to which all criticism and reproach and all opposition should be directed. By the rule it is intended to have a sure rule for conservative legislation. The rule itself confines legislation to the objects authorized by law. It is, therefore, in its essence exactly what gentlemen on that side of the House say it ought to be. In so far as it has been extended beyond objects authorized by law, it confers a power to reduce expenditures authorized by law. There is nothing in the rule which justifies new legislation or increased expenditure. The gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. SPEER,] who was interrupted in his speech, had developed it just enough to make the point that this rule admits of riders to appropriation bills. It admits of no such thing. It is the abuse of the rule through which you reach riders; and those who encourage the gentleman from Georgia in his opposition are those who have most abused it and yet declaim against it. The rule itself confines legislation to objects authorized by law, and then confers upon this House the right to reduce all expenditures already authorized by law.

That the rule has been abused is an open secret; and I say, without fear of contradiction, that the abuse of this rule since it was made a rule has been all the time, until the Forty-fourth Congress, under the control of the other side of the House. We have had no opportunity to abuse it, and there is no necessity for any democrat to feel himself embarrassed by an allegation that he has abused this rule. The democratic party have not had power in this House for twenty years nearly prior to the Forty-fourth Congress. When the latter part of this rule was adopted they obtained power in that Congress, when this rule was modified and used to retrench expenditures.

In so far as it has been loosely construed by the democratic House, we have but followed the acknowledged established precedent of gentlemen on the other side of this House when the whole Government was controlled by the republican party. And it seems to me out of all reason that gentlemen should place their opposition upon an allegation so totally unfounded in fact as that which is alleged that these "riders" to appropriation bills are part of the policy of the democratic party. It will be well to adhere to the original rule, as modified in the Forty-fourth Congress, and to the policy of retrenchment and reform then inaugurated.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPEER. I move as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. LOWE] the following:

After the word "order," next to the last line, insert the words: "but it shall be in order to strike out any sum of money in an appropriation bill and insert a less sum."

Mr. SPEER took the floor and concluded his speech. [See page 854.]

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, my colleague [Mr. SPEER] unfortunately confines himself to a single illustration of the use of this rule, and bases his entire argument on that single condition of facts. The question is whether there shall be any change of this rule, and whether or not you shall legislate on an appropriation bill at all. That is the question. Gentlemen may attempt to devise language with great ingenuity, but when they come to put it into practice it will be found at last it is but the simple question whether we can legislate on appropriation bills.

My colleague suggests in his amendment we may legislate to reduce the amount. Suppose that be adopted, and you provide for reduction on appropriation bills of the compensation of postmasters, reducing the amount appropriated for their salaries? Suppose you reduce the amount to be paid to railroad companies? Suppose you provide for reduction in any branch of the public service? Now, will any gentleman undertake to say that this Government is not bound by the amount of compensation which the law prescribes, and not the amount voted in the appropriation bill? The result of such a course, in providing not for a change of the law, but simply as my colleague proposes for reducing the amount appropriated would create only a deficiency of appropriation which would have to be supplied afterward. The party whose compensation was reduced would come here and say, "Your law prescribes I shall have a certain salary for the discharge of the duties of the office which I hold, and you have not in the appropriation bill provided enough to pay that salary." That is the attitude in which we would be placed by the adoption of the amendment of my colleague; and if we should reduce the appropriations without changing the law, we should be constantly asked to pay claims for the balance of the amount due under the law.

Gentlemen on the other side suggest we should provide there should be no partisan legislation allowed on appropriation bills. What is partisan legislation? Has it any technical signification? How do we understand there is a party issue upon any proposition? That is to be developed hereafter when it is brought before the House for action. Differences cannot occur until the question has been presented.

Gentlemen may resort to all the ingenuity of which they are capable, and yet they come back at last to whether or not we shall legislate on appropriation bills. Let us see what we find there. My colleague from Georgia has supposed a case full of dire disaster as he thinks. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] said the extra session, brought about by the unwisdom of the democratic party, was the result of just such legislation. Now, if the country condemns our action what better conservative force does he want. So far as my colleague's fears are concerned, I undertake to say the time will never come when this Government will perish by the failure to pass appropriation bills. No gentleman here believes it.

My colleague gave an instance from the post-office service. Let me state to him that postmasters of this country, some of them, under an honest administration of the law, were getting salaries of $200. By a dishonest construction of that law, and by a false return and fraudulent sale of postage-stamps, those salaries were in some instances run up to three or four thousand dollars instead of what the law prescribed. There had been no legislation on it. When we came to consider the wants of the Government service we inserted legislation which saved on that item alone from eight hundred to nine hundred thousand dollars. And so in reference to railroads. In the Forty-fourth Congress we saved over a million of dollars in compensation to railroads. In the Forty-fifth Congress we saved still further by reducing the pay of railroads for transportation of mails to the extent of a half million of dollars by legislation, under this rule, on appropriation bills. Such items have been running for years and years through the appropriation bills, and I undertake to say that there has not been less than $100,000,000 saved to the people of this country by this kind of legislation. I hope this House, therefore, will not deny to itself the power that every preceding House of Representatives has possessed since the foundation of the Government. For one, I am willing to trust the representatives of the people.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of obtaining an order from the House to close debate upon this clause.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let us take a vote now.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If the committee will agree to vote now I will withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] is on the floor. After he has spoken the Chair will decide that further debate will not be in order.

Mr. HOOKER. Can the Chair decide that until an order is given by the House to close debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can decide that there cannot be further debate until a vote has been taken upon some one of the amendments.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I withdraw the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. MILLS. I shall vote most cheerfully for the substitute offered by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. SPEER.] I voted in the Forty-fourth Congress, when the party on this side of the House came first into power, for the amendment to the rule which it is now sought to repeal. I have seen some beneficial results from that rule, and I have seen some injurious results from it. I will not now stop to draw a comparison between the good and the bad and sum up the balance of accounts. If it has been a good amendment to the rule, I think it has served out the period of its usefulness, and ought to be repealed.

I have two or three strong objections to that rule. Under the decisions of the Chair anything that is at all akin to the question before the House on an appropriation bill, if it reduces expenditure one farthing, is legitimate to be offered as an amendment. Now, I do not object to the power or privilege which this rule gives to the House of reducing an appropriation, for that is granted in the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia. But the part of the rule that I think is injurious to good legislation is that which authorizes the bringing in of every possible subject and placing it upon appropriation bills. It gives the Committee on Appropriations full sweep over the whole laws of the United States. It breaks down every barrier. It authorizes that committee to dictate every issue that is presented to the people of the United States. It matters not, sir, what may be the public opinion of the United States on any question; it is the party leaders of this House who have the bringing before the House the appropriation bills, and if they desire to thwart that public opinion, they have but to array their party upon this floor upon the question they may choose to make the issue and sound the bugle, and then the party is irrevocably committed to it.

Gentlemen speak of the great victories of retrenchment under this rule, but they fail to tell us where taxation upon the people has been reduced, and that is the very soul of retrenchment. I ask gentlemen to tell me where a farthing of taxation has been reduced under the influence of this rule. The people have been complaining of an unjust system of taxation ever since we have had control of this Government; and our party, when it went into the canvass in 1876, arraigned a system of collecting the customs revenue as one that took from the pockets of the laboring people of this country five dollars for every one that it carried into the Treasury. But gentlemen committed to that doctrine cannot point to one single solitary bill proposing to reduce that taxation which has been brought before the House with any hope of obtaining its passage.

It has been found that upon this single question of retrenchment of expenditures we have a united party, and hence it becomes necessary to save this one plank upon which a united party may stand. At the same time, the section from which I come is to be paraded before the people of the United States every time an appropriation bill is presented to this House, and blows must be dealt upon the heads of the people of that section in connection with the various measures proposed upon appropriation bills. If victory results from this, it is not for their benefit; but if defeat come, every friend withdraws from them, and all the blows fall solitary and alone upon their heads.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOOKER rose.

Mr. HAYES. I desire to make a privileged motion. If we are not to get a vote at this time, I move that the committee rise for the purpose of obtaining an order from the House to close debate.

Mr. HOOKER. Can the gentleman make that motion while I am on the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. He cannot while the gentleman from Mississippi is on the floor.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is not debate exhausted on the pending amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been exhausted upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. LOWE,] and also upon the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. SPEER.] But the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] has been recognized to move to strike out the last word of the substitute. Upon that amendment there may be two speeches, one in support of the amendment and one in reply.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is not that an amendment in the third degree?

Mr. HOOKER. It is not, according to the construction of the rule that has governed the committee heretofore.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi moves to amend the substitute—treating the substitute as an independent proposition. His amendment, therefore, is not an amendment in the third degree. The gentleman from Mississippi is entitled to the floor and will proceed.

Mr. HOOKER. In answer to what has fallen from the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SPEER] in support of the substitute he has offered, and in answer to what has fallen from my friend from Texas, let me say that I think the committee had better possess itself of the rule which has been reported to the House and ascertain in what respect the substitute proposes to change it. I will not weary the committee by reading it. But I will state that the rule as now reported was adopted on the motion of a gentleman from Indiana who stood upon this floor as probably one of the soundest and most practical legislators that ever served the country on either side of this House—I allude to Mr. Holman, of Indiana. He was the author of this amendment as it now stands in the rules as they now are, and as it stands in the rules now reported by this committee. The object and purpose of it was to restrict the abuse which had been made by the republican party of the power to place riders upon appropriation bills; and this amendment offered by Mr. Holman and ingrafted upon the rules of the House in the Forty-fourth Congress, and now reported by the Committee on Rules, requires three conditions before there can be a change of law upon appropriation bills.

There must be three things: primarily there must be a proposition to change existing law; next, the subject-matter must be germane to the bill under consideration; and, thirdly, it must look to the reduction of expenditures. Therefore under the rule as it now exists, and under the rule as reported by the Committee on Rules, so far from the power of the Appropriations Committee being enlarged by the amendment to the rules offered by Mr. Holman, it was restricted and cut down and limited and restrained. That amendment had not for its function or its purpose the enlargement of the power of the Committee on Appropriations. It limited the power from what it had been when the republican party had control, when the power existed of offering any and every proposition by way of amendment. It limited it to the extent that it required the proposition to be germane to the subject-matter of the bill and to limit expenditures. To that extent only could any proposition be attached to an appropriation bill changing existing law.

But I am opposed to a change of the rule for a higher consideration than that. It has sometimes been asserted that the power of the House of Representatives as established by our Constitution was not analogous to the power of the English House of Commons over the subject of granting money. I deny that that is a true construction of the power of this House under the Constitution of this country. I would be sorry to vote for any measure or any proposition which should look to the stripping of this House of the right and the power to say that which, under the Constitution, this department of the Government alone can say: when and how and where and under what circumstances money shall be taken from the public Treasury. Any proposition which looks to a reduction of the power of this House, to a restraining of the power of the House, to a limiting of the power of the House over the question of granting the public money, ought never to be adopted by the House whatever party may be in power.

I oppose this amendment and favor the rule as it now stands, because that rule does give to the House the power to say that existing law may be changed by an amendment offered to an appropriation bill, if that amendment be germane to the subject-matter of the bill and tends also to the reduction of expenditures.

This House, under the Constitution and the laws, alone has the power to originate money bills. It is said by gentlemen arguing this question that this House would have the right to put a veto on the action of the Senate and a veto on the Executive. Sir, I admit that is so; and I say with the author quoted by a gentleman on the other side, the great Calhoun, when interpreting this question, that this exercise of the veto power by the one House over the other, and by the Executive over both, only serves to strike another chord in the popular voice, and to bring it out in more full and perfect harmony.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I will detain the committee but a moment or two only. I am in favor of the proposed modification of this rule. I believe it is demanded by the present interests of the country and much more by its future interests. Let us, for a moment, look at this question without regarding it as a partisan question. What is the object of all rules? It is to secure the intelligent and prompt dispatch of the public business to be brought before a legislative body. What is the necessity for committees of the House? It is to so divide the labors of that body that its work may be brought in before the House in an intelligent shape, as the result of the labors of those committees.

Now, if all the business of the House is to be subject to and controlled by one committee, what necessity is there for dividing that work among the several committees? If the Committee on Appropriations is to determine the character of the legislation to be presented to this House, then why organize committees upon any other subject than that of appropriations?

It is said that this proposition, if adopted, will deny to the representatives of the people the right to withhold appropriations. I ask, is it necessary to have a rider on an appropriation bill in order to get me to withhold my assent from it? If the Army is used to oppress the people of the United States, is it necessary that I should affix a political or legislative rider to the Army appropriation bill? Sir, it is my duty under the Constitution, if I believe the appropriations for the maintenance of the Army are being used illegally, tyrannically, and corruptly, to refuse to vote for the regular Army appropriation bill when it is offered to me for my assent or dissent. A rider on such a bill, therefore, is not necessary.

A word or two now as to this question of riders upon appropriation bills. The experience of every State Legislature is that corruptions of the grossest and basest character make their way into the legislation of the country through the means of appropriation bills and omnibus bills. It is by means of riders that omnibus bills are created, and it is by omnibus bills that more than half of the Legislatures of the States of this country have been corrupted.

In the interest of my country and in the interest of my party, I beg gentlemen to look far into the future, and consider if, when you give to the Appropriations Committee the power to put legislative riders upon appropriation bills, considering the immense growth of individual and corporate interests of this country, it will be long before the corporations of the country through your Appropriations Committee will control and direct the legislative bodies of this country into a ruinous course which will eventually change the character of our institutions.

Let us stand by the old traditions of the legislative fathers of our country. Let us stand by the experience of our State Legislatures in the different States, where constitutions have been amended so as to prevent riders on appropriation bills and to prevent omnibus bills. Sir, let us give each of our legislative bodies and their committees their proper functions.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question being taken on the pro forma amendment of Mr. HOOKER, it was not agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. As an amendment to the substitute of the gentleman from Georgia, I offer the following:

But it shall be in order to strike out any sum of money appropriated in a bill and insert a less sum.

I offer this to test the sense of the Committee of the Whole. I offer it, I trust, with no other interest in view than the good of this House, the good of my party, not as a minority, but the good of my party if it should be in the majority—the good, as I believe, of any party whether in the minority or in the majority; for, in my view, it is the interest of every party that we should seal up, so far as we can, the fountain of the bitter waters of strife, and put ourselves in the line of plain, fair, business work, while at the same time we protect the Committee on Appropriations against the assaults which it is liable to receive from all quarters unless some such protection is given to it. I ask a vote on the amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Would not the effect of his amendment be just this: if the salary, for instance, of a cabinet officer should be reduced on an appropriation bill, without any change of the existing law, would there not simply be a deficiency as to the balance of salary for which we would be bound afterward to appropriate?

Mr. GARFIELD. If a majority of the House and the Senate reduced the appropriation for salary in any appropriation bill, the same majority could go to work and in a separate law make that change operative by legalizing in the form of independent legislation what the judgment of Congress had declared in an appropriation bill.

My own belief is that the officers of this Government ought to be safe for more than twelve months against sudden and unexpected assaults upon their salaries by means of the annual appropriation bills. To change the salaries of public officers, there ought to be required a little more notice than the simple, accidental change of an appropriation in one of the annual appropriation bills.

In conclusion, I will simply say that this amendment saves what the Speaker of this House has said was the main object of the present rule, the reduction of expenditures. Everything else is excluded. It enables us to reduce expenses, but it does not enable us to make the Appropriations Committee the Moab, the wash-pot of the country, in which all the linen of the House is to be tumbled. To prevent this is the object of my amendment, and I believe that if adopted it will execute itself.

Mr. TUCKER. As I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, it will authorize in any appropriation bill the insertion of a less sum than the amount authorized by law——

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes, sir.

Mr. TUCKER. But will it authorize the striking out of the whole sum?

Mr. GARFIELD. In striking out you may put in anything you please. You can strike out $5,000, for instance, and insert zero.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCMAHON. Mr. Chairman, I had thought that the whole object of referring an appropriation bill to the Committee of the Whole House was to enable that committee to increase or diminish the amount of appropriations. It seems to me, therefore, a very novel proposition that we shall confer upon the Committee of the Whole the right to diminish the amounts proposed to be appropriated. I understand that the act of appropriation lies in the breast of the Committee of the Whole or of the House; that how much shall be appropriated is always an open question, and does not involve any question of legislation. I understand very well that if in an annual appropriation bill we appropriate, for example, $3,500 as salary for an officer who under the law is entitled to $5,000, unless we expressly say "this appropriation shall be in full for salary for the coming fiscal year," a deficiency is created, and a claim against the Government might be enforced in the Court of Claims. A more insidious proposition in the interest of the office-holders of this country was never presented in the House of Representatives than the proposition now pending.

And I say to my young friend from Georgia [Mr. SPEER] that when he starts a new proposition here in the legislation of this House, it ought to make him shake in his boots when he finds the whole republican party ready to stand sponsor in this new baptism. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPEER. I may be young, but I trust I am of the number of those whose follies cease with their youth. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MCMAHON. A very good answer, Mr. Chairman; but the trouble is that the whole of the party on the other side of the House applaud the gentleman's present position; and I say that when the republicans of this House unanimously support a proposition offered by a democrat, that man ought to consider, "What have I done to draw down upon me the unanimous applause of the other side of this House?" [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Appropriations Committee I want to disavow all desire for the right on the part of that committee to put one word of legislation upon an appropriation bill. But I do want to reserve to the people's representatives in the Committee of the Whole House the right to retrench the expenditures of this Government upon a proper occasion. I do not care that the Committee on Appropriations shall have the power to report one particle of general legislation to this House. I do not want that power. I do not want to be abused for such legislation. I think the Committee on Appropriations has been misled into putting into bills general legislation. But when a democrat comes before this House and says to this Committee of the Whole House, this representative body I see before me here, we shall have no right when we are legislating and passing appropriation bills to say, when we want to, that we shall retrench expenditures, to say that, sir, is for the democratic party to furl at once the flag of retrenchment and reform. It is giving up all we have claimed before the people. It is giving up the standard we raised when we went before the people. And when my young friend considers that view of it, let me say to him, he himself gives up the cause of the party in the next presidential fight. If we strike it out we confess to the people of this country we cannot make the fight in the interest of economy any more.

Now, I want to say to that side of the House their unanimity on a question like this surprises me. I can only accept it as one of those late confessions which always comes to the republican party when it is out of power. When it was in power it was one of the worst which ever had control of this Government. [Laughter on the republican side of the House.] I hope this will not come out of my time.

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Ohio whether in applying the party lash he is acting as a member of the Committee on Appropriations or as a member of the democratic party, or both? When he is exercising the party lash on that side of the House let me suggest that he has no right to whip us on this side.

Mr. MCMAHON. There comes the old appeal—the party lash! the Appropriations Committee! I think the lash must have struck the gentleman himself, as he is the first one to cry out. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON. Not much.

Mr. MCMAHON. My honored friend from the State of Ohio, when a member of the Committee on Appropriations, never stopped at putting any political legislation on any appropriation bill. Now we have contracted and narrowed the rule. We say any legislation that goes on an appropriation bill must be germane to the subject under consideration.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will allow me——

Mr. MCMAHON. In one moment. Secondly, that it shall retrench expenditures. Is not that a good rule? Do you want, gentlemen on the other side of the House, to go to the country and say that is not a good rule? [Cries of "Yes!" "Yes!" on the republican side of the House.] All right, then, put yourself upon the record; but I say to gentlemen on this side of the House, it is not our record and should not be. It is our pride that such is not our record. We know it is your record. We know when you had possession of the Government you spent every dollar you could spend, and you will spend it again when you get possession of this House.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. SPEER.]

Mr. TUCKER. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to modify his amendment as I have suggested.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have no objection to saying "or" instead of "and."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can modify his amendment as he pleases.

Mr. TUCKER. That involves striking out or reducing.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will modify my amendment in that way.

Mr. TUCKER. Then it will be in order to strike out any sum of money appropriated in a bill or to insert a less sum.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I wish to state the effect of this. There is a law upon the statute-book directing the appropriation of so much money for a particular subject. You propose in the amendment just read to allow it to be reduced in the appropriation bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Which is in conflict with the law. Now, if you do that, you should go a step further and give the power to legislate on that appropriation bill to change existing law to the extent of that reduction.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) You place the House by your amendment in the attitude of refusing to appropriate as much money as the law authorizes. Then we will have claims for the balance which the law prescribes over the amount appropriated.

Mr. BURROWS. I make the point of order that debate is exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

The question recurred on Mr. GARFIELD'S amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. BLACKBURN were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 121, noes 121.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I vote "no."

The CHAIRMAN. On this question the tellers report 121 in the affirmative and 122 in the negative. The amendment is rejected. [Applause on the democratic side.]

Mr. GARFIELD. Now, we will try the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia.

A MEMBER. Oh, no; there are several others yet to come.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced the passage of the following; in which concurrence was requested:

Concurrent resolution to print 10,000 additional copies of Bulletin No. 3 of the United States entomological commission, for the use of the Senate and House of Representatives, on the cotton-worm; and

A bill (S. No. 762) for the relief of the administrator of Josiah H. Pillsbury.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is not the House now brought to a direct vote upon the substitute offered by the gentleman from Georgia, the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio having been voted down?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio having been rejected, it is now in order to offer further amendments.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to offer an amendment, and my amendment to this substitute is the third clause of this rule as amended by the words I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the substitute so as to read, after the word "as" in the sixth line, "shall receive a two-thirds vote of the House or Committee of the Whole and."

Mr. HASKELL. Now, the operation of this amendment if adopted will be simply this: It leaves the operation of the rule as it is, giving full power to this House to change existing law in appropriation bills if the amendments are germane and if they tend to retrench expenditures, but it provides that that amendment must be first submitted to the House or the committee and a two-thirds vote secured for its passage. Then it can be attached to the appropriation bill.

This leaves it to the power of the House to control extravagant expenditures. It leaves it to the power of the House in a great exigency to change the existing law on an appropriation bill and simply compels the entire absence of anything like political legislation from the fact that a political amendment could not receive the necessary two-thirds vote. It may be suggested here that we have the motion to suspend the rules, but you cannot do that; for you cannot get the floor to make the motion to suspend the rules for your amendment, however much you may want it if it changes existing law.

Under the operation of this amendment the power of this House is retained, and it simply compels the proposed "rider" or amendment to pass the scrutiny of two-thirds of the House or of the Committee of the Whole. If it does that, it is a just and wise bill. If it does that, it is no coercion of the Executive to sign it, because it has been indicated by the vote here that there is a sufficient power in the House to constitutionally override the President's objection. That simple amendment disposes of your political riders, and leaves the majority of the House to pass a really economical subject by simple, wise legislative methods.

I believe if our friends on the other side will adopt this they will find themselves curtailed in no wise economy, but the only result of it will be to remove political legislation from appropriation bills.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WARNER. I desire to offer as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

Except that it shall be in order to reduce expenditures provided for by existing laws and covered by the bill, and to that end only to change the law.

Mr. GARFIELD. Change one word and I think we can harmonize. Change the word "expenditures" to "amounts of money."

Mr. BLACKBURN. Oh, no!

Mr. STEVENSON and others. Let the amendment be again read.

Mr. GARFIELD. Do not have it as a means to take in all legislation upon it.

The amendment to the amendment was again read.

Mr. REED. That is worse and more of it.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The amendment had better be read in connection with the other portions of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the third clause as it would read if amended by the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER.]

The Clerk read as follows:

3. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except that it shall be in order to reduce expenditures provided for by existing law and covered by the bill, and to that end only to change the law.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman from Ohio wishes to speak on his amendment I desire to say a word in reply. If he does not desire to speak, I wish now to make a remark.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to say but a few words. I cannot myself, Mr. Chairman, consent to any measure which will deprive this House of its control over appropriations. It has cost the people of the Anglo-Saxon race too much to secure to themselves that control, and I for one shall never give a vote knowingly to take away or abridge that right. On the other hand, I concede that to make use of a threat to withhold appropriations from legitimate objects for the purpose of coercing the Senate or a co-ordinate branch of the Government to give assent to a particular measure is inconsistent with our theory of government and wholly unjustifiable. [Applause on the republican side.]

It is a bad precedent set by the republican party, and ought not to be followed. The people of this country do not derive their powers nor their rights nor their liberties from king or president. They are themselves the source of power, and it is in my opinion belittling that power, if not a virtual surrender of this great primary principle of government, to talk about compelling from a President "a redress of grievances." The redress of grievances, as well as the correction of all wrongs, lies with the people themselves.

My object in offering this amendment, therefore, is to save to this House, save to the representatives of the people where that power belongs, absolute control over the question of taxation and the appropriation of money. That is a power that should be carefully preserved to this House to use at any and all times as it may deem best. But at the same time, while we are adopting rules, I would prevent the incorporation of general legislation on appropriation bills. The Appropriations Committee is not charged with the duty of originating and bringing before the House legislative measures. Its duty is to look to appropriations.

The amendment I propose gives to this committee the right and makes it in order in the House to propose to reduce in appropriation bills expenditures required under existing law, and to that extent to change the law, but to go no further than that in the direction of legislation. I think that is as it should be. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SPEER] permits the reduction of expenditures, but not a change in the law. That would leave open the question of a deficiency. This amendment removes all doubt and makes clear, I think, the extent to which legislation can be ingrafted on appropriation bills. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. GARFIELD rose.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. REAGAN. I thought I had obtained the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is a member of the Committee on Rules, and in accordance with the practice heretofore has been recognized by the Chair.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am very sure no gentleman here on either side of the House would be willing to deceive any of his associates by a form of words or to do anything in the nature of coming it over another by a trick of speech. That I am sure nobody wants to do.

The only objection that was raised, as I understood, by the Speaker to the amendment that I offered was that it only allowed the reduction of amounts; but it might be it left a deficiency; that it did not change the law as to the reduced amounts. In so far that statement of the case was right. And here as I understand it we are offered an amendment with the intent just to cover that case. Now I am willing to vote for an amendment that covers just that case, namely to say that it shall be in order to reduce the amounts of money required by law and to that extent to change existing law. If this amendment does that I will vote for it; but my friend has got in the word "expendifures" instead of "amounts of money" as I think it should be.

Mr. WARNER. Are not amounts of money to be expended expenditures?

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes; but an expenditure is not always an amount of money. The gentleman proposes the words—

Except that it shall be in order to reduce expenditures provided for by existing law.

Now I will offer a bill to abolish the present courts of the United States and establish a new judicial system and in that I will provide that the new courts shall cost $10 less than the old. Have I not introduced a bill that will reduce the judicial expenditures?

Mr. WARNER. I will accept the gentleman's suggestion and make it "amounts of expenditure."

Mr. GARFIELD. "Amounts of money" is the proper phrase. Let the gentleman and let the House say it shall be in order to change existing law so far as to reduce the actual amounts of money.

Mr. WARNER. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman will strike out the word "expenditures" and insert "amounts of money provided for by existing law," then I will vote for his amendment.

Mr. WARNER. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. SPEER. I will accept the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] in lieu of my amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. I rise to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SPEER. I withdraw my acceptance of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. Since the gentleman from Georgia withdraws his acceptance of the amendment no further amendment is in order. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER,] as modified, as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SPEER] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. LOWE.]

The Clerk will read the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio as now modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "except" and insert:
That it shall be in order to reduce the amounts of money provided for by existing law and covered by the bill, and to that end only to change the law.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been suggested that the word "extent" be inserted instead of the word "end."

Mr. WARNER. Who makes that suggestion?

The CHAIRMAN. It has been made by several gentlemen.

Mr. WARNER. I see no objection to that. Let the Clerk make that change.

Mr. BAKER. I would like to hear the amendment as it now stands.

The amendment, as modified, was again read.

Mr. WARNER. I ask consent to add the words "on an appropriation bill."

Mr. ROBESON. I would like the gentleman to insert two or three words, so that it will read "to change the effect of existing law."

Mr. WARNER. I would like to know of the gentleman if changing a law is not changing its effect? [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] as modified.

Mr. WARNER. I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection tellers will be ordered.

There was no objection; and the Chair appointed Mr. BLACKBURN and Mr. WARNER to act as tellers.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 124, noes 79.

So the substitute moved by Mr. WARNER for the amendment moved by Mr. SPEER was adopted.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I give notice that I shall call for the yeas and nays in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. WARNER. My amendment has been agreed to?

The CHAIRMAN. The particular amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] has been agreed to.

Mr. ROBESON. But that amendment has not yet been adopted as a part of the rules.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to upon a division—ayes 114, noes 34.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CARLISLE reported that, pursuant to the order of the House, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the proposed revision of the rules reported from the Committee on Rules and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 13, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FORNEY. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill of the House (H. R. No. 3015) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, together with the Senate amendments thereto, to report the same back to the House with a recommendation that the amendments of the Senate be not concurred in.

The question was taken; and the amendments of the Senate were not concurred in.

Mr. FORNEY moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDIAN DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WELLS. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 4432) making additional appropriations for the support of certain Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1880, and to recommend that the same be considered at this time. It is important that the bill should be passed at an early day. It is a very short bill, and I ask that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of paying the urgently necessary additional expenses of certain Indian tribes, namely:

For care and support of the Pawnee Indians, in the Indian Territory, $15,000;

For care and support of the Shoshone Indians, in Wyoming Territory, $15,000;

For subsistence and civilization of the Arapahoes, Cheyennes, Apaches, Kiowas, Comanches, and Wichitas who have been collected upon the reservation set apart for their use and occupation, $80,000;

For subsistence and civilization of Nez Percés of Joseph's Band, in the Indian Territory, $10,000;

For advertising, at rates not exceeding regular commercial rates, telegraphing, inspection, and all other expenses connected with contracts and purchases for the Indian service, $15,000.

NOTE.—Total amount recommended by this bill, $135,000.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. PRICE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WELLS] whether the appropriation recommended for the Arapahoes, Cheyennes, and other Indians has anything to do with the annuities which are due those tribes?

Mr. WELLS. Not at all. It is an appropriation to supply them with provisions.

Mr. WARNER. Does this bill come from the Committee on Indian Affairs?

The SPEAKER. It comes from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WELLS. I will state to the House that the seemingly large appropriation of $80,000 for the Arapahoes, Cheyennes, Apaches, and other Indians is necessary for this reason: We have advices from the agent of those Indians, but two days ago, that there was not meat enough to last beyond the 1st of next month; that at that time the supply of beef would give out, and that the supply of flour, meal, and coffee would run out by the 15th of next month. This amount of $80,000 is required to supply these Indians until the 1st day of July next. There are ninety-seven hundred of these Indians. The deficiency in the supplies has been caused by the drought in that section of the country cutting off their crops during the past year.

In regard to the other deficiencies reported in this bill, they are made necessary by the same reason, from the drought in the country, and the Indians not being able to sustain themselves in any way. I have a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, as well as one from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which I will ask to have read by the Clerk as they will explain these matters more clearly than I can do.

Mr. PRICE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WELLS. Certainly.

Mr. PRICE. I wish to know whether these appropriations are a part of the annuities due to the Cheyennes and Arapahoes?

Mr. WELLS. I think there are no annuities due them; they are not treaty Indians.

Mr. PRICE. I know that there are annuities due the Cheyennes and Arapahoes. What I want to know is whether this appropriation is a part of those annuities?

Mr. WELLS. This appropriation is to supply these Indians with beef, flour, meal, &c.

Mr. PRICE. Not to be considered a part of their annuities.

Mr. WELLS. Not to supply them with clothing, &c.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would inquire of my colleague on the committee

[Mr. WELLS] whether it is not true that this appropriation is necessary on account of the poor crops on the reservation where these Indians are located?

Mr. WELLS. I have just stated that.

Mr. BLOUNT. And the fear is that unless this appropriation be made and supplies furnished these Indians they will go off their reservation?

Mr. WELLS. The fear of the Department is that if this appropriation is not made at once the Indians will go off their reservation and go on the war-path and do a great deal of harm. I ask that the communications be read which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 10, 1879.

SIR: A report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, presenting for the consideration and action of Congress an estimate for deficiency appropriation to provide for the support and subsistence of certain bands and tribes of Indians therein named, has been this day transmitted to the Speaker House of Representatives with a recommendation for early and favorable action thereon; and as it is considered by the Department of the utmost importance that no delay should result from any neglect on its part to afford all information requisite to a full understanding of the necessities of the case, copies of the report of the Commissioner, dated the 4th instant, together with the inclosures noted therein, are herewith inclosed for the information of your committee.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. SCHURZ, Secretary.

Hon. J. D. C. ATKINS,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, December 4, 1879.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the following facts regarding the necessity for additional funds to support certain Indians during the remainder of the current fiscal year:

Early in the present fiscal year it became evident that the supplies purchased for the Cheyenne and Arapahoe, and Kiowa, Comanche, and Wichita agencies would become exhausted before the 1st of July next, and as the quantities contracted for were limited by the amount of funds at the disposal of the office, orders were issued to the agents in charge of the agencies named to reduce the issue of rations to their Indians to such an extent as would insure a limited supply to the end of the fiscal year.

In reply to these orders the agent at the Kiowa, Comanche, and Wichita agency reported that he would endeavor to comply with the directions of the office and make the supply of beef last as long as possible. Agent Miles, of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe agency, under date of September 15th, telegraphed that the "issues have only been made to meet unquestionable demands, and which I believe had the sanction of the Department. The full authorized ration or its equivalent in beef is actually necessary. Have carefully investigated the present condition of Indians and the probable effect that would result from enforcing such an order at this time, and am satisfied that it would drive many of the Indians from the agency and reservation in search of game, and unquestionably bring them into trouble on the border. To comply with the order will reduce the beef ration below two pounds gross, which will not sustain life. Crops a failure, and we cannot find labor for many."

On the 19th September Agent Miles wrote to the office, stating that he had carefully investigated the real condition of the Indians by visiting their camps, and was fully satisfied that no reduction in the beef ration could with propriety or safety be made; that to reduce the ration as directed would bring the issue below two pounds gross, which would not prevent hunger and suffering; that in former years the Indians were successful in hunting, and the meat thus obtained furnished them with subsistence while away from the agency, and the collection of robes enabled them to supplement rations to a considerable extent while at the agency, but at present no reliance could be placed in hunting; that the early spring opened very hopeful for Indian farmers, but the extremely dry weather had cut the crops so short as to afford but little relief, &c. He further states that the Indians had no desire to leave the reservation in search of food, but at the same time they assured him that such steps would be necessary if the ration was reduced. Little Chief informed him that if the ration was cut down, the Government would be the first to break promises made to him and his party, which would relieve him from any promises which he and his party may have made.

Under these circumstances I felt that the experiment of reducing the ration referred to would be a dangerous one, although compelled by the inadequate amount of funds at the disposal of the office to limit the issues, in order to keep within the sum appropriated by Congress for the support of these Indians, and therefore decided to await instructions from you, knowing that you were to meet the said agents at Muscogee on or about the 1st of October, and feeling sure that they would consult you in regard to the matter. As anticipated, on September 30 I received your telegram to the effect that "the reduction of rations at Cheyenne and Arapahoe and the Kiowa, Comanche, and Wichita agencies seems, from all I hear, a very dangerous measure at the present time. I suggest as the best policy to issue full rations, and then depend upon Congress for supplying deficiency on account of failure of crops throughout the Indian Territory. In consequence of the universal drought, I request to this your particular attention." In compliance with these instructions the agents were immediately notified that the orders reducing the rations were suspended until further directions.

The supplies already contracted for, and for the payment of which only sufficient funds are at the disposal of the office, will last until about the 15th of March next, thus leaving about three and one-half months of the fiscal year for which there is no provision to support the Indians in question, who number about ninety-seven hundred persons. To supply these persons with sufficient beef, and probably additional flour, for the period named will require an appropriation of $80,000.

Additional funds for the support of the Shoshones and Bannocks in Wyoming are also needed. The same reasons which governed the action of the office in the case of the Cheyennes and Arapahoes and the Apaches, Kiowas, Comanches, and Wichitas existed in the case of the Shoshones and Bannocks.

At about the time of the reduction of the ration for the first-named Indians Agent Patten, of the Shoshone agency, was directed to reduce the issue to his Indians, but subsequently he was authorized to resume the issue of full rations. In this case it will require at least $15,000 to supply the needs of the last-named Indians for the remainder of the current fiscal year.

An appropriation of $15,000 is required to properly care for and support the Pawnee Indians in the Indian Territory up to the 1st of July next. Owing to the extreme drought in the Indian Territory the crops of these Indians were almost entirely destroyed, and, as a consequence, the demand for rations has been such as to necessitate the issue of greatly increased quantities of supplies.

For the same reasons $10,000 is required to support the Nez Percés of Joseph's Band during the remainder of the current fiscal year. Besides, these Indians have only recently been located upon their new reservation, and the expenditures on their behalf in providing them with implements, seed, houses, agency buildings, and other things necessary to their permanent settlement, make it necessary that additional funds be provided for their support to the 1st of July next.

By the present system of purchasing goods and supplies, &c., required for the Indian service large sums are annually saved to the Government and the Indians. Nearly all of the goods, &c., required are bought in the East, thereby saving the enormous profits on merchandise sold on the frontier, the only additional expense attending which is the cost of purchase, inspection, &c.

The fund provided by Congress for this purpose is entirely inadequate, and an additional sum of $15,000 therefor will be required during the current fiscal year.

In accordance with the foregoing, I have the honor to inclose herewith an estimate of appropriation required for the purposes herein named, as follows:

For the Arapahoes, Cheyennes, Apaches, Kiowas, Comanches, and Wichitas	$80,000
For the Shoshones and Bannocks	15,000
For the Pawnees	15,000
For the Nez Percés, (Joseph's Band)	10,000
For telegraphing and purchase of Indian supplies	15,000

I also transmit duplicate copies of letters and telegrams, from Agents Miles, Patten, and Hunt upon the subject of the reduction of issues to their Indians; also extract copy of telegram from yourself upon the same subject, and respectfully request that the matter herein referred to be laid before Congress, with your favorable recommendation for the early action of that body in the premises.

Very respectfully,

E. A. HAYT, Commissioner.

Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I reserve all points of order on this bill until I hear the reasons for its being considered now.

The SPEAKER. The House has been considering the bill for some time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to know what are the points that the gentleman reserves.

The SPEAKER. The Chair presumes that the point of order the gentleman would desire to reserve, and which would have been good if made in time, is that the bill makes an appropriation and should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That is the very point of order I desire to make.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman ought to have made it some time ago.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I was not in the House when the bill was first presented.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman cannot on that account ask the House to go back.

The SPEAKER. The point of order would have been good if made in time.

Mr. WELLS. I move the previous question.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will yield for a question. I observe that the bill reported by the gentleman contains an appropriation of $10,000 for the civilization of the Nez Percé tribe of Indians. Now, it so chanced that I accompanied a joint committee of the Senate and House who in 1878 made a visit to that tribe. We found there had been great mortality among them in consequence of their removal from the northern region of country, in which they had been raised and to which they had been accustomed, to the Indian Territory; and they were then making great complaint in consequence of their removal and the mortality which had followed. The same thing was true of the Modoc tribe who occupied a portion of the Indian Territory contiguous to the Nez Percés. I think that this bill ought to provide for the removal of both the Nez Percés and the Modocs from the Indian Territory, if they desire it, to the region of country in which they were raised and to which they are habituated, where the Government now controls large portions of the public domain which can at this time be assigned to these Indians, but which at a later date it will probably be impossible for the Government to utilize in this way, as the land may at any time be taken up as other lands of the Government are. I think that so far from attempting to coerce the settlement of these Indians our true policy should be to allow them to remain in that region of country to which they have been habituated and to which they are so anxious to return.

Mr. WELLS. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that the $10,000 appropriated by this bill for the Joseph band is for the purpose of supporting them for the remainder of this fiscal year. Their crops the last year have been a total failure, and without this appropriation they will suffer for want of food. A portion of this appropriation will be used for completing the quarters which have been erected for them to live in. As to the removal of this band, I think that matter should be left to future legislation. I now ask the previous question.

The previous question was seconded.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the bill be again read.

The Clerk read the bill again.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to know whether the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WELLS] will not consent that this bill shall go to the Committee of the Whole, in order that such amendments as gentlemen may desire may be offered.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been demanded, and the House has seconded the demand. The question is, Shall the main question be now put?

Mr. WELLS. I will state to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] that it is very important this bill should pass at an early day. The advice we have from the Indian agents is that the supply of beef for these Indians will run out this month, and unless provision of this kind be made for them they will soon be on the war-path. This appropriation should have been passed some time ago.

Mr. SCALES. This bill takes us somewhat by surprise; and before action is had on it we ought to know how these deficiencies have arisen.

Mr. WELLS. Not only is the beef of these Indians exhausted, but according to our information their meal and flour will soon be entirely gone.

Mr. SCALES. I think the House should fully understand the reasons for the passage of a bill of this kind.

Mr. WELLS. Communications from the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs have been read, detailing the necessity for the prompt passage of this bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Has the committee ascertained whether the reasons set forth in those communications are sound?

Mr. WELLS. Yes, sir. The Committee on Appropriations are fully satisfied on this subject, which they have had before them since December last.

The main question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WELLS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

The SPEAKER. At the request of Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, the Chair asks consent that Mr. Sylvester Artley, State senator of Illinois, be allowed the privilege of the floor for to-day.

Mr. DUNNELL. I object. We have carried this thing to such a length that the Speaker has been compelled to call attention to the fact.

Subsequently Mr. DUNNELL withdrew his objection, and Mr. Artley, by unanimous consent, was allowed the privilege of the floor.

The SPEAKER. At the request of Mr. PERSONS the Chair asks by unanimous consent that the privilege of the floor for to-day be accorded to Colonel Avery, of Georgia.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

PORT HURON AND NORTHWESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. CONGER, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 210) to authorize the Secretary of War to sell or lease to the Port Huron and Northwestern Railway Company a portion of the Fort Gratiot military reserve, and to authorize the city of Port Huron to grant to said railway company the right of way through Pine Grove Park; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

S. R. AND R. M. LOWERY INDUSTRIAL ACADEMY.

Mr. BREWER, by unanimous consent, (and by request,) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4433) for the endowment of the S. R. and R. M. Lowery Industrial Academy, in the State of Alabama, and to accept a donation of buildings and lands in aid of the same, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

Mr. FRYE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Interoceanic Canal, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish this House with all information and correspondence touching an interoceanic canal now in the possession of his Department and not hitherto publishsd.

INTERNATIONAL SHEEP AND WOOL SHOW.

Mr. COVERT. I am directed by the Committee on Agriculture to report back a bill (H. R. No. 3982) to authorize and direct the Commissioner of Agriculture to attend, in person or by deputy, the international sheep and wool show to be held in the Centennial buildings, Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, in September, A. D. 1880, and to make full and complete report of the same, and for other purposes, with amendments.

The SPEAKER. The bill and amendments will be read, when the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill and amendments were read.

Mr. BEALE. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. That is in the nature of an objection, and the report cannot be received.

Mr. KELLEY. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will not insist upon his objection.

Mr. COVERT. Mr. Chairman, this bill makes absolutely no appropriation. It simply provides for the Government recognition of the first international exhibition of this character ever held in this country. It does not ask for a dollar of money.

Mr. BEALE. I insist upon my objection.

MORNING HOUR.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour now begins at twenty minutes to one o'clock, and the call of committees for reports of bills of a private nature, this being Friday, rests with the Committee on War Claims.

MRS. MARTHA BRIDGES.

Mr. BRAGG, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back, as a substitute for House bill No. 399, a bill (H. R. No. 4434) for the relief of Mrs. Martha Bridges, of Bartow County, Georgia; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask for the consideration of this bill at this time.

Mr. DUNNELL. That is subject to a point of order, as it makes an appropriation, and it had better go to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRAGG. If the House will give me permission for just one moment, I think the point of order will be withdrawn.

Mr. DUNNELL. Objection has been made, and it should go to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. BRAGG also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back adversely the following cases; which were laid upon the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

Petition of Hiram W. Love;

A bill (H. R. No. 1633) for the relief of Walter D. Plowden;

A bill (H. R. No. 491) for the relief of George F. Brott;

The petition of J. W. Burbridge and Robert M. Montgomery; and

The petition of Joseph H. Maddox.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. BRAGG also, from the same committee, moved that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the following cases, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; and it was agreed to:

A bill (H. R. No. 3414) for the relief of Alfred H. Lowe, late first lieutenant Twenty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 855) for the relief of Charles Valier;

A bill (H. R. No. 2916) explanatory of an act directing the Second Auditor to settle the pay and bounty account of John Ammahaie or Ammahe, passed June 30, 1876;

A bill (H. R. No. 3144) for the relief of Hiram A. Benefield;

A petition for the relief of George A. Wilson, of Peoria, Illinois; and

A petition for the relief of Richard Oulahan, One hundred and sixty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteers.

PAYMENT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. BRAGG also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4435) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, and acts amendatory thereof; which was ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. FERDON, from the same committee, made adverse reports in the following cases; which were laid upon the table, and the reports ordered to be printed:

The claim of Wiley J. Davis, of Henderson County, Tennessee;

The claim of W. W. R. Elliott, Henderson County, Tennessee, for quartermaster stores, &c.;

The claim of John O. Graves for quartermaster stores;

The claim of Elizabeth P. Dyer, Fayette County, Tennessee; and

The claim of Rosetta Freel, Shelby County, Tennessee.

Mr. CARPENTER, from the same committee, made adverse reports in the following cases; which were laid upon the table, and the adverse reports ordered to be printed:

The petition of Carson R. Dalton, of Memphis, Tennessee;

A petition for the relief of Emmarilla J. Carr, of Memphis, Tennessee;

The petition of Juliet Campbell, administratrix, of Lee County, Arkansas;

A petition for the relief of Robert H. Cleere, of Collierville, Tennessee;

The petition of Henry C. Dallis, of Memphis, Tennessee;

The petition of Alfred H. Darden, of Moscow, Tennessee;

The petition of Mrs. Martha C. Cole, of Germantown, Shelby County, Tennessee;

The petition of Benjamin Coleman, of Memphis, Tennessee;

A petition for the relief of Ann E. Connell, executrix of the estate of Hiram D. Connell, deceased, of Memphis, Tennessee; and

The petition of Paul A. Cicalla, Memphis, Tennessee.

Mr. ATHERTON, from the same committee, made adverse reports in the following cases; which were laid upon the table, and the adverse reports ordered to be printed:

The petition of Adolphus Mueller, hospital steward in the Third Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry;

The petition of George C. Arrington, of Greene County, Alabama;

The petition of Harriet J. Carey, of Clinton, Hinds County, Mississippi; and

The petition of Elizabeth J. Hampton, of Little Rock, Arkansas.

WILLIAM E. GERE.

Mr. ATHERTON also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4436) for the relief of William E. Gere; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. TYLER, from the same committee, reported back, with adverse recommendations, the following petitions; and the same were laid upon the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The petition of Indiana E. Hughes, administratrix of John P. Hughes, of Shelby County, Tennessee;

The petition of John W. Willett, of Denmark, Madison County, Tennessee, for property taken by the United States Army during the war;

The claim of David H. Hildebrand, of Shelby County, Tennessee, for horses and mules;

The petition of Silas Knox, of New Madrid, Missouri, for property taken by the Army during the war;

The petition of James M. McRea, of Jackson, Madison County, Tennessee, for property taken by the Army during the war; and

The petition of Fannie T. Hunt, of Shelby County, Tennessee.

Mr. BAYNE, from the same committee, reported back, with adverse recommendations, the following petitions; and the same were laid upon the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The petition of Philip R. Jones, of Saint Francis County, Arkansas;

The petition of Willam K. Verbeke, asking compensation for money expended in enlisting volunteers, &c., during the late war;

The petition of James M. Swearengin, executor, of Tunica County, Mississippi, for quartermaster and commissary stores taken by the United States Army during the late war;

The petition of Ann M. Meehon, of Vicksburgh, Mississippi;

The petition of W. S. Jennings, of Little Rock, Arkansas, for compensation for quartermaster and subsistence stores taken by the United States Army during the late war;

The petition of Mrs. Amanda Daily, for payment for property taken by the United States Army in the State of Arkansas;

The petition of Thomas A. Moore, of Osceola, Arkansas, for compensation for cotton seized by the United States Government;

The petition of Miles W. Vansickle;

The petition of David Robbins, Hot Springs County, Arkansas; and

The petition of Emily Leland, of Warren County, Mississippi.

Mr. ROBERTSON, from the same committee, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the petition of Mrs. Anna M. Cogswell, of Memphis, Tennessee; and the same was laid upon the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. ROBERTSON also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the request of Mr. CALDWELL for leave to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the cases of Messrs. Allard & Crozier, of Paducah, Kentucky, and W. H. Slack, of Paducah, Kentucky, no adverse report having been made; and the request of Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, for leave to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Joseph A. Briggs, there being no adverse report thereon.

Mr. CONGER. Is that a report authorizing the withdrawing of the papers?

The SPEAKER. It is. These were requests made by members, and were referred to the Committee on War Claims. The Chair has been more strict recently with reference to requests of this nature because of some confusion lately as to proper custody of such papers.

Mr. CONGER. I only wish to know the fact whether this is a report from the committee recommending that the requests for leave to withdraw the papers be granted?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. CONGER. Does this provide for keeping copies?

The SPEAKER. The rule will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

All motions to withdraw papers from the files of the House shall be referred to the committee which last considered the case, who shall report without delay whether or not copies shall be left on file; but original papers shall not be withdrawn in any case where an adverse report has been made; and whenever the report is adverse the same shall be in writing, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The report from the committee says nothing as to the leaving of copies.

Mr. CONGER. Is anything said about whether or not there was an adverse report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that there were no adverse reports in these cases. But the Chair agrees with the gentleman from Michigan that copies in all cases ought to be kept, and suggests that the report be amended to that effect. The Chair desires to call the attention of committees to the existence of this Rule 164, and in reporting as to the withdrawal of papers they will be kind enough to conform to the exact terms of the rule.

Mr. CONGER. Will the originals be kept here?

The SPEAKER. If an adverse report has been made the rule requires the originals shall be kept.

Mr. CONGER. Allowing the papers to be taken away en masse allows papers belonging to the Departments to be taken away. In that way the proofs which the Government might rely upon to defeat a wrong claim have gone out of their possession.

The SPEAKER. No officer of this House has any authority under any rule to give up any Government papers.

Mr. CONGER. No; but the files themselves are to be given up, and that includes all documents that relate to the subject.

The SPEAKER. Only papers presented by claimants can be given up. Any officer of this House who would give up papers belonging to the Government would commit an act in violation of an existing order of the House.

Mr. CONGER. I think there is some looseness about this matter of withdrawal of papers.

The SPEAKER. In order to prevent any such "looseness," as the gentleman terms it, the Chair has recently directed a change in the mode of procedure, by having all requests for the withdrawal of papers referred to the appropriate committees, so that the House can act with due diligence.

Mr. CONGER. I know that I have in one or two cases looked for papers on the files and could not find them.

The SPEAKER. And the Chair would further advise members of the House that under the new rule recommended by the Committee on Rules special provision in this regard has been made. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROBERTSON] amends the report as suggested by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.] If no further objection be made the report will be agreed to.

The report was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the following; which were laid upon the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The claim of James Moffitt, of Nashville, Tennessee;

The petition of Benjamin F. Wallace, of Poplar Grove, Arkansas, for compensation for quartermaster and commissary supplies taken by the United States Army during the late war; and

The claim of A. C. Wellborn, administrator of the estate of Daniel T. Wellborn, of Phillips County, Arkansas.

Mr. SIMONTON, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the following; which were laid upon the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The petition of Charles Burke, administrator of Elizabeth Burke, of Memphis, Tennessee; and

The petition of Rossannah H. Black, of Hardiman County, Tennessee, for compensation for supplies.

Mr. BRAGG. I move to reconsider the various votes taken upon reports made this morning from the Committee on War Claims; and I also move that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PIERRE JOSEPH MAES.

Mr. GUNTER, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1916, a bill (H. R. No. 4437) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Pierre Joseph Maes; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

BRUCE'S ISLAND.

Mr. NORCROSS, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 936) relinquishing the right of the United States to an island therein named; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SAINT JAMES MISSION, WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. STEVENSON, from the same committee, reported back without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 3278) for the relief of the mission of St. James, in Washington Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM REDUS.

Mr. POEHLER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4438) for the relief of William Redus; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HENRY WARREN.

Mr. HASKELL, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 1047) for the relief of Henry Warren; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NEW YORK INDIAN LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. HASKELL. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 356) to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas. If it is in order, I will ask that the bill be considered at this time.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will decide upon the propriety of its being considered at this time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That those persons being heads of families or single persons over twenty-one years of age, who have made settlement and improvement upon, and are bona fide claimants and occupants of, either in person or by tenant, the lands in Kansas which were allotted to certain New York Indians, and for which certificates of allotment, dated the 14th day of September, 1860, for three hundred and twenty acres of land each, were issued to thirty-two of said Indians, shall be

and hereby are, authorized and permitted to enter and purchase at the proper land office, at any time within one year from the passage of this act, said lands so occupied by them, in tracts not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, according to the Government surveys, at not less than the appraised value of the said tracts, as heretofore ascertained by the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with the provisions of the act of February 19, 1873, entitled "An act to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas," payment to be made in three annual installments, one-third at date of entry, one-third at the end of one year from date of entry, and the balance in two years from date of entry, with interest on said amounts respectively from date of entry at 6 per cent. per annum; and the moneys arising from such sales shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, in trust for, and to be paid to, said Indians respectively to whom said certificates were issued, or to their heirs, upon satisfactory proof of their identity to the Secretary of the Interior, at any time within three years from the passage of this act; and in case such proof is not made within the time specified, then the proceeds of such sale, or so much thereof as shall not have been paid under the provisions of this act, shall become a part of the public moneys of the United States.

SEC. 2. That any lands not entered by such settlers at the expiration of one year from the passage of this act shall be offered at public sale in the usual manner, at not less than the appraised value, notice of said sale to be given by public advertisement of not less than thirty days, and any tract or tracts not then sold, together with such tracts as have heretofore been, or may hereafter be, entered, and wherein default has been made in payment of any portion of the purchase-money, or the interest thereon, as herein or heretofore provided, shall be thereafter subject to private entry at the appraised value of said tracts.

The amendments reported from the committee were as follows:

In section 1, strike out the words "the appraised value of the said tracts, as heretofore ascertained by the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with the provisions of the act of February 19, 1873, entitled 'An act to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas,'" and insert in lieu thereof the words "$3 per acre;" so that it will read: "at not less than $3 per acre, payment to be made in three annual installments," &c.

Near the close of section 1, strike out the word "three" and insert the word "five;" so that it will read: "at any time within five years of the passage of this act."

In section 2, strike out the words "the appraised value" and insert the words "$3 per acre;" so that it will read: "at not less than $3 per acre," &c.

Mr. BLOUNT. Should not that bill go to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar?

Mr. CONGER. I make the point that it is a public bill.

Mr. FINLEY. Then it should go to the Committee of the Whole on the Public Calendar.

Mr. CONGER. It is a general law, relating to the entire subject of these New York Indian lands.

Mr. SCALES. I hope that my colleague on the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. HASKELL] will permit this bill to go to the Calendar. I was granted permission by the Committee on Indian Affairs to bring in a minority report, but I have not yet had an opportunity to prepare it.

Mr. HASKELL. If the point of order is withdrawn that this is not a private bill, I will have no objection to its going to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. CONGER. I think it is a public bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read from the Digest upon that point.

The Clerk read as follows:

To be a private bill, it must not be general in its enactments, but for the particular interest or benefit of a person or persons.

Mr. CONGER. This bill in some respects is for the general benefit of the United States.

Mr. HASKELL. This bill proposes to dispose of some twenty-eight different parcels of Indian land, and is in my judgment properly a private bill, if the intendment of the rule is regarded. In any event, as the chairman of our committee [Mr. SCALES] disagrees with the majority of the committee, and desires to submit a minority report, for the purpose of obtaining a fair consideration of the bill, I am willing that it shall go to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the bill is for the benefit of the persons mentioned in the first section, those persons being "heads of families or single persons over twenty-one years of age, who have made settlement and improvement upon, and are bona fide claimants and occupants of, either in person or by tenant, the lands in Kansas which were allotted to certain New York Indians."

Mr. CONGER. If the Chair will look further along in the bill he will see that the lands not entered are to be restored to the public lands for entry by citizens of the United States. The bill also provides for covering funds into the Treasury.

Mr. HASKELL. In trust for the Indians.

Mr. CONGER. But it provides that all lands which can be got away from these Indians shall be given to settlers in Kansas. That certainly is general legislation. The Chair will see that under the terms of the original law the Indians were to have three hundred and twenty acres, but under the provisions of this bill they are limited to one hundred and sixty.

Mr. HASKELL. The gentleman utterly misapprehends the entire scope of this bill. In 1873 a bill was passed for the disposition of these lands. There are no Indians there; there have been none for years. No Indian is upon that land or is to go there. The object of the bill is simply to provide, as has already been once provided by Congress, for the sale of lands abandoned by the Indians years ago. The bill will thus settle a difficulty of twenty years' standing in regard to the title of a little tract of land. It is a private bill, because it applies only to a few persons upon a few specific local subdivisions of land in a single county of a particular State.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is not the gentleman now proposing to withdraw the bill?

Mr. HASKELL. I propose that the bill go to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, if the House will allow me that privilege. I desire to take no advantage of anybody. The bill itself is as righteous as anything in the world can be; and this House will undoubtedly pass it when the facts are thoroughly understood.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] be kind enough to specify again the provisions of the bill on which he bases his point?

Mr. CONGER. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the bill provides that all such lands as are not disposed of under the first section shall be classed with lands belonging to the Government, subject to entry and sale. This is a general provision. Whatever else the bill may contain as to private claims, it certainly provides in regard to the general disposition of lands by sale.

Mr. HASKELL. These lands are occupied; there are none open to public sale.

Mr. CONGER. The provision to which I have referred is certainly as clearly a provision of general law as any provision can be.

The SPEAKER. The principal purpose of the bill seems to be for the benefit of private individuals—a class of persons enumerated in the first clause of the bill; but in case of their failure to accept or take advantage of the first section, the second section makes a provision which the Chair agrees with the gentleman from Michigan in thinking is general in its scope. The bill in its operation might in the end be general in its effects, if the individuals mentioned do not take advantage of the first clause. But it seems to the Chair an immaterial question as to which calendar the bill may go to, for it is as likely to be reached on one calendar as the other.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask the gentleman from Michigan to withdraw his point, and let the bill go to the Private Calendar. As the Chair has suggested, it can make no material difference to the gentleman to which calendar the bill may go to. I do not think the gentleman ought to deny me the right to make this report this morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan has not denied to the gentleman from Kansas any right.

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman has any right, I cannot prevent him from exercising it.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask that the bill may go to the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan insist that the bill go to the public Calendar.

Mr. CONGER. Well, sir, I have such a recollection of what I thought to be schemes by which these lands were to be taken away from the Indians that I thought it best to have the bill sent to the Committee of the Whole on the public Calendar. But provided the bill goes to the Committee of the Whole, I do not care to which Calendar it goes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan withdraws his point; and the bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

MONUMENT TO GENERAL FRANCIS P. BLAIR.

Mr. SPARKS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 2422) authorizing the donation of twelve condemned bronze cannon to aid in the erection of a monument to the memory of General Francis P. Blair; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

Mr. SPARKS also, from the same committee, reported back bills of the following titles; when the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the same, and they were referred to the Committee on War Claims:

A bill (H. R. No. 2559) to reimburse the State of Pennsylvania for moneys paid by said State for losses sustained by citizens thereof during the war of the rebellion, and to pay to said State the balance of the claims of citizens thereof for such losses as are now on file in the office of the auditor-general of said State; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3816) for the relief of James William Butler.

SERGEANT P. P. POWELL, SIXTH REGIMENT UNITED STATES CAVALRY.

Mr. JOHNSTON, from the same committee, reported back, as a substitute for House bill No. 1487, a bill (H. R. No. 4439) to remove the disabilities of Sergeant P. P. Powell, Sixth Regiment United States Cavalry; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent that this bill be put upon its passage at this time.

The bill, which was read, recites in its preamble that Sergeant P. P. Powell, Sixth Regiment United States Cavalry, has served faithfully as a private soldier and non-commissioned officer in the Army of the United States since October 27, 1875; and that he is debarred from all hope of promotion by the provisions of section 1218 of the Revised Statutes; and then it provides that his disabilities under said section be removed.

Mr. CONGER. Is there a petition accompanying this?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask that the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill authorizing the appointment of P. P. Powell an officer in the United States Army, after due consideration, makes the following report:

P. P. Powell is now a soldier in the Sixth Regiment United States Cavalry. He has served faithfully four years on the frontier in such a manner as to win the favorable opinion of his officers, in consequence of which he has had such advancement as those officers could give him. He has also been recommended by them for a commission. He has passed the required examination creditably. The service in the confederate army, which disqualifies him for a commission in that of the United States, was performed in his boyhood, between his sixteenth and eighteenth years. The late Secretary of War says in a letter herewith "that should the young gentleman's appointment be authorized by Congress, he should unhesitatingly recommend it." The committee recommends that the bill be passed.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, there can be no possible objection to the passage of this bill. It is not a sweeping relief from the disabilities of section 1218 of the Revised Statutes, but is individual to this case. I think this soldier merits this act of kindness from the American Congress.

Mr. McCOOK. Mr. Speaker, I wish to supplement what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said by calling attention to this fact in connection with this young man: When he was a mere youth, sixteen years of age, he served for two years in the confederate army. Nearly five years ago he enlisted in the Army of the United States, and since that time has served as a private soldier and non-commissioned officer to the entire approval of all his officers. He does not ask a bill from this Congress to appoint him to the position of a lieutenant in the Army of the United States, but simply comes here asking that these disabilities shall be removed under this section, so he shall not be debarred of all hope or right of promotion.

And I say, Mr. Speaker, and I am considerable of a republican, if you will pardon the statement, that a man who has possibly risked his life several times in four or five years in the Army of the United States ought not to be debarred of the right of promotion when under the law he can sit in the House of Representatives or become President of the United States.

Mr. CONGER. I made no objection to the passage of this bill, but merely asked whether any petition accompanied it. I desire to say in addition to what has already been said that when a man goes into the military service of the United States and for years shows his devotion to his country, and comes here and asks for the removal of his disabilities, I shall be among the first to vote in favor of the proposition.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. BROWNE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back adversely in the following cases; which were laid upon the table and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 908) for the relief of Parmenas Taylor Turnley, late captain and assistant quartermaster, United States Army;

A bill (H. R. No. 907) for the relief of Herman J. Korff, late lieutenant-colonel of the Tenth Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2240) for the relief of Richard M. Rucker.

Mr. BROWNE moved to reconsider the vote by which these cases were laid upon the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CARLILE BOYD.

Mr. LE FEVRE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 3477) for the relief of Carlile Boyd; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DAVID W. STOCKSTILL.

Mr. LE FEVRE also, from the same committee, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 554) for the relief of David W. Stockstill, of Sidney, Ohio; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS S. BRIDGES.

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia, from the same committee, reported back adversely a bill (S. No. 229) for the relief of Thomas S. Bridges; which was laid upon the table, and the adverse report ordered to be printed.

J. E. LABATT, JR.

Mr. UPSON, from the same committee, moved that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2709) for the relief of J. E. Labatt, jr., and that the same be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the morning hour has expired.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

GOVERNMENT BRIDGE, ROCK ISLAND.

Mr. PRICE, by unanimous consent, presented the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be instructed to inform this House whether any railroad company other than the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company has made application for the right to use the Government bridge over the Mississippi River at Rock Island for the crossing of its cars; and also whether any money has been paid to the Government by any railroad company other than the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company for the use of said Government bridge in crossing cars from the State of Illinois to the State of Iowa, or from the State of Iowa to the State of Illinois; and also whether, under the law making appropriations for, and authorizing the construction of, said bridge, any railroad company other than the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company has the legal right to use said bridge in any manner, by its own employés or otherwise, without the consent of the proper officer of the Government, and by paying such compensation to the Government and in such manner as said officer may direct; and whether, under the act of Congress authorizing and providing for the construction of said bridge, the said Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company has the right to use said bridge for crossing cars other than their own without paying to the Government just compensation therefor.

MARY E. MORGAN.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4440) granting a pension to Mary E. Morgan, widow of Nathan Morgan, deceased, late a private in Company I, Fortieth Regiment Iowa Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JAMES E. MONTELL.

Mr. KELLEY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 2844) for the relief of James E. Montell, of Baltimore, Maryland; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the report ordered to be printed.

NEW YORK COTTON EXCHANGE.

Mr. MORTON. I ask unanimous consent to present, by request of the New York Cotton Exchange, a report or memorial of the New York Cotton Exchange in reference to the census, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Why cannot that go through the petition-box?

Mr. MORTON. It is very short; and as it treats of a matter of considerable importance, I hope there will be no objection to its being printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The memorial is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

This memorial respectfully represents that the National Cotton Exchange at its last meeting, in the city of New York, appointed the undersigned a committee to memorialize your honorable bodies to amend the census laws in such manner that the Superintendent of the Census may be authorized to publish, in advance of the official publication, the acreage and production of cotton in each county and State.

Your memorialists would respectfully represent that this information is of vast importance to the entire cotton trade, as it will give a reliable basis on which to estimate the yield of cotton from year to year, prevent violent fluctuations in price, and thereby save millions of dollars to the producer and manufacturer.

MOBILE, January 12, 1880.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, for ten days; and

To Mr. WAIT, for one week, on account of important business.

JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. WARD, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution (S. R. No. 75) to print the eulogies delivered in the two Houses of Congress upon the late Zachariah Chandler; when the Speaker signed the same.

LIGHT-HOUSE, STURGEON BAY.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to the establishment of a light-house at the entrance of Sturgeon Bay, Wisconsin; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

GOVERNMENT BUILDING CORNER OF SEVENTEENTH AND F STREETS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, recommending certain improvements be authorized to be made to Government building corner of Seventeenth and F streets, Washington, District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CHANNEL AT PERTH AMBOY, NEW JERSEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting correspondence showing the advantage to be derived from the improvement of the channel at Perth Amboy, New Jersey.

BUILDINGS AT FORT OMAHA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to buildings at Fort Omaha, and transmitting an estimate of additional amount required; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I now demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is a special order which has been set for consideration to-day by order of the House.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I rise to a privileged motion. I move when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. BRIGHT. I ask the gentleman from New York to withdraw his motion, or allow me to offer an amendment providing that the House shall meet to-morrow and have a special session for debate only. There are several gentlemen who desire an opportunity for debate.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. If unanimous consent is given for the purpose asked by the gentleman from Tennessee, I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. BRIGHT. I now ask unanimous consent that to-morrow's session shall be held for debate only, no business of any sort to be transacted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. On what subject?

Mr. BRIGHT. On anything you want.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Tennessee is that the session of the House shall be held to-morrow for debate only. Is there objection?

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER. The special order for to-day is the consideration of bill (H. R. No. 3764) for the relief of General Fitz-John Porter.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BRIGHT. Pending the consideration of the special order, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. This is a privileged day under the rule for that purpose.

Mr. SPARKS. The special order for to-day is a private bill.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. FINLEY. I rise to inquire whether we should not take up the consideration of the rules to-morrow in order to get through with them as rapidly as possible, instead of appointing a day for general debate.

The SPEAKER. That is another question. The Chair desired to know of the gentleman from Ohio if it was his purpose to object to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, which requires unanimous consent, that to-morrow's session shall be for debate only. The Chair did not understand the gentleman as objecting; but if it was his purpose to do so, the Chair will take note of it.

Mr. WRIGHT. Debate on what?

The SPEAKER. On any subject. But the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FINLEY,] the Chair understood, states he rose to object to that arrangement.

Mr. BRIGHT. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his objection. And I submit that the Chair had proceeded to other business.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but the Chair is always willing to go back when a gentleman states that he rose for the purpose of objecting.

Mr. FINLEY. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no further objection.

Mr. COX. I move to reconsider the vote by which it has been ordered that the session of to-morrow shall be for debate only; and I also move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. CONGER. Can that be a subject for a motion? Has not this been done by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent was given to the gentleman from Tennessee to make the motion, and the motion seemed to be unanimously agreed to; whereupon the gentleman from New York moves to reconsider the vote and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; so that hereafter in to-day's session no change of that order can be made by the House.

The motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table was agreed to.

EMANUEL KLAUSER.

On motion of Mr. FORSYTHE, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 368) for the relief of Emanuel Klauser, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EQUESTRIAN STATUE OF GENERAL WINFIELD SCOTT.

Mr. CLYMER. I desire, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, to report back the bill (H. R. No. 4286) to pay Henry K. Brown for the construction of an equestrian statue of General Winfield Scott in the city of Washington, and to move that it be referred to the Committee on the Library.

There being no objection, the Committee on Appropriations was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was referred to the Committee on the Library.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the special order assigned for to-day after the morning hour, being the bill for the relief of General Fitz-John Porter.

Mr. BRIGHT. I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. SPARKS. The gentleman from Tennessee, as I understand, antagonizes this special order by the motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. He now raises the question of consideration against the special order, and does not press the motion to go into committee.

Mr. COX. Which motion is put first?

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration has first to be put. The other motion mentioned would not be in order until the House determines not to consider the special order.

Mr. SPARKS. I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that this is a private bill. His object, therefore, is attained by going to the consideration of this bill, which is the special order for to-day.

Mr. BRIGHT. The usual course in relation to these matters, as I understand, is that all the private claims stand upon the same footing. One occupies no higher position in law or under the rules of the House than another. The usual course is to go to the Private Calendar, where this bill will share the same privileges as all the others. For that reason I raised the question of consideration.

Mr. SPARKS. The only answer to that is, this House has, of its own volition, made this a special order. I am not insisting that this has claims over other bills, but the House by its order has made it special, and as it is a private bill I submit to the gentleman from Tennessee that antagonizing it is hardly fair.

Mr. BRIGHT. I do not suppose it is unfair to do anything under the rules of the House; and I have not yet obtained any knowledge of the fact, if it be a fact, that the claim of General Fitz-John Porter stands upon a higher footing, in a legal point of view, than other claims that are before this House for consideration. Therefore, in behalf of the multitude, I raise the question of consideration against the individual.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I think if the order making the case of General Fitz-John Porter a special order for to-day is insisted upon, it would be equivalent to slamming the door of Congress in the face of every private bill.

The SPEAKER. That is in the nature of an argument.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I would state this: This case would consume a vast amount of time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has allowed some latitude of debate, although, in fact, the question is not debatable.

Mr. BUCKNER. What was the order made by the House?

The SPEAKER. The bill was made a special order for to-day by a vote of the House. The question of consideration is raised by the gentleman from Tennessee. It is for the House to determine whether they will now consider the special order or not. A majority controls.

Mr. FINLEY. Does the gentleman from Tennessee move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. That motion is not before the House, nor would the Chair entertain such motion at this time.

Mr. COX. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee raises the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, debate is not in order.

Mr. COX. I desired to ask a question, not to debate.

The SPEAKER. If it be a parliamentary inquiry, the Chair will hear it.

Mr. COX. I want to ask the Speaker whether the Senate is not now considering a similar bill.

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SPARKS. I will answer it, however, by stating the Senate is not.

Mr. SIMONTON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. If the House refuses now to consider the special order, will it be a special order next private bill day?

The SPEAKER. That is a proper and a very pertinent question. The Chair, however, does not desire to decide in advance, nor until he has examined the record, whether this bill, if the House now refuses to consider it, will go over until next Friday. It would certainly come up either on next Friday or on next Tuesday; if on the latter day, subject to other orders of a similar character. The Chair is not fixed in judgment whether this is fixed for Friday as belonging to the class of private bills which are only considered on that day, or whether the order of the House was of a general character and the special order applies "from day to day until disposed of."

Mr. GARFIELD. Let the order be read.

The SPEAKER. It will be again read.

Mr. KENNA. Before that is done I wish to ask a parliamentary question in that connection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. KENNA. My question is this: If the order making this bill a special order for to-day should be construed to be general in its terms, so as to make it a special order for days other than Friday, would not other special orders made at a date anterior to this, and continuing from day to day, supersede this special order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not at this time desire to decide when this bill will come up again should the House now refuse to proceed to its consideration. The Chair, however, will decide that should the House now refuse to consider this bill it will not lose its special character.

Mr. HOOKER. That will depend upon the character of the order which was made by the House. I ask that that order be read.

The SPEAKER. It has been once read; it will be read again.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SPARKS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the message of the President in relation to General Fitz-John Porter, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3764) for the relief of General Fitz-John Porter, &c., accompanied by a report (No. 129) in writing thereon; which said bill was read twice.

Mr. MCCOOK, by unanimous consent, presented the views of the minority of said committee.

Ordered, That said bill be made the special order for Friday, February 13th proximo, after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of; and that said bill and accompanying report, together with the views of the minority, be printed.

Mr. SPARKS. What is the date of that order?

The CLERK. January 21, 1880.

Mr. SPARKS. The House will now perceive that this order was made more than half a month ago.

A MEMBER. Nearly a month.

Mr. KENNA. I desire to have one point understood in connection with the suggestion of the Chair that the taking up of this matter now may operate to give it place for consideration from day to day until disposed of, even on other days than Friday. My point is that there are other special orders of prior date to this order, which are continuing orders, and which must supersede this order on other days than Fridays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that if considered on other days than Friday the priority of date of special orders would control.

Mr. KENNA. That is all I desire.

Mr. CLYMER. Would it not be a question of consideration between two special orders?

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration could be raised, and the majority of the House would decide that question as to which special order preference in consideration should be given.

Mr. COX. Would the Fitz-John Porter case come up as unfinished business the next time the House shall meet after to-day?

The SPEAKER. It would not, because it has not yet been entered upon.

Mr. COX. Suppose it shall come up to-day and not be finished, and go over until Saturday or Monday, would it not then be unfinished business and in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not propose to decide points of order until they actually come before the House. The point of order indicated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] is not now before the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOKER. My point of order is this: ordinarily under the rules the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] would take precedence to-day. But a certain bill having been made a special order for this day, does not that supersede whatever under the rules would ordinarily be in order at this time? There being a specific matter made by the House a special order for consideration at this particular time, does not that supersede the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. GARFIELD. We have not been able to hear the point of order made by the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. HOOKER.] I would like to understand it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] will state his point of order again.

Mr. HOOKER. To-day is private bill day. On a day prior to this the House ordered that a particular bill should be a special order for to-day. My point of order is, that under that special order the bill supersedes whatever business would under the rules come up in regular order to-day. The special order cannot be antagonized by the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar is not before the House.

Mr. HOOKER. I understood the gentleman from Tennessee to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman mentioned such motion, but did not press it. The Chair understands the question of consideration to be raised by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. BRIGHT.] The practice and the rule of the House is that any member may raise the question of consideration. But the laying aside temporarily of a special order, on a question of consideration, does not deprive it of any privileges accorded to it by the House. The Clerk will read Rule 41.

The Clerk read as follows:

When any motion or proposition is made, the question "Will the House now consider it?" shall not be put unless it is demanded by some member.

The SPEAKER. It is demanded in this case and at this time.

Mr. SPARKS. In making this the special order for to-day it was not the intention to antagonize any other bills. This was fixed as a special order perhaps twenty days ago, thus giving a long time in advance of its consideration for members to examine the bill. It is a private bill, but the order is that the special consideration of that private bill shall be had to-day, and from day to day until disposed of; not from Friday to Friday, but from day to day.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. SPARKS. This bill was fixed as a special order twenty days ago. I do not want to antagonize any other bill, but this bill has been fixed for to-day; why not consider it?

Mr. COX. The gentleman will allow me to suggest that when bills of a private nature are fixed for a Friday and are unfinished on that day, then by the ruling of the Speaker as made heretofore they go over as unfinished business until the next Friday, and do not come up on any other day of the week.

Mr. SPARKS. I do not so understand.

Mr. COX. It has been so ruled.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] raises the question of consideration, which the Chair entertains under Rule 41. The question is, Will the House consider the special order fixed for to-day?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 67, noes 98.

Mr. SPARKS called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SPARKS and Mr. BRIGHT were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 41, noes not counted.

So the House refused to consider the special order.

Mr. MCCOOK. Will the Chair be kind enough to state in what position this bill is now left?

The SPEAKER. The House has refused to consider it at this time, but it is not stripped of its special-order character to be considered from day to day.

Mr. MCCOOK. At what time can it be brought up?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not prepared at this time to decide whether the bill will go over until next Friday, or whether, being fixed as a special order from day to day, it will come up on any other day than Friday. When that question arises, the Chair will be prepared to decide the point.

Mr. CONGER. Can the bill come up next Monday?

The SPEAKER. It cannot; because after the morning hour of Monday motions to suspend the rules will be in order until two o'clock, at which time the floor will be under the control of the Committee for the District of Columbia, next Monday being the third Monday of the month.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole to proceed with the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

Mr. CONGER. Is this "objection day?"

The SPEAKER. It is not; it is consideration day.

The motion of Mr. BRIGHT was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole, (Mr. KEIFER in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

CHARLES CLINTON.

The CHAIRMAN. The first business in order is the bill (H. R. No. 1542) for the relief of Charles Clinton, of New Orleans, late assistant Treasurer at New Orleans. This bill having been recommitted to the Committee of the Whole on Friday last, it now resumes its place on the Calendar.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Charles Clinton, late assistant United States treasurer at New Orleans, Louisiana, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,850, being the amount of public money stolen from his office on the 1st day of May, 1871, and refunded by him to the Government of the United States.

An amendment reported from the Committee of Ways and Means was to add the following:

Provided, That before said money shall be paid the Secretary of the Treasury shall be satisfied, after inquiry and investigation into all the facts, that said sum of money was actually stolen, and that the loss of the same was not the result of any neglect or want of reasonable diligence on the part of said officer.

The pending question was upon the following amendment offered by Mr. MORRISON:

Add to the bill the following:

Provided, That before such money shall be paid, the Secretary of the Treasury shall be satisfied, after inquiry and investigation into all the facts, that said sum of money was actually stolen, and that the loss of the same was not the result of any neglect or want of reasonable diligence on the part of such officer.

Mr. FINLEY. I ask that the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1542) for the relief of Charles Clinton, beg leave to report:

That a similar bill was unanimously reported from the committee at the third session of the Forty-fifth Congress, but was not reached for consideration in the House. The report then made states the facts connected with this claim so clearly and succinctly that we prefer to adopt it rather than prepare a new statement. It is as follows:

That they have given full consideration to the bill providing for the relief of Charles Clinton, late assistant United States treasurer at New Orleans, Louisiana, and of all the facts connected therewith.

It appears from the information furnished from the Treasury Department, that on the morning of the 1st of May, 1871, the sum of $5,850 was stolen from the office of the assistant treasurer at New Orleans by some party unknown, and that immediately thereafter the amount was refunded by the assistant treasurer to the Government.

It appears from the testimony submitted to the committee that a thorough examination of all the facts and into the business of the office of the assistant treasurer by the special agents of the Treasury exonerated the cashier and employés of the office in New Orleans and the assistant treasurer himself from all fault or blame.

It is made to appear that, in addition to the usual duties of the assistant treasurer, he was required by the Secretary of the Treasury to take charge of all the internal-revenue stamps to be sold throughout the Southwest, and to sell the same from his office, without being allowed any increase of force, although the assistant treasurer frequently applied for authority to employ a clerk to take special charge of this business, and informed the Secretary that without an increase of the employés he could not conduct the office satisfactorily.

The Secretary replied that no appropriation had been made for this purpose, and that therefore the request of the assistant treasurer could not be complied with.

It appears that while the cashier was engaged for a moment in attending to the duties of his office away from the counter, on which were several packages of money lying, some thief fished up one of them by reaching over the barrier in front of the counter and immediately disappeared.

There is no suspicion, or grounds of suspicion, against the assistant treasurer, or his cashier, or the employés of the office.

It appears that the assistant treasurer was a zealous and careful officer, and that the cashier was also diligent and faithful. Large sums of money passed through this office, and every dollar was faithfully accounted for. There was never at any time any complaint.

It is also made to appear by the testimony before your committee that the assistant treasurer exercised due diligence and watchful care over the appointments and over the actions of his subordinates.

The proof absolutely excludes any presumption of fraud or misconduct on the part of the assistant treasurer or his subordinates, or any privity or knowledge on the part of the assistant treasurer whatever.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the committee for a few moments I desire to say but a word in advocacy of the bill reported by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE.] The report just read shows that the bill has been twice considered in two different Congresses by the Committee of Ways and Means, and that in each there was a unanimous report in its favor from that committee.

This is the first time since I have been a member of this House that I have risen to advocate a private claim of any character whatever. The gentleman in whose behalf this claim is presented does not belong to my political party. He is, however, a constituent of mine. I feel, therefore, that if I could make any discrimination whatever with regard to a claim here, it would be in favor of a citizen not of the same political party with myself; for, sir, I should distrust myself, I should feel, perhaps, that I might be actuated by personal or political bias, if I made myself in any sense the champion of a claim held by a democrat.

Mr. Chairman, what are the facts in this case? The evidence shows that at times money, amounting to as much as $17,000,000, was in the keeping of this officer, and that at no time while he held the office was there less than $5,400,000 in his charge. The salary of this officer for the performance of a trust involving such vast responsibility is the small sum of $4,500.

More than this: while in the discharge of the duties of this office this assistant treasurer was notified that he must take charge of the sales of all the internal-revenue stamps for the whole Southwest. The sales of these stamps exceeded the sum of $200,000 a week. It was a new, an unusual, an extraordinary duty not connected by law, by precedent, or by custom with the duty of this officer as assistant treasurer. He protested against this duty being imposed upon him. He notified the Treasury Department that he had not a sufficient force of employés in his office to discharge the additional duties thus placed upon him.

After he had assumed this trust, in addition to his regular duty, which already involved the receipt and disbursement of millions of dollars, it was discovered that the small sum of $5,800 was missing. An investigation was had. The officers of the Treasury exonerated him from all fault. His employés were also exonerated.

Why, sir, only the other day—the last time this committee had the Private Calendar under consideration—in a case where the evidence showed that the cashier had stolen the money, this House voted to relieve his superior officer, who was held to be blameless. All the precedents we have had before us have been cases where the subordinate has been found guilty of misconduct in his office. You have in such cases relieved the superior officer upon the ground that if he were himself faithful, if he were himself guilty of no negligence, you would not visit upon him the misconduct or negligence of his subordinates.

In this case, Mr. Chairman, there has been no negligence either on the part of the superior officer or on the part of the subordinate, none whatever. The Committee of Ways and Means has declared twice to this House its solemn judgment upon the testimony before it that this is a case where relief ought to be granted on the part of the Government. I repeat, sir, there has been no confession of any defalcation on the part of either one of these officers. All the testimony concurs in proving nobody in that office was guilty of any negligence, but on the contrary that there was due diligence exercised by this officer and his subordinates.

What a spectacle it is for gentlemen in this House, in view of the precedents which are thick upon our books, in view of our action at the last session of this Committee of the Whole House, now to insist upon holding a public officer for the discharge, not of his legitimate duties, but for the discharge of extraordinary duties imposed upon him by the Secretary of the Treasury, when no fault is shown either upon his part or that of his subordinates.

It is pretended by some that the railing around this office was not sufficiently high to prevent anybody getting over it, and therefore if anybody did get over it the assistant treasurer himself was responsible. This railing, sir, was identical with that in all the banks of New Orleans. It was the usual, customary, proper railing found in all banking establishments of that city.

It is said by others that he should have been present at the counter all the time. How is it possible, when these vast sums of money were intrusted to his keeping with only a single cashier, that he and the cashier both could be at this counter all the time? Any gentleman who has practical acquaintance with the business at that time in that city must know how utterly impossible it could be for this officer to be at all times at the counter in this office.

This was the first officer of the Federal Government in that Department in the city of New Orleans who had not retired from this office as a delinquent. All his predecessors, as the official reports prove, had been delinquents from the close of the war.

These are the facts in the case. I cannot appreciate the zeal which has led some gentlemen here to pick out this case and make an example of it when they have so cheerfully voted for other and weaker cases.

I also dissent from the doctrine laid down here that officers of the Government intrusted with Government money are liable, at all events, to be classed as insurers with innkeepers and common carriers. That doctrine cannot be maintained in law or reason. The true doctrine was laid down by Lord Holt, who has done more perhaps to establish the British constitution than any other single man who ever lived. He performed the same work for the British government that John Marshall has done for the Government of the United States. He laid down the true doctrine in the case of Coggs vs. Bernard. It was further exemplified by the brilliant genius of Sir William Jones. It is still further shown in those principles of bailment, which will live as long as the English language, by Mr. Justice Story.

This officer was a bailee for hire and under bonds for due diligence in the performance of his duty. The opposite doctrine would be monstrous.

Will you tell me the Secretary of the Treasury, or any officer holding vast sums belonging to the people of this country in his possession and under his responsibility, is bound as an insurer, as innkeeper, or as common carrier? Sir, such a doctrine is repulsive to every man who really and seriously considers the liabilities and responsibilities of life. We could get no man to accept office under this Government if he were liable at all events for every dollar which belonged to the Government or passed through the Department over which he presided.

The opposite is the true doctrine, and it is found laid down by Moses himself; gentlemen will find it in the fifteenth verse of Exodus. It is laid down by Chancellor Kent that a postmaster could not be held liable for any deficiency in his office; that he was liable only for due diligence in the discharge of his duty.

Mr. Chairman, I say if the representatives of the people shall find men holding official trust, men charged with the administration of the great departments of the Government, always upholding the principles of honor, always discharging their obligations with diligence and good faith, we shall have cause of congratulation indeed.

Mr. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to detain the committee at any length in regard to this matter. I simply desire that the letter of the special agent, which has heretofore been read and printed in the RECORD when we considered this matter before, shall now be read. I think that letter will show that this officer was not in the discharge of due diligence as has been claimed by gentlemen on this floor.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE SPECIAL AGENT UNITED STATES TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
New Orleans, May 8, 1871.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report relative to the recent robbery at the office of the United States assistant treasurer in the city of New Orleans.

On the morning of the 2d instant I was informed that on the previous day the sum of $5,850 had been stolen from that office by some party unknown. Having no instructions, special or general, to investigate into matters connected with the sub-treasury, I immediately telegraphed to the Department that the above stated sum of money was said to have been stolen from the sub-treasury, and at the same time asked for instruction in the premises.

The Department, on 3d instant, instructed me by telegram in the following words: "Investigate robbery, being careful not to derange efforts of Clinton, who has employed detectives."

I have closely questioned each one of the employés in the sub-treasury, and have consulted with Detective Smith, who was employed by Mr. Clinton to discover and arrest the guilty party.

I find that between the hours of two and three p. m., on 1st instant, the sum of $27,000 (perhaps a little over that amount) lay on the counter close by the desk of Mr. Shute, the cashier. This sum of money was in several packages of various amounts, and among which was one package of $5,850.

There are two apartments or rooms in this establishment, one room being occupied by the bookkeepers and the assistant treasurer, and the other being the office where the funds are received and paid out. The latter room is occupied by Mr. Shute, cashier and paying teller; John L. Henderson, the reciving teller; and John H. Aufdemorte, a porter who is employed in counting currency at a table in the rear of Mr. Shute's desk, and nearly opposite the window through which he pays out the funds. The counter is nearly four feet high; on the other side of the counter there is a protection about three feet high, the lower part of this protection being common panes of glass and the upper part a slight wooden railing. These panes of glass were not shaded or darkened; consequently, any person standing outside of the counter could see everything that lay on the counter inside of said protection. The counter projects about eight inches outside of this protection, so that an outsider could very easily stand up on this projection by holding on to the top railing, and when in that position could, if the officials inside were absent for a moment, or if their backs were turned toward the counter, very easily, with a pointed cane, extract a package of money almost in an instant.

For a short time between the hours of two and three p. m. on 1st instant the cashier and receiving teller were together in the cashier's vault. While they were there there was no person in the front office except Aufdemorte, the porter, who was engaged at a table counting currency, and having his back toward the counter. At this time the $27,000 was lying on the counter, and among which was the package of $5,850 in currency.

Aufdemorte states that while the cashier and receiving teller were in the vault he heard a slight rustle or creaking noise outside the counter; that he did not look around to ascertain what caused this noise, as he supposed it was the creaking of the foot-board on which persons waiting outside of the cashier's window stand. He also states that at that time there was but one person outside the counter.

Soon after three o'clock Mr. Shute, on verifying his cash accounts for the day, found his cash short $5,850 currency. He recollected that a package of that amount was laying on his counter when he went to the vault, and he found this same package missing.

Mr. Shute informs me that when he discovered the loss he examined the outside of the counter, and that on the projection (which I have already described) he found some sand which appeared to be the foot-print of some person who had stood upon this projection.

This foot-print was right opposite where the money lay on the counter.

Detective Smith was immediately sent for and intrusted with the investigation of the case.

I have consulted with Smith. He and I agree in the opinion that the money was stolen over the counter at the time the cashier and teller were in the vault and the office in the sole possession of the porter, who was busy counting currency, and who had his back to the counter.

It will be seen that under the circumstances, with the money exposed to the full view of outsiders through an unshaded glass, with the aid afforded by the outside projection of the counter, no person in the office except a porter, whose back was turned, a very favorable opportunity was afforded to any expert thief to abstract a package of money from the counter.

Thus far Detective Smith has failed to find any clew to the robbery, and he entertains no hopes of success.

I have no suspicion against Aufdemorte, the porter. I inquired closely into his movements after the robbery was discovered, and I find nothing to excite any suspicion.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. J. KINSELLA,
Special Agent.

Hon. GEO. S. BOUTWELL,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, two weeks ago when this matter was up for consideration I stated that I desired to make no factious opposition to it. I now reiterate that statement. My principal object in opposing the payment of this money is this: I need not say to gentlemen on this floor that for all the years of the past it has become the custom for a man after he has obtained an office and become a defaulter to come to Congress and ask for relief, and almost invariably that relief has been granted.

Now, I know not what other gentlemen may think in reference to this matter, but for myself I am clearly and decidedly of the opinion that a man who accepts a trust or office under the Government ought to be held to a strict accountability for the funds placed in his hands. He takes the office with notice, and his bond is for the assurance of the faithful discharge of the duties to be performed by him in that connection. If this is to continue in the future as in the past, it will be understood that all that is necessary is, in the first place, for a man to obtain an office; in the next place, to be very certain to draw his salary, and in the third and last place, finding that he is unable to account for funds which have been placed in his hands, he need only come to Congress and say that he has been diligent, faithful, indefatigable, and all that in the discharge of his duties, but that somebody, somehow, at some time, and he is unable to tell exactly how, took away some of that money, and Congress, ever ready, I am sorry to say—ever ready to vote away money belonging to other people, will relieve the party, and the Government loses the money.

We higgle here over $2 a month, $4 a month, or $8 a month to the men who stood in the front rank of battle and saved the life of this nation; but five, ten, fifteen, or twenty thousand dollars can be voted away almost without a division of this House. I submit to gentlemen if we are acting the part of good guardians of the public funds when we do such things?

Now, my friend from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] has quoted to the committee authorities all the way back to Kent, Story, Marshall, and even as far back as to Moses—an array of distinguished authorities that I would not dare, sir, to interpose my feeble voice against if it were not for just one thing. My friend winds up all of his quotations and references of authorities, coming down through all the ages from Moses, every one of them, and I call his attention to the fact "that due diligence had been exercised."

Now, Mr. Chairman, upon this question of due diligence I claim this whole matter hinges. If you show me that this gentleman who now seeks relief, or any other person who was under his control, has exercised due diligence in caring for the funds of the Government which were placed in his possession and under his control, I will be the very last man to raise my voice against granting the relief.

Mr. CARLISLE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question in this connection?

Mr. PRICE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARLISLE. I just wish the gentleman to designate to the committee the particular point in which he claims that this official failed to exercise due diligence. I do not speak of the subordinates or other parties who may have been connected with the office, but of the officer himself.

Mr. PRICE. Yes, sir; I will endeavor to answer the gentleman, and if I am not able to make it clear, then I will fail in all that I have to say in reference to this subject.

The testimony, and that is the only thing that I base my opinion on, for I know nothing of this case except what the testimony discloses, but the facts set forth in that report to which we listened and which it is thought is to clear this officer of culpable negligence in the discharge of his duties—the testimony shall answer the gentleman and be authority for what I have to say. I base my judgment and my action in this matter entirely on that report. Now what does that report say? It says—and I want to have the attention of the gentleman who asked me the question—there were three or more packages of money—and I wish gentlemen of the committee to pay particular attention to this, for it is in my judgment the point here—there were three packages of money, unopened packages, lying upon the counter, and among them was one containing $5,850, and that the gentleman who had that money in charge and whose business it was to guard it was away from that counter upon which $27,000 of money was lying there in these three packages. The gentleman whose business, whose sworn duty it was to care for it, ay as vigilantly as the three-headed dog guards the gate of the infernal regions, was away.

A MEMBER. The dog Cerberus, or, as the classical pronunciation would now have it, "Kerberus."

Mr. PRICE. Well, Cerberus or "Kerberus," whichever you please; anybody can understand what a three-headed dog means, but "Kerberus" may not be understood by every person.

Now, for a time the man whose business it was to guard that money was away.

Mr. CARLISLE. That was not this officer.

Mr. PRICE. I am stating that the party whose business it was to guard this money was away. Now, the point was made that the fence was so high that the person who took the money could not get over it. Suppose I admit that. Then I suppose as a necessary consequence the man who took the money did not get over the fence, but was over the fence and was one of those inside.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him? I have no doubt his object is to get at the facts.

Mr. PRICE. Certainly.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the gentleman show me by what part of the testimony it was established the fence was so high that no man could get over it?

Mr. PRICE. That evidence is in the report which was read when the matter was under discussion here formerly. The report sets forth this state of facts: that the railing around there was of a certain height, and that the officer in charge had raised it four feet higher in order to "make assurance double sure;" and that was used as an argument to show that the officer had used due diligence.

Now, in the same connection the report discloses this other fact: There was another man, an employé of the establishment, sitting within a few feet of this money; and somehow, intentionally or otherwise, he sat with his back to the money. Now, on the hypothesis that somebody came in and climbed up on the outside of the railing, and with the assistance of a hook or in any other way secured the money, it is singular that this man, sitting within a few feet, did not discover it; but it is argued by those who propose to pay the money that that could not be done. If so, then some employé of the office must have taken the money, and that makes it worse.

I wish to call attention to another point. This package of $5,850 was lying there with other packages, amounting to $27,000 in all. But this officer never discovered he had lost a package till after three o'clock, when he began to make up his cash for that night. I need not say to gentlemen of the intelligence of those who sit before me that if these had been open packages and the money had been lying there loose it might have been very easy for somebody to extract a portion of the money without the discovery of the loss being made by this officer till he made up his cash; but when he goes back to the counter, if he had had his eyes open at all would he not have observed that one package was gone and only two left, and would he not want to know where that package had gone? Yet he never discovered that the money had been taken until he came to make up his cash, as the report discloses.

The gentleman from Louisiana quotes from the Bible to prove his position and thereby establish the point that the Government ought to lose this $5,850.

I have sent for this good old book [holding up the Bible] because if I thought my friend from Louisiana was really supported in what he contends for by this book, I would abandon all opposition to the bill. But I want to read what I find in the fourteenth and fifteenth verses of the twenty-second chapter of Exodus, to which the gentleman from Louisana refers:

> And if a man borrow—

This man did not borrow anything; that I know. The other man borrowed it without leave; for the owner was not there—

> And if a man borrow aught of his neighbour, and it be hurt, or die, the owner thereof being not with it, he shall surely make it good.

The owner of this money was the Government of the United States. The owner of this money did not happen to be there, and we ask that this man shall make it good.

Mr. GIBSON. But the officer in this case did not borrow the money.

Mr. PRICE. I did not say he borrowed it.

Mr. GIBSON. Let me quote the following verse.

Mr. PRICE. I have quoted only one verse of Scripture; two will not hurt this House.

Mr. GIBSON. It is said in the following verse:

If it be a hired thing, it came for his hire.

That is, he is not to return it.

Mr. PRICE. There follows the case if the owner had been with it:

But if the owner thereof be with it, he shall not make it good.

But the owner of this money was not with it. To the law and to the testimony: I refer the gentleman from Louisiana to his own witness.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the gentleman permit me——

Mr. PRICE. I cannot yield further. But let me say I have not heard so many quotations from the Scriptures in a money speech in a long time. In this case the quotation is a good one, but it makes not for the gentleman from Louisiana but against him.

Now, it appears that this gentleman who lost this money is a republican, and it may be said I must be a hard-hearted man to vote against a republican; but really it never occurred to me that a man's politics had anything to do with his duty or his faithfulness in office. A man holding a public trust should be faithful whether he belongs to one party or to another. All public officers should be held to strict accountability, whether they belong to the republican party, or the democratic party, or that other party.

Several MEMBERS. What other party?

Mr. PRICE. The whole point in this matter is simply this: If this gentleman exercised due diligence, if he was sufficiently careful, if he was sufficiently watchful, then he ought to be relieved; if he was not sufficiently careful, if he was not sufficiently watchful, he ought not to be relieved.

If any gentleman can bring himself to believe that a man with $27,000 in three unopened packages lying upon the counter, it being his business to watch and care for that money, losing one of those packages and not discovering it until after three o'clock, when he comes to count up his cash, has used due diligence and care in regard to that money, then he may believe that this man ought to be relieved. But I do not think that any man here who in his private capacity had an employé in his service, which employé lost $5,800 in that way, would believe that he had used proper care. At least he would be apt to say to himself that the employé had not exercised due diligence, proper care, and sufficient watchfulness in guarding the treasure left at his disposition and under his control.

Now, my friend says that this man, whose business it was to take care of this money, turned his back to it only for a moment. For a moment? Why, sir, he did not discover the loss for more than an hour. And the Philadelphia case which is sought to be made a parallel case to this, and which is pleaded as a precedent for the passage of this bill, is as different and wide apart from this as are the poles. In the Philadelphia case the man abstracted half an eagle, or a whole eagle, or a quarter of an eagle, again and again and again, and there was no way to discover it. If he had stolen a box of coin, then you would have a parallel case; but he did not steal a box. And when it was first suggested to the man whose business it was to care for that money that there was a loss, he had every box carefully weighed and found out that $800 of the money had been taken. He paid the money, and turned the man off. Now, was any man turned off in this New Orleans affair? Not one. The same men who lost the money were continued there; and that is another evidence that there was not due care and diligence exercised in guarding these funds of the United States.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PRICE. Certainly.

Mr. GIBSON. Do you hold that this officer is to be held to strict accountability where the evidence shows that his subordinate was guilty of the wrong or where the evidence shows that the subordinate stole the money? Now in the Philadelphia case, if the gentleman will allow me to allude to it, it was shown by the testimony that the subordinate officer did actually steal the money while in the office. But in the New Orleans case it is shown by the testimony that the subordinate as well as the principal was free from all blame.

Mr. PRICE. The difference is simply this——

Mr. GIBSON. And I am astonished to find that the gentleman himself, who voted for the Philadelphia case, now opposes the bill in the New Orleans case.

Mr. PRICE. In the Philadelphia case they found the man who took the money and turned him off. In the New Orleans case they have not found the man who took the money.

Mr. GIBSON. They cannot find him.

Mr. PRICE. No; because it was a ring there; and, so far as the record shows, there were partners in the affair. Now, due diligence on the part of the officer in charge of the money would have required him, when he went into the vault, to have taken the money with him; if otherwise he would be obliged to leave it unguarded.

Mr. GIBSON. The gentleman knows that there were $17,000,000 there.

Mr. PRICE. No; there were not $17,000,000 on that counter, nor were there $17,000,000 there at any one time, nor the half of it, nor the quarter of it. There were only $27,000 on the counter, in three unopened packages, as I have stated, and as it is stated in the report which seeks to exonerate this man.

This man should have taken this money with him into the safe rather than to have left it there on the counter unguarded. It was more than an hour before he discovered the loss. I hold that due diligence would have required him to have kept that money under his eye all the time. The plea made that he had other duties to perform does not count at all in this case. If he had merely lost some revenue-stamps that argument might be used. But he did not lose revenue-stamps; he simply lost a package of money containing $5,800, and did not know his loss until more than an hour after the package was taken, although it had been left on the counter in full view of everybody in the office. He did not discover the loss until after three o'clock, when he came to make up his cash account.

Now, I contend that there has not been due diligence exercised in this case. We should say when we put a man in office that we will hold him to a strict accountability for the faithful discharge of his duties; and then if he fails he, and not the people of the country, should suffer the loss.

Mr. CARLISLE. It is not my purpose to enter again into the discussion of this matter; but I desire to say a few words only in response to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE.]

I asked my friend to designate to the committee any single particular in which this officer, who seeks relief under the present bill, had been personally negligent. I understood the gentleman to reply in substance that he would show a want of care on the part of that officer personally, or he would abandon his opposition to this bill. Now, I submit to the members of the committee who have listened to the gentleman throughout his argument that he has not specified a single particular in which this officer has been personally guilty of negligence.

Mr. PRICE. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. CARLISLE. Certainly.

Mr. PRICE. Did I not say that he went off and left the money lying there with no one to watch it, and that he did not discover the loss until an hour afterward, when he came to count up his cash after three o'clock?

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman is talking all the time about the cashier in the sub-treasury, and not about the assistant treasurer, who seeks relief.

Mr. PRICE. And whose servant was the cashier?

Mr. CARLISLE. The cashier was appointed by the Treasury Department at Washington.

Mr. PRICE. So was this other man in Philadelphia.

Mr. CARLISLE. Certainly; and you voted to relieve the officer in that case.

Mr. PRICE. The cases are not similar at all.

Mr. CARLISLE. The Philadelphia case is a much worse one than this, as I will show before I get through.

Now, it was a physical impossibility for the assistant treasurer of the United States at New Orleans to be all the time with this money. It was a physical impossibility for him to watch at every moment of the day and night each package of money in that office. It was therefore absolutely necessary to the discharge of the duties of his position that he should have subordinates, and that he should intrust his business in a great measure to them. Every gentleman will admit this. Accordingly, we find that this assistant treasurer had his subordinates, consisting of a cashier, some clerks, and a porter. It was the cashier who, by virtue of his office, had special charge of the money, and who, at the time this money was stolen, had turned his back for a moment to attend to additional duties which had been imposed upon the office by the regulations of the Treasury Department.

Now, I submit to my friend from Iowa that there is a vast difference between this case and the Philadelphia case, which was acted upon favorably by the House a week or so ago. I submit to my friend that even if it be conceded for the sake of the argument that there was gross negligence on the part of this cashier and of the other subordinates in the office at the time this money was stolen, still there is a vast difference between this case and the Philadelphia case; and the difference is all in favor of the present bill, for in the Philadelphia case the subordinates, according to the evidence, were not simply guilty of negligence, but were guilty of downright theft.

Mr. PRICE. Somebody must have stolen this money.

Mr. CARLISLE. Somebody did steal it; but I say to my friend that even if we concede that some of these subordinate officers in the office at New Orleans actually stole this money, of which there is no evidence, then we have a case like the one from Philadelphia, in which the gentleman from Iowa voted to relieve the officer.

In the present instance somebody stole the money, of course; but the simple question is, was it stolen, either by a subordinate in the office or by some persons outside of the office, by reason of any negligence or want of care upon the part of the assistant treasurer personally? Until my friend from Iowa can show to the satisfaction of the committee that it was lost by reason of some personal negligence or wrong upon the part of the assistant treasurer himself, it seems to me he still leaves this case a much stronger one than that in which he voted to relieve the officer.

Mr. REED. Did the committee make any inquiry as to whether this leaving of packages of money in this manner in this place was a custom at that office?

Mr. CARLISLE. They did not.

Mr. REED. So that no information can be afforded us as to whether this was a custom known to the assistant treasurer?

Mr. CARLISLE. No evidence upon the subject was before the committee.

Mr. GIBSON. I will state that it was the custom at this office to receive and pay out over the counter large sums of money, and that on account of the small number of employés in the office it was absolutely impossible for any one of those employés to keep that money constantly under his eye.

Mr. CARLISLE. I was just about to state the facts appearing before the committee. It appeared before the committee that these three packages of money, amounting in the aggregate to some $27,000, had just been brought into the office from the bank by the porter and laid down on the counter. Now, the committee supposed that it was not negligence in these gentlemen in charge of the office to fail to put this money immediately away in the safe. We assume that the practice prevailing in ordinary banking institutions would be likely to prevail in an office of this character—that packages of money would be brought in by the porter and laid down, for the purpose probably of being inspected by the officers having charge of the money, and that in a reasonable time the money would be put away in the vault. We all know, moreover, that it is the custom in all banking institutions to keep upon the counter quite a considerable amount of money for constant use.

Mr. PRICE. Let me correct the gentleman. No bank keeps its money upon the counter in such a way that it can be reached by an outsider.

Mr. CARLISLE. I thought it had been shown to the satisfaction even of the gentleman from Iowa that this money was not within the reach of an outsider unless he employed some artificial means to reach it. The thief was compelled to climb up upon the railing which had been constructed there, and by reaching over with a hook, or some similar instrument, take the package. This package of money was not even lying at or near the open place through which the persons doing business with the office were in the habit of transacting their business, but was off some distance at one side. This is all I desire to say.

Mr. GIBSON. I wish to say in reply to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] that a few days after this money was stolen $50,000 was taken from the Canal Bank in New Orleans, in the same manner, by some person jumping upon the outer railing and reaching over with a hook or something of that kind. In this way some $50,000 was abstracted from that bank, one of the best and most powerful banking institutions in New Orleans.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take up any time in debating this question. By examination of the RECORD of January 16, I find this whole question was fully discussed in the Committee of the Whole House, and that, after full and free discussion on the motion to lay the bill aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, the ayes were 62 and the noes 72. Therefore this bill was unfavorably reported to the House from this very committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that is an error. It was not unfavorably reported.

Mr. FINLEY. I understand the motion was made in the Committee of the Whole House, and I so find it in the RECORD:

> The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation?
> The question being taken, it was decided in the negative—ayes 62, noes 72.

It certainly was not a favorable recommendation; but, on the contrary, the committee when it divided were against agreeing to the bill. How the bill has been returned back to the Committee of the Whole House I cannot understand. I only make this remark that, as the bill has already been fully discussed, I hope, by unanimous consent, we shall have no further discussion, but that the matter shall now be disposed of.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, the question of diligence has been raised in this discussion. I stated on a former occasion the general objections I have to this bill. I desire to add to what I have heretofore said a word or two on the subject whether this officer has exercised such diligence in the performance of his duty as to exonerate him from blame.

The best thing that could be said for him, applying the law of bailment, is that he was a bailee for hire. A bailee for hire is bound to full diligence, I believe many of the law writers say utmost diligence. Was there such diligence in this case—was there ordinary diligence in this case, not to speak of utmost diligence such as the law would apply to a bailee for hire, but was there ordinary diligence? The special officer who examined this subject has reported as follows:

> I find that between the hours of two and three p. m., on 1st instant, the sum of $27,000 (perhaps a little over that amount) lay on the counter close by the desk of Mr. Shute, the cashier. This sum of money was in several packages of various amounts, and among which was one package of $5,850.
> There are two apartments or rooms in this establishment, one room being occupied by the bookkeepers and the assistant treasurer, and the other being the office where the funds are received and paid out. The latter room is occupied by Mr. Shute, cashier and paying teller; John L. Henderson, the receiving teller; and John H. Aufdemorte, a porter who is employed in counting currency at a table in the rear of Mr. Shute's desk, and nearly opposite the window through which he pays out the funds. The counter is nearly four feet high; on the other side of the counter there is a protection about three feet high, the lower part of this protection being common panes of glass and the upper part a slight wooden railing. These panes of glass were not shaded or darkened; consequently, any person standing outside of the counter could see everything that lay on the counter inside of said protection. The counter projects about eight inches outside of this protection, so that an outsider could very easily stand up on this projection by holding on to the top railing, and when in that position could, if the officials inside were absent for a moment, or if their backs were turned toward the counter, very easily, with a pointed cane, extract a package of money almost in an instant.
> For a short time between the hours of two and three p. m. on the 1st instant the cashier and receiving teller were together in the cashier's vault. While they were there there was no person in the front office except Aufdemorte, the porter, who was engaged at a table counting currency, and having his back toward the counter. At this time the $27,000 was lying on the counter, and among which was the package of $5,850 in currency.
> Aufdemorte states that while the cashier and receiving teller were in the vault he heard a slight rustle or creaking noise outside the counter; that he did not look around to ascertain what caused this noise, as he supposed it was the creaking of the foot board on which persons waiting outside of the cashier's window stand. He also states that at that time there was but one person outside the counter.
> Soon after three o'clock Mr. Shute, on verifying his cash accounts for the day, found his cash short $5,850 currency. He recollected that a package of that amount was laying on his counter when he went to the vault, and he found this same package missing.

That money, it seems, had recently been brought in by the porter. He does not inform us how he come to know of that particular package or the amount of money in it. I have no special point to make on that, however. The point I have to make is this: He who handles money for himself or for another is liable to take reasonable care that it shall not be exposed to theft.

Here was a public counter in a public office where people were free to resort. The money was laid down upon that counter, and the two responsible officers retired to their vault, leaving it on this counter, liable to be stolen, as the sequel seems to show, if that be the true theory, with none but a porter in the room where it was, and he engaged in other business, with his back turned to the money, not even turning around when he heard the "creaking" which he speaks of in his testimony. Is that diligence? Could it be supposed that any man transacting business for himself would have so acted and so exposed his own money?

But it does not seem it was ascertained the money was there. They do not tell us who took the money from this counter to the teller's room. They do not explain how it was that it was not discovered when the money was taken from the counter. This package of $5,850 was not missed until the teller came to make up his cash account. There is nothing in this case to exclude the idea that one of the officers within the bank may have taken that money. Of course I do not pretend to assert they did or did not, but I say, from the testimony before us, there is nothing to exclude the idea that some person within the bank took this money. And the very carelessness referred to by the report makes it an unpleasant case against the officers.

I thought, Mr. Chairman, I would say this much on the subject of diligence, and that there is not made out here, in my judgment, what seems to be a case appealing to Congress for relief.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. A single word, Mr. Chairman. Our friend from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] deprecates the citation of Moses as an authority on the question of money.

Mr. PRICE. Not at all; it is the best authority in the world.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understood the gentleman to say it was the first time he had heard Moses cited as an authority on the money question——

Mr. PRICE. In this House.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If that suggestion had come from my friends in the center I should not have been surprised. I remember that Moses is an admirable authority touching the character of money; for he said, "Let all your payments be made according to or after the shekel of the sanctuary," which was a coin, and for a thousand years and more was of unvarying value. They never had a greenback during that entire period. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. WEAVER. We indorse Moses. Moses in the second chapter of Genesis said that the gold of Havilah is good. He puts it in the lowest degree of comparison. He foresaw by his prophetic wisdom that even national-bank money was better and that greenbacks were the best. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not recall anything in Moses which sustains the gentleman's assertion, except that "gold was good." On the contrary, as I have said, his injunction was let all thy payments or estimations be "after the shekel of the sanctuary," which was an unvarying coin measure of value for more than a thousand years.

Now, one word touching this bill, Mr. Chairman. It is easy to be wise after the fact. How often good reasons occur to us for not doing a thing, or for doing a thing, after the fact has occurred. It occurs to my friend from Iowa that two feet additional on the railing providing for protecting the money that was stolen would have been a wise thing, yet it is probable that would not have occurred to him, but for the fact this money was stolen.

Mr. PRICE. My friend misunderstands me. I do not propose to build that fence any higher. It is high enough already. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I simply wish to say, so far as my observation extends, in all the banks it is customary for the cashiers and those handling money to have packages near them, behind the railing—it may not be so in Iowa. [To Mr. PRICE.] Do not get up! [Laughter.] It may not be so in Iowa.

Mr. PRICE. Nor is it so in Ohio. You cannot find a bank anywhere in the United States of America where the cashier keeps his money so it can be taken by any outsider.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I protest the gentleman is not a competent witness, for he speaks of what he has not seen nor yet heard. In Cincinnati and in banks in other places in Ohio it is common to have money by the side of the teller and behind a wicket-work of some kind, not so high but an outsider might place his foot on the side of the counter and reach over with some prepared hook and take up a package.

Mr. PRICE. Another question.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. PRICE. Do you know of any bank in Ohio—it is not there, and you cannot—do you know of one bank in Ohio where the paying-teller keeps any considerable quantity of money, as much as a thousand dollars, so an outsider can reach it? Give me the name of the bank.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I have stated already just that thing.

Mr. PRICE. Give me the name of that bank.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Half a dozen.

Mr. PRICE. Only one. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I am unable to suggest a bank in Cincinnati in which with the appliances I have mentioned money may not be taken by an expert thief.

Mr. PRICE. That is not the question. Name me a bank where the paying teller leaves his money where an outsider can reach it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I have stated that is the case in a great many banks, and probably in every bank in Iowa except the one of which my astute friend is president. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRICE. I do not happen to be the president of any bank.

A MEMBER. He is a director.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. He is a director, then. I suppose he resigned his presidency when he became a candidate for Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRICE. No, sir.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Of this man in New Orleans I know nothing, except that he has sustained a loss. The nation ought not to be unjust to any one of its citizens. It is easy, as I have said, to be wise after the fact. When the gentleman who seeks relief under this bill left the room in which the stolen money was he had no reason to suppose that any man could get into that bank and remove that package without attracting the attention of the porter, who sat near, and yet it was possible, and did occur. We can easily see how the taking of this money might have been prevented by precautionary methods now suggested, but that is to be wise after the fact.

Mr. PRICE. Was there due diligence?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Possibly not due diligence according to the gentleman's understanding of that term. That diligence would render the abstraction of money from a bank absolutely impossible. I know that bankers are generally very prudent, careful men; and I know in two instances in my own State money has been taken from a bank under circumstances similar to those atttending the taking of this money from the sub-treasury at New Orleans.

One other word, and I am done. Of course, as contrivances are being daily made by bankers and others having charge of money to defeat the operations of thieves, thieves on their part are as constantly maturing plans to defeat the contrivances of bankers to prevent theft. They are as ingenious as honest men, and are constantly devising means by which they may be enabled to steal money from bankers notwithstanding the contrivances daily used to baffle them.

The argument of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] shows very clearly that this man in no event ought to be held liable. He is not charged with negligence; he has exercised that diligence which is ordinary with bankers and that notwithstanding his duties were doubled by Congress or by the order of the Secretary of the Treasury. He used all the means which are ordinarily adopted under such circumstances to protect the public Treasury. But notwithstanding this diligence the money was stolen, not in an ordinary way, but by some thief coming in, probably wearing rubber shoes and climbing up by the railing and reaching over with a hook prepared for the purpose.

I deny that a great nation has a right to do wrong to any of its citizens. The gentleman from Iowa suggests that these appointees of the Government are paid salaries which put them on the footing of insurers. I deny it. The cashier of his own bank, if he is fit for his position, is probably paid as good a salary as this assistant treasurer at New Orleans.

Mr. PRICE. He is not; and he is satisfied with his salary.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Well, if that cashier exercises such diligence as this assistant treasurer exercised, and if, notwithstanding, a loss occurred, I do not think my friend would exact from him the payment of that loss; and notwithstanding what has been said about these gentlemen being insurers, I do not think a great nation should exact of them what my friend in front of me would not exact from his employé. I do not believe that that gentleman dealing with an employé who had served faithfully and well, as I believe this cashier has served the public, would exact a reparation on the part of his employé where money had been lost under such circumstances as are shown in this case. Certainly I know of no instance where that has been done. Within a very short period two losses have been sustained by banks in my own city, and I know the idea of holding the cashier to account for the loss has never been entertained by any of those institutions. Therefore, because I consider it an act of simple justice to this man, I support this bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] permit me to ask him a question? There has been some question how this bill has come back before the Committee of the Whole after having been voted down once. Will the gentleman tell us how that has happened?

Mr. GIBSON. The Committee of the Whole, as the record will show, did not order the bill to be laid aside to be reported with a favorable recommendation, and it was reported to the House unfavorably. When the bill came up in the House the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE,] who was the author of the report, advocated it before the House. The House adjourned just as I got the floor. On Friday last it was held by the gentleman who occupied the chair that the bill was not out of the Committee of the Whole, and that it must go back into the Committee of the Whole. So far as that question is concerned, it is a matter of indifference. The bill is here. It is properly before us, and it is for the members of the Committee of the Whole according to their sense of justice to give the relief demanded, or to deny it. I call for a vote.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, in order to test the question, I make the point of order that this bill is not regularly in the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It has been voted down once, and the proceeding instituted afterward occurred one or two weeks after that was done.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand that the Speaker ruled that the bill was improperly reported to the House and the House restored it to the Calendar. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. FINLEY. In order that the same difficulty may not occur again, if it is necessary I will make the motion that the bill be reported adversely. As I understand, the motion was made in Committee of the Whole that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House. That motion was not agreed to. When it came up in the House the Speaker decided that inasmuch as the committee had not directed the bill to be reported adversely it had not left the committee. Am I not correct?

Mr. GIBSON. I call for a vote.

Mr. LAPHAM. When this bill was before under consideration, I voted in support of it as I then understood it. Before voting again upon it I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill for information on one or two points. I first desire to inquire whether the applicant for relief in this case has paid to the Government the money which was lost, or whether he asks that he be allowed this amount in the settlement of his accounts?

Mr. CARLISLE. He has paid it to the Government.

Mr. LAPHAM. And now asks to be reimbursed?

Mr. GIBSON. Yes.

Mr. LAPHAM. The other point upon which I desire information is, whether this officer was present in person in charge of the office on the day this money was lost, or whether the cashier was the person in charge?

Mr. GIBSON. The evidence shows that this officer, as well as the cashier, was present in the office.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question before the committee is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MORRISON,] which the Clerk will now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"Provided, That before said money shall be paid the Secretary of the Treasury shall be satisfied, after inquiry and investigation into all the facts, that said sum of money was actually stolen and that the loss of the same was not the result of any neglect or want of reasonable diligence on the part of said officers."

Mr. GIBSON. I have no objection to that.

The question was taken upon agreeing to the amendment; and upon a division there were—ayes 50, noes 57.

No further count being called for, the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] that this bill be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to upon a division—ayes 90, noes 62.

So the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

L. MADISON DAY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2798) for the relief of L. Madison Day; reported from the Committee of Claims by Mr. O'CONNOR.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,400 to L. Madison Day, of Louisiana, that being the amount of purchase-money received by the United States from said Day for a parcel of land in the city of New Orleans, condemned as the property of Judah P. Benjamin, the title to which was invalid and defective.

Mr. WHITE. Let the report be read.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It fell to my lot, as a member of the Committee of Claims, to make the report the reading of which is now called for. That report covers twenty closely printed pages.

Mr. WHITE. Well, we want to hear it.

Mr. BRIGHT. It is evident that the Committee of the Whole will hardly be able to conclude the consideration of this case to-day. There are bills in the House, reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, which are yet undisposed of. In order that the House may take action on those bills, I will move that the committee now rise.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. BRIGHT; and upon a division there were—ayes 68, noes 4.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. KEIFER reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the business on the Private Calendar, and had directed him to report back to the House the bill (H. R. No. 1542) for the relief of Charles Clinton, of New Orleans, late assistant treasurer at New Orleans, Louisiana, without amendment and with a recommendation that the same be passed.

The SPEAKER. The bill now reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar will take its place in the House after the bills heretofore favorably reported from that committee.

REFUNDING TOBACCO TAX.

The first of the bills heretofore reported favorably from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar and undisposed of was the bill (H. R. No. 2797) for the relief of certain citizens of Lynchburgh, Virginia, and refunding to them taxes improperly collected from them on manufactured tobacco.

The SPEAKER. Upon the engrossment and third reading of this bill the previous question was demanded by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] which demand was undetermined at the close of the session of the House on Friday last. The question is now upon seconding the demand for the previous question.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 94, noes 24.

Mr. WHITE. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. TUCKER, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WHITE.

Many MEMBERS. Withdraw the point of order.

Mr. WHITE. I will withdraw the point of order that no quorum has voted.

No further count being called for, the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; there being upon a division—ayes 33, noes 127; more than one-fifth in the affirmative.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to, upon a division—ayes 46, noes not counted.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the passage of the bill, the title of which has been read, and upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 150, nays 39, not voting 103; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. CULBERSON. I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. FISHER.

Mr. MYERS. I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GARFIELD. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. COFFROTH. My colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. RYON, is paired with my colleague, Mr. HARMER. My colleague, Mr. BACHMAN, is paired with the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. LEWIS. My colleague, Mr. HERBERT, is detained from the House by sickness.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I am paired with the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. SAPP.

Mr. SIMONTON. My colleague, Mr. TAYLOR, is paired with the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. BRIGHAM.

Mr. BOUCK. I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. MCKINLEY. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. My colleague, Mr. CHALMERS, is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. VAN VOORHIS.

Mr. MULLER. I am paired with the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. WAIT. If he were present, I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman from Ohio, Mr. EWING, is paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. LAPHAM. I am paired with the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. KNOTT.

Mr. PAGE. My colleague, Mr. BERRY, is paired with the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. RYAN.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. ROBESON, is paired with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SPRINGER.

Mr. TALBOTT. My colleague, Mr. URNER, who is detained from the House by sickness, is paired with my colleague, Mr. MCLANE.

Mr. CARPENTER. The gentleman from Michigan, Mr. BREWER, is paired with the gentleman from Florida, Mr. DAVIDSON. The gentleman from Michigan, Mr. MCGOWAN, is paired with the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. THOMAS TURNER.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. My colleague, Mr. BOYD, is paired with the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. HENRY.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. TUCKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EDWIN M. HART.

Mr. MULLER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4441) for the relief of Edwin M. Hart; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

JOHN GRIMSTON.

Mr. MULLER also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4442) to retire from active service Ordnance-Sergeant John Grimston; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MCCOOK, for five days, on account of important business;

To Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, until Wednesday next, on account of important business;

To Mr. BARLOW, indefinitely, from Monday next, on account of important business; and

To Mr. GODSHALK, until Thursday next, on account of important business.

LIBRARY-ROOM, NAVY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, requesting an appropriation for the new library-room for the Navy Department, in the new State, War, and Navy Department building; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SIMEON CRANE.

Mr. PHISTER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. No. 335) granting a pension to Simeon Crane be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read twice, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I ask leave to make a report from the Committee of Accounts, concerning one of the employés of the House.

Mr. COOK. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be permitted to submit this report, as he is about to leave the city.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. COOK, it was agreed to, there being—ayes 76, noes 54; and accordingly (at four o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

By Mr. BARLOW: The petition of citizens of La Moille County, Vermont, for the suppression of polygamy in Utah—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, the petition of citizens of Grand Isle, Vermont, for legislation regulating railway transportation—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of citizens of Grand Isle, Vermont, for the amendment of the patent laws—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. BLACKBURN: The petition of Culven Sanders, for pay for use of premises and for property destroyed by United States troops during the late war—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BRAGG: The petition of citizens and soldiers of the State of New York, to be placed on the same footing as the bondholders—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of 210 citizens of Wisconsin, for a bill restricting railroad monopolies—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BRENTS: The petition of William H. Dodge, that the Commissioner of the General Land Office be directed to issue to him the patents to certain lands in Washington Territory—to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. BREWER: The petition of L. H. Ives and others, citizens of Ingham County, Michigan, for a law to protect innocent purchasers of patented articles—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. CALKINS: The petition of citizens of Newton County, Indiana, for a water route connecting Lake Michigan, the Illinois River, and Wabash Canal, through Indiana—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of citizens of Indiana, for the establishment of a post-route from Goodland to Julian, Indiana—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. CARLISLE: Memorial of citizens of Boone County, Kentucky, asking for a change in the patent laws—to the Committee on Patents.

Also, memorial of citizens of Campbell County, Kentucky, asking for the passage of a law to prevent unjust discriminations in freight charges—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, memorial of members of the Kentucky Legislature, asking for the passage of a bill to increase the efficiency of the Marine Hospital Service—to the same committee.

By Mr. CARPENTER: The petition of citizens of Clay County, Iowa, that Clay County may be left in the central division if the State should be redistricted for judicial purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, the petition of citizens of Palo Alto County, Iowa, that in case the judicial districts are readjusted Palo Alto County be attached to the Des Moines or central division—to the same committee.

By Mr. CASWELL: The petition of James H. Cook and 46 others, soldiers of the late war, of Columbia County, Wisconsin, for the passage of a law equalizing soldiers bounties—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COFFROTH: The petition of Rev. H. H. Leamy, pastor of Baptist church; Rev. W. A. Rankin, pastor of Presbyterian church; Rev. W. T. Wilson, pastor of Methodist Episcopal church; Rev. William Houpt, pastor of Evangelical Lutheran church; Rev. H. S. Getz, rector of Episcopal church; Hon. Charles W. Stone, lieutenant-governor of Pennsylvania; Hon. L. D. Wetmore, and 149 others, citizens of Pennsylvania, for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic—to the Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

Also, the petition of E. Harvey, grand councilor, and Samuel Nelson, grand secretary of the Royal Templars of Temperance of Pennsylvania, of similar import—to the same committee.

By Mr. CRAPO: The petition of Joseph B. Macy and 62 others, of Nantucket, Massachusetts, for the establishment of life-saving stations on Tucanuck Island and at the chord of the bay, Nantucket, Massachusetts—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. LOWNDES H. DAVIS: Five petitions of citizens of Missouri, for the regulation of interstate railway transportation charges—to the same committee.

By Mr. DUNN: The petition of citizens of Arkansas, for the improvement of White River—to the same committee.

By Mr. FINLEY: Two petitions of citizens of Morrow County, Ohio, that the patent laws be so amended as to make the manufacturer or vendor of patented articles alone responsible for infringement—to the Committee on Patents.

Also, six petitions of citizens of Morrow County, Ohio, for relief from transportation monopolies—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. GARFIELD: The petition of Charles F. Beall and 60 others, soldiers of West Milton, Ohio, for the passage of the equalization bounty bill—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GOODE: Memorial of citizens of Norfolk, Virginia, for the enactment of penal statutes to suppress interstate traffic in adulterated merchandise—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HASKELL: The petition of citizens of Thayer, Kansas, for the passage of the Weaver soldier bill—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of citizens of Kansas, for the retention of the greenback as it is; for the continuance of the coinage of silver, and for the passage of the Weaver soldier bill—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. HENKLE: Papers relating to the claim of Peter Gallagher for pay for work done on the Treasury extension—to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. HOUSE: Memorial of the Tobacco Board of Trade of Nashville, Tennessee, showing how the tobacco trade of the United States is injured by the manner in which the governments of France, Spain, Italy, and Austria purchase tobacco in this country, through regies and contractors, and for such legislation as will open the markets of the governments named to citizens of the United States—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. HUNTON: The petition of Charles B. Shirley, that he be paid $2,063.88 for services rendered the House of Representatives, which sum has heretofore been allowed by the Committee of Accounts—to the Committee of Accounts.

By Mr. KEIFER: The petitions of William S. Dallas and 35 others, and of Edward P. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 14, 1880.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. SAMUEL DOMER.

The SPEAKER. The reading of the Journal of yesterday will be omitted this morning, and will be read with the Journal of to-day on Monday next.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. COVERT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of general debate.

FINANCIAL POLICY OF THE COUNTRY.

Mr. BRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I should have been content not to have troubled this body with any further remarks on the subject of the finances of the country and that the country should have had an interval of rest for the purpose of review and reflection; but inasmuch as the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Comptroller of the Currency have recommended to Congress certain fundamental changes in the financial policy of the country, I am constrained to believe that it amounts to the force of an administration recommendation; and inasmuch as there is an undercurrent running through the committees of this House that may roll up at any time and culminate in a financial tempest, I deem it my duty as well as privilege to beg the indulgence of the House to some remarks on this much vexed question. I propose, if possible, to dig beneath the surface soil of the question, and, if possible, to get at the true foundation of the financial policy which has been pursued by the country, and to bring it up in brief review, point out its errors, and suggest some probable or possible reforms.

In the first place, Mr. Chairman, it is my opinion that the initial blunder of the financial policy of the Government was in funding what was called the floating debt of the United States, which was to a very large extent issued as the circulating medium of the country. In order to support this proposition it will be necessary to glance at a few facts. First, I would state there are two modes known to the nations of the earth for funding their public debt, one according to the civil mode and the other according to the common-law mode, the civil-law mode being to fund according to the commercial or actual value of the credit paper of the Government, and the common-law mode to fund according to the face value of the paper. The Government of the United States in the funding of its recent debt saw proper to adopt the common-law mode and in the adoption of that I beg leave to call the attention of this committee to a few facts, to see the result of the policy which was inaugurated.

The public debt, which consisted principally in currency, in August, 1865, amounted to $2,750,000,000. About $2,200,000,000 were funded in interest-bearing bonds. According to the statistics the actual or commercial value of this floating paper was only about $1,100,000,000. The consequence was that there was a profit of $1,100,000,000 to the holders of this paper, and a consequent loss of the same amount to the tax-payers of this country. Not only that, but upon the actual value it enabled the holders of the bonds to realize about 15 per cent. per annum upon the actual value funded in bonds. In addition to that the bonds were placed in sanctuary beyond the power of taxation, and in addition to that they became non-producing, not producing a single blade of grass, with no active property except that of the eating cancer, consuming the body upon which it was fastened. Not only that, but it withdrew the circulation, which was a factor which might and ought to have been combined with the labor of the country. And last, but not least, it inaugurated a war between capital and labor in this country which will outlast the Peloponnesian war of old. It is the opening chapter of our financial disaster.

If the country had been satisfied to have adopted the civil-law mode, which, in the language of Justinian, "Valor monetæ considerandus ac inspiciendus est a tempore contractus, non a tempore solutionis," we would have saved $1,100,000,000 to the people, and we would have avoided the calamities which have followed close upon the heels of this initial blunder.

The American policy was to fund according to the civil mode. After the revolutionary war this country had two hundred and fifty millions of continental money and the States had over two hundred millions of State currency, making together over $450,000,000. The aggregate statistical value of all the property of the thirteen Colonies was about two hundred millions of money; so it appeared the face value of the debt amounted to more than twice as much as all the property in the United States or in the Colonies. The Government had coined its credit. It had its actual value and it had its face value. They determined to adopt the civil-law mode of funding, and did adopt it, and funded the debt at the rate of one to a hundred of Continental money, it having depreciated to the extent of five hundred to one, adopting one hundred to one as the approximate value of currency in its use among the people.

To have funded the revolutionary debt according to the common-law rule would have enslaved the country forever, and would have defeated the very object of the Revolution.

They not only funded it according to that rule, but they appointed commissioners of the sinking fund, composed of the Vice-President of the United States, the Attorney-General of the United States, the Chief-Justice of the United States, and the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, who should receive such fund as might be set apart by the Government, and go into the market to purchase such of the Government bonds as might be offered on the market. They did so, and the 3 per cent. thirty-year bonds of the United States were purchased principally by the commission of the sinking fund at from sixty to sixty-five cents on the dollar. Not that the credit of the Government had depreciated, but on commercial principles $50 in money at 6 per cent. interest would be worth $100 at 3 per cent. interest running thirty years to maturity. So, by adopting that policy, the Government was enabled in 1835 not only to wipe out that debt, but also the debt which had been contracted, growing up out of the war of 1812-'14.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I submit that we are no wiser, nor are we any better, nor are we any more gifted or endowed with integrity than our forefathers were. They enacted that, with a view of settling this debt upon equitable principles—not according to its face value, but upon equitable principles—they adopted the policy which was inaugurated, and which proved successful.

Now let us take a step in advance. Indeed there was no necessity for funding this debt at all. And why do I say so? Because there were $1,820,922,200 used as currency by the people of the United States. It had been paid out, was in the hands of the people, received by the people as currency, and the Government had power of disposing of the currency; or, in other words, of paying the debt without going through the ruinous process of funding it. How might it have been disposed of? It might have been absorbed in taxation and carried to the destruction account of the Government, and left alone enough for the circulation of the people and to support and float the business interests of the country.

Now, some have made the point that this was not used as money, but that it was purely a debt. I call attention to the fact that Chief-Justice Chase admitted that it was used as currency—as money. I call attention to the fact that the author of what was called the funding of greenback policy admitted that all of this floating paper debt of the United States was used as a currency by the people and by the Government. I call the attention of this House to a short extract from the advance sheets of Mr. Spaulding's history of legal-tender money, on page 11. He says:

> After the surrender of the rebel armies to General Grant and General Sherman the volunteer army was mustered out of service and had to be paid in full. Secretary McCulloch obtained the means to pay them chiefly by the issue of 7.30 notes. The amount required for that purpose was very large, and the amount of these notes outstanding in October, 1865, was $830,000,000.

The currency was then abundant, and could have been absorbed in taxation—the debt could have been paid by the people. In 1865-'66 the internal revenue of the Government amounted to $309,226,000, and if that policy had been pursued the public debt of the country would not have been felt. It would have been absorbed readily and left a remainder in use sufficient for all the necessities of the business interests of the country. This balance of the floating debt used as currency would not have been felt by the industries of the country more than the foam upon the sea, and with no greater burden. Our country would have been relieved from the burden of this public debt and the enormous burdens which it has imposed upon every class of people. And here begins the Iliad of our woes. Let me now call the attention of this House to some of the fruits of this funding system. The public debt of the United States on the 31st of August, 1865, was $2,846,021,742. On the 1st of July, 1879, it was $2,349,567,482. The reduction of the public debt in fourteen years amounted to $496,454,260. At that rate of progress, Mr. Chairman, it will take eighty years to pay off this burden, this debt, which was fastened upon the country. Since the 31st August, 1865, to May 1, 1879, this Government has collected $5,184,000,000 directly from the people. In the same time it has expended $5,226,000,000. At that rate it would take $48,000,000,000 to be collected out of the people to yield revenue enough to pay the expenses of the Government and to extinguish the public debt. In addition to that, they have already collected out of the people $2,075,505,640, which have been appropriated for the payment of the public debt.

Is all this nothing? To pile and fasten such a debt upon the country! Is all this nothing? To render such a tribute to posterity as evidence of the financial wisdom of their forefathers!

But, I do not stop there. Another startling fact is presented to the country. This debt has not only been created. It is not held by the people but it has been concentrated into the hands of a few individuals. It has given birth to what is known as a money oligarchy who hold in fact a mortgage upon the industries and the property of this country, and which will reap the harvest and enjoy the fruit of the sweat of the nation's labor for generations to come.

I take leave to call the attention of the House to what a distinguished statesman, not now living, said upon this subject. On the 5th of March, 1867, in an interview with Charles G. Halpine, Andrew Johnson said:

> But what do we find? The aristocracy based on $3,000,000,000 of slaves south of Mason and Dixon's line has disappeared; but an aristocracy based on over $2,500,000,000 of national securities has arisen in the Northern States to assume that political control which the consolidation of the great financial with political interests formerly gave to the slave oligarchy of the late rebel States.
>
> The aristocracy based on negro property disappears at the southern end of the line, but only to reappear in an oligarchy of bonds and national securities in the States which suppressed the rebellion. We all read history, and is it not certain that of all aristocracies that of mere wealth is the most odious, rapacious, and tyrannical? It goes for the last dollar the poor and helpless have got; and with such a vast machine as this Government under its control, that dollar will be fetched. It is an aristocracy which can see in the people only a prey for extortion. * * *
> To an aristocracy existing on the annual interest of a national debt the people are only of value in proportion to the docility and power of patiently bleeding golden blood under the tax-gatherer's thumb-screws.

So said Andrew Johnson, that here was the uprising and growth of this money oligarchy, which history has shown will if necessary support the worst form of despotism; for, in order to guarantee the benefits of the securities which are held, it is willing to immolate any constitutional form of government; to prostitute any legislation; to corrupt and overturn the judiciary of the country; to tax the people to support armies to hold them in subjection to the power which will pander to its rapacity.

Mr. McCulloch, in the days—I will not say before his corruption, but when he seemed to take a rational view of this question, speaking of the national debt, in 1868 said:

> A national debt must ever be a severe strain upon republican institutions, and ours should not be subject to it one day longer than necessary.

But, Mr. Chairman, another of the fruits of this funding system was the contraction of the currency when it was most needed. The public and private debts of the United States at that time amounted to $10,000,000,000, and the amount of currency, national and State, on the 31st of August amounted to $2,192,395,627, and now it amounts to $683,862,418. That is the statistical amount. The actual amount in circulation, as I have shown by other figures, is only about two hundred and fifty millions of currency. So as a result this contraction took the currency from the labor of the country, reduced the price of property 75 per cent., doubled the burden of our debts, blasted our prosperity upon land and upon sea, and, through the calamities it produced, bred a financial epidemic which swept away a hundred thousand bankrupts, impoverished the people, drove States to the very verge of repudiation, and has well-nigh delivered the country, bound hand and foot, over to the imperial sway of bonds, banks, and monopolies.

In support of this statement I need only to call the attention of this body and the attention of the country to the testimony of General Grant and Mr. Sherman. General Grant, in one of his messages, said that a too rapid contraction of the currency would ruin the debtor class of the country. And Mr. Sherman, in a speech in the Senate of the United States, portions of which I will read in another connection, depicted in glowing terms the terrible financial calamities which would light upon the country. These predictions were prophetic. These calamities have become monumental in the country, as I will show.

And is all this nothing, Mr. Chairman? A power has been created in the country, an active power for mischief to the institutions and to the prosperity of this country. Here was a money oligarchy, as I have said. Why does it see proper and think it necessary to interpose its power and have the Constitution of the United States changed or amended so that the public debt should not be called in question?

They intended to lay the foundation of their power deep, and have it imbedded and indurated in the Constitution of the United States beyond the power of change by the people, except by reforming the Constitution, certainly beyond the power of Congress to disturb it. They were doing this for the preservation of their ill-gotten gain; they were only throwing up the bulwarks around them to protect them and maintain their power.

And was all this nothing? These were the demonstrations which that power gave at the outset. But it does not stop there. It caused the passage of the act of 1869. There was no popular clamor for this act of 1869, but it had been passed through Congress and presented to Andrew Johnson for approval and he put it into his pocket. He saw the design of the power, and this was called his pocket veto. The first act that was approved by President Grant was the same act of 1869, the act to strengthen, as it was called, the public credit. It was an act to bullionize the debt of the United States and to give a value of five hundred millions to the unfortunate creditors, these poor fellows that lay like Lazarus at the gates of the rich man to pick up the crumbs that fell from the Government table; an act to raise the securities from eighty cents in the dollar to $1.20 in the dollar!

And was all this nothing? Where are the people to come in for one crumb of favor in all this policy? These bonds were payable in legal-tender notes, as admitted by contemporaneous construction; and Senator THURMAN attempted to exempt the 5-20 bonds from the operation of this credit act of 1869, but it was voted down in the Senate. The people, poor sheep, did not know how closely they were being clipped, but they felt the cold winds of adversity chilling them as an iceberg through this policy of their Government, and still they could not unravel the mystery that was shrouding it.

Let us go a step further. They caused the act of 1871, known as the funding act, to be passed. And why are they now piling Pelion upon Ossa? Had they not your credit act of 1869? Can they not be contented? Is there no bound nor bottom to the rapacity of this power? No; you are not content that these bonds shall be paid in the lawful money of the United States and to have a pledge that it should not be repudiated, but you wish it to be paid in coin at its then standard value, actually to put fetters upon the Congress of the United States, actually to restrain their power to regulate value of the coin of the country. But Congress must fix and bind itself to maintain a coin standard for them. Why is it you are ever jealous of any remnant of power that may remain either in the Constitution or in the legislative department of the country or with the people? Do you intend to eradicate it, to take it up by the roots, and to plant your own standard deep in its place? Do you want your debt paid in the standard coin, 371¼ grains of pure and 412½ grains of standard silver and 25.8 grains of gold to the dollar? You do not wish it in denominational value in tale, but in weight; your public debt has almost outweighed your mountains of gold and silver, and you intend that it shall be weighed out to you, and not taled out to you. You are taking examples from the practices of the kings in the olden times, that were increasing their tribute or avoiding the payment of their debts by the alteration of their currency. We have heard and read of these tricks of the kings. We are told that Heliogabalus changed the year to fourteen months in order to require a greater tribute from the Gauls. After the Norman conquest a pound sterling was changed to one-third of its original value in silver; the house of Stuart, in Scotland, reduced it to one-twentieth of its former value. And is it nothing that we have a power here that can intervene and put fetters upon Congress, prevent the regulation of the value of the currency, and dictate to them the scales in which their debts shall be weighed and paid to them?

No danger from a power of that description? Let us go a little further and we will see the moccasin tracks of this giant as he walks his beats around this congressional hall. Germany demonetized her silver, and the holders of bonds in Europe and America took alarm from the act. Without going into the recital of the history, the silver bill was smuggled through this House, changed the whole face of the contract, demonetized the silver dollar, contracted the currency, depreciated the value of property, and depreciated the value of our silver bullion itself, deprived the States of the right to make it a legal tender, and lopped off one of the financial arms of the States. And was all this nothing, that they could point their ordnance at any objectional point of legislation and have it disappear just as though it had been by a blast from the mouth of a cannon? And where is it that they have made a demonstration either upon the Constitution or upon the laws of the United States or upon the rights of the people that they have not accomplished it and fixed it in the laws of this country?

Our people did not understand it. As was said by one of a former day, they had their eyes open but like somnambulists they did not see the precipice over which they were to take a wild leap. Ah! they did not stop to take counsel of the statistics of coin, and probably not three of those that voted for the bill stopped to look into the question when they took a step which was to work such revolution in the condition of the currency. I will read here from a most excellent work, that of Mr. Wharton on coins. He says:

> Demonetization tended "to increase the value of gold, as well as to diminish the value of silver, meant that millions who had sown should not reap and that many should reap who had not sown; while, in the main, in the western world profit to the creditors at the expense of the debtors; profit in Europe at the expense of the United States; profit to specie paying at the expense of the non-specie paying nations."

And was all this nothing? Now, if those who had practiced that fraud upon the country had examined the coin statistics of the world, as they appear in a table which I have made up from Mr. Wharton's work, they would have seen that the following are the facts:

Total stock in the hands of man: Gold, $5,000,000,000; silver, $7,500,000,000.

Total used as money by man: Gold, $3,600,000,000; silver, $3,200,000,000.

Annual destruction and loss: Gold, $20,000,000; silver, $30,000,000.

Annual product: Gold, $95,000,000: silver, $75,000,000.

Net annual gain: Gold, $75,000,000; silver, $45,000,000.

Annual consumption in arts—repairing loss of existing coin, and plate, &c.: Gold, $15,000,000; silver, $15,000,000.

Net annual supply to be devoted to use as money: Gold, $60,000,000; silver, $30,000,000.

Present annual addition of new coin to the total stock of money: Gold, 1⅔ per cent.; silver, 1 per cent.

The demonetization of silver would lessen the existing stock of metallic money 25 per cent. in the Christian nations. Twenty-five per cent.—that was the premium that would be and was achieved by those who sought to obtain the alteration of the silver laws of the United States—only 25 per cent. added to the value of the debt! And was that nothing?

Who had it to pay? Why, it was in the nature of an excise that had to be taken off the production of the country. Was there nothing to be apprehended from such a power? The people could do only one thing; they could not repair the loss entirely, but whenever there was an apocalypse of the fraud the rebuke came rolling like thunder from the heavens, shaking this nation and demanding of the Congress of the United States a repeal of the law. It was repealed, and stands repealed to-day, the veto of the President of the United States to the contrary.

The people had the poor privilege left of protesting against the rapacious legislation which was plundering them of their labor and their property. But that was not all. Here was the act of January 14, 1875. What was the effect of that? It was intended to destroy the legal-tender currency of the United States, and to abandon the field of currency to the national banks. It submitted the issue whether Congress or corporations shall furnish the currency. It opened up a war between Treasury notes and bank notes. There is no conflict, Mr. Chairman, between the Treasury notes of the United States and gold and silver. They are all issued by the same Government. They have always traveled abreast, and in the main have always been applied to the same uses. There has always been perfect harmony and interchangeability between them whenever they have been placed upon the same footing.

But the intention was to destroy the Treasury note. This act of 1875 was only another of the advance positions of the same power toward the accomplishment of its policy. It was long premeditated. Secretary McCulloch, in his report of 1866, pages 16 and 17, said that the notes should be withdrawn from circulation and that the furnishing of what paper currency might be required be left to corporations. There was the issue tendered. They had been acting upon it all the time.

But the act provides for redemption, not for resumption, as has been pretended. I so argued in a speech January 25, 1875, while that bill was pending in the Senate of the United States. Senator EDMUNDS, a few days ago, stated that he voted for the bill because it was intended to redeem and retire the legal-tender notes of the United States. I call attention to his remarks:

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator if in his mind there is any doubt at all as to what the construction of that act was?

Mr. BAYARD. I was unable to say what its construction was. I thought it was a double-faced juggle intended to catch the votes of contractionists in one direction and of inflationists in the other.

* * * * * * *

Mr. EDMUNDS. My apology for interrupting my honorable friend, to all of whose very interesting and satisfactory speech I am sorry I have not been able to listen on account of an engagement elsewhere, is that I thought it right it should appear in that connection that I voted for the act of 1875, because, on a careful examination, it was to my mind perfectly clear, no matter what the present Secretary of the Treasury chose to think about it or chose not to say about it, but on the bill itself that I was voting for, it was perfectly clear that the redemption that that act provided for, both before the 1st of January, 1879, and afterward, was a redemption which took out in point of law from existence all United States notes that should come in in the methods provided by that act. And I am inclined to think that if my honorable friend would now examine the statute, he would not have any doubt upon it at all. Of course the act of 1878 reverses all that, and that made the act of 1878 necessary to those who wished to inflate.

So that there could be no mistake as to the real object of that law. It was one of the flank movements upon the Treasury note of the United States. There are others which I will point out before my time expires. The policy was to fund greenbacks into bonds—grand speculation!

Now let us see what there was in this retirement of the greenback. There were $382,000,000 of greenbacks, which at 6 per cent. per annum would yield $22,000,000. In ten years the holders of these bonds would derive as interest $220,000,000. But it was a part of the policy to abandon the field of currency to the national banks. According to statistics the annual dividends of these institutions (not their profits, about which I will speak in another connection) amounted to about 10 per cent. per annum, which would give them another $220,000,000 in ten years, making $440,000,000 for the poor starvling banks! Oh, how they need the protecting shield of a fostering, paternal Government, these national banks! The banks would clip the fleece upon the one side and the bondholders the coupons upon the other; so that there was but little opportunity of escape by the people when the bondholders and the banks had them pinioned between two horns, with no possible chance of escape.

This is but a part of the triumphal march of their policy. See the progress! The Treasury notes have been reduced from $450,000,000 to $346,000,000. Was all this nothing? Was it nothing that the currency of the country was to be displaced, the people deprived of it? Was it nothing that "black Fridays" should again and again appall the land?

But the people called a halt to this mad scheme of contraction. Discontent began to bubble like the fires of the volcano. Cities were in flames at the hands of infuriated mobs. The crepitations of the volcano of popular discontent were heard, threatening to throw the fiery lava to extend with its blighting fury over the land. You were required to call a halt. The further retirement of the greenbacks was suspended in May, 1878. Upon that measure there were 177 yeas, 35 nays—speaking almost a universal condemnation of the policy which had been inaugurated. Of those 177 who voted for the measure, 103 were democrats; and only seven democrats voted against it. In the Senate there were 41 yeas to 18 nays; twenty-three democrats voting for the measure and eight democrats against it, making only fifteen democrats in the House and the Senate who were opposed to the suspension of the legal-tender act of 1875. So we have one overwhelming condemnation and rebuke of this policy.

But, Mr. Chairman, this is not all. The war is now renewed in a different form. We cannot be mistaken about the indications. Skillful generals generally march under a blind when they wish to accomplish their strategy, and so it is now. They have opened a war upon the legal-tender quality of the currency of the United States. We have some great statesmen who get up on their stilts and with the gravity of Solomon state it is unconstitutional, and others that it is in the way of the prosperity of the country. Well, now, I shall not elaborate the constitutionality of this subject, but will give a synopsis, which I submit to the consideration of any of the objectors in relation to it. I say that it has been held to be constitutional by Congress in various acts and by the courts in repeated cases; that it has been held to be constitutional by both parties; that it has been held to be constitutional by the majority of the State courts of the United States; that it has been repeatedly held to be constitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States; that it has been acquiesced in by the people of the United States and they have adopted it as their money of account, and that the madman who would rush against this question with such an array of authority against him must be struck with an unaccountable presumption.

Now, let us look a little in detail at the question. Here is the legislative action of February 25, 1862, July 11, 1862, and March 3, 1863, all declaring it lawful money and legal tender. February 4, 1868, when contraction was going on too rapidly, another act was passed to prevent the further contraction of the currency, and stopped it at $382,000,000. Why was that if it were unconstitutional when the zephyrs of peace were blowing upon the land? Not only so, February 17, 1876, Mr. Kasson offered a resolution in this House which is in the following language:

Resolved, That the constitutional authority of Congress to coin money and regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coins, does not include the authority to issue the paper of the Government as money, and in the judgment of this House the Constitution nowhere confers on Congress the power to issue in time of peace promises or obligations of the Government as legal tender in payment of debts.

Yeas 97, nays 146. The democrats who voted for it were 10; those who voted nay were 133, denying the affirmative power of the resolution and affirming the opposite—that the legal-tenders in time of peace were constitutional, and that the authority and the power were found in the Constitution. Therefore it is calling upon the members of this House to stultify and degrade themselves and their convictions to change their votes now upon this subject. Not only so, but in 1878 there was a joint resolution passed here—that is of recent date, after ample time for reflection—to suspend the further retirements of these notes which were said to be unconstitutional. This joint resolution was passed by a decided majority, which I will not trouble the House by reading.

Up to the time of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Knox against Lee, 12 Wallace, 457, there were fifteen State courts which had affirmed the constitutionality of it independent of the Supreme Court of the United States. I have six cases from the Supreme Court of the United States, Knox against Lee, 12 Wallace, 457; Tribilcox against Wilson, 12 Wallace, 687; Dooley against Smith, 13 Wallace, 604; Bigler against Waller, 14 Wallace, 297; R. R. Company against Johnson, 15 Wallace, 195; Brorderic against McGraw, 15 Wallace, 639—all affirming the constitutionality of it. Chief-Justice Chase himself, in Hepburn against Griswold, stated the constitutionality of it had never been called in question except as to its retrospective effect.

And then by submission of the people to this and the contemporaneous construction of other courts bring to its relief a general principle of law which has the force of law itself. The mere fact there is a concurrence is an argument in favor of the proposition which is concurred in by the different courts.

But in addition to that I have the authority of great statesmen of the country. Mr. Madison affirms the constitutionality of the question even in time of peace. I will not read all the extract, but it is from his seventh annual message. Among other things, he says:

It may be necessary to ascertain the terms upon which the notes of the Government, no longer required as instruments of credit, shall be issued upon motives of general policy as a common medium of circulation.

Thomas Jefferson said:

Bank currency must be suppressed and the circulation restored to the "Federal Government, to which it belongs."

General Jackson, in 1829, said:

I submit to the wisdom of the Legislature whether a national one [currency] founded upon the credit of the Government and its resources might not be devised which would obviate all constitutional difficulties and at the same time secure all advantages to the Government and country that were expected to result from the present bank, [United States Bank.]

Mr. Calhoun said:

Believing that there might be a sound and safe paper currency founded on the credit of the Government exclusively, I was ever desirous that those who are responsible and have the power should have availed themselves of the opportunity.

All the foregoing authorities of legislators, jurists, and statesmen concur in the fact that the power to declare what shall be money and to regulate its value is lodged in the Congress of the United States. The Supreme Court of the United States holds that it is a political right vested in Congress, and that the right may be deduced from a group of all the powers in the Constitution. The Court says in the case of Knox vs. Lee, 12 Wal. R.:

And here it is to be observed it is not indispensable to the existence of any power claimed for the Federal Government that it can be specified in the words of the Constitution or clearly and directly traceable to some one of the specified powers. Its existence may be deduced fairly from more than one of the substantive powers expressly defined, or from them all combined. It is allowable to group together any number of them and infer from them all that the power claimed has been conferred.

All the authorities agree that all political rights vested by the Constitution in Congress are not subject to review by the judiciary. If the power be conceded to Congress to attach a partial tender to Treasury notes, there is no other power to prevent Congress from making them a full legal tender. Congress has attached a large legal-tender quality to national-bank notes. Section 5182 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides:

And the same shall be received at par in all parts of the United States in payment of taxes, excises, public lands, and all other dues to the United States, except duties on imports; and also for all salaries and other debts and demands owing by the United States to individuals, corporations, and associations within the United States, except interest on the public debt, and in redemption of the national currency.

And by section 5196 they are compelled to receive at par the notes of other national banks in payment of their debts. Yet, with these numerous legal-tender qualities attached to national-bank notes, the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Veazie Bank vs. Fenno, 8 Wall. R., held the national banks to be constitutional.

In the face of all this the banks, the syndicates, and bondholders are drawing their lines of circumvallation around the supreme judiciary, and expect soon to receive its capitulation and to take undisputed possession of this fortress of the American Constitution and bulwark of liberty.

But time will not permit me to pursue the constitutional question any further. I advance now to the consideration of the wisdom and policy of destroying the legal-tender quality of the Treasury notes. If this should be done the following would be some of the consequences:

First. They would cease to be lawful money.

Second. They could not be used in the compulsory payment of private debts and executions.

Third. The national banks would refuse to receive them on deposit.

Fourth. Depreciation would follow with a change of our money of acccount, and a change of all values and contracts.

Fifth. Wall street would revive and prepare for a raid on the gold in the Treasury.

Sixth. Resumption, the boast of the Secretary of the Treasury, like the hollow cone of dust blown up by the whirlwind, would dissolve in the air.

But it has been argued that to retain the legal-tender quality as to all Government dues except custom duties would secure them against depreciation. This could not be done in the face of the opposition of two thousand and twenty national banks, besides an army of brokers. The old United States Bank refused to receive on deposit the Treasury notes of the United States, though they were receivable for all Government dues, and they were depreciated from 15 to 25 per cent. The United States Bank broke down many of the State banks in the same way. The power of this old bank is described by Mr. Benton as next to omnipotent. It derived support from its debtors by the terror which it inspired; it throttled the State banks, corrupted the ballot, fought its way through both Houses of Congress and up to the Executive Mansion, where it perished before the veto of Jackson.

Hence, it will appear that the legal-tender quality is the only prop which will sustain the Treasury note as long as the national banks are in existence. The national banks are struggling to occupy the whole field of currency without a rival. Hence, the Treasury note would be decried and probably depreciated by their implacable hostility.

I call to my support the testimony of one who claims to be the greatest product of American financiers. On 13th February, 1862, Secretary Sherman spoke in support of the first legal-tender bill:

If you strike out this tender clause you do it with the knowledge that these notes will fall dead upon the money market of the world; that they will be refused, as they are now refused, by the banks; that they will be a subordinate, disgraced currency that will not pass from hand to hand; that they will have no legal sanction; that any man, whether a Jew broker or any other of the numerous kinds of brokers described by the Senator from Massachusetts, may decline to receive them, and thus discredit the operations of the Government.—Congressional Globe, part 1, second session, Thirty-seventh Congress, page 789.

Then, if it is the intention of the Government to maintain the circulation of the Treasury note at par it would be unwise and impolitic to destroy its legal-tender quality. Those who advocate the destruction of the legal-tender clause of the Treasury note are, perhaps, incautiously preparing to land on the side of the national banks. It is strange that they do not lift a finger against them.

Permit me now to call the attention of this body to some of the features and operations of the national banks, and the country will see the cause of their excessive zeal to secure financial supremacy.

First. I call attention to the expense of the privilege conferred on them by the Government. The Government pays them interest on their bonds to secure circulation. At the same time the Government lends them 90 per cent. of the bonds in currency, with the privilege of dealing in bills of exchange, discounting and shaving notes, of receiving private and public deposits; at the same time makes them a legal tender for all debts due to or from the Government except customs, forcing their circulation on all civil officers of the Government, on the Army, on the Navy, and on pensioners; at the same time taxing State banks of issue out of existence to give them immunity from competition.

Let us now see something of the profits—not dividends—of these splendid privileges:

Dividends, earnings, and surplus of the national banks, from 1870 to 1879—Spofford Almanac, 1880—condensed from the report of the Comptroller of the Currency, December, 1879.

Year ending Sept. 1—	No. of banks.	Capital.	Surplus.	Total dividends.	Total net earnings.	Ratio of dividend to capital.

1878	2,047	470,231,896	118,687,134	36,941,613	30,605,589	7.80
1879	2,048	455,132,056	115,149,357	34,942,921	31,557,880	7.60
Total net earnings, ten years					491,167,946
Annual average net earnings					49,167,294

I deduce the following facts from the above table and from the report of the Comptroller of the Currency:

Average annual net profits of national banks for 10 years	$49,167,294
Aggregate net profits, at same rate, for 16 years	786,176,110
Taxes paid by banks to United States in last 16 years, (Comptroller's report, 1879)	92,754,791
Taxes paid to States for 16 years	133,000,000
Estimated current expenses for 16 years, 2 per cent	144,000,000
Gross profits for 16 years	1,155,930,901
Average annual expense and profit for 16 years	78,540,000

All of this enormous amount has been collected from the people. After paying all taxes and expenses the banks have received a net annual profit of nearly $50,000,000. If the United States legal-tender notes were out of the way, and they had the absolute control of the currency, the net profits would reach beyond $100,000,000, and their gross profits would go beyond $150,000,000 per annum. So it appears that the exactions and burdens of the banks upon the country are equal to the expenses of the Government before the war. For these privileges the banks pay 1 per cent. per annum on circulation, ½ per cent. on deposits, and ¼ per cent. on capital stock beyond the amount invested in United States bonds. And they are now asking Congress to repeal the laws which impose these taxes. This would in effect give them annually about $7,000,000, the average amount of annual tax which they could still collect out of the people, but stop it in their vaults.

Again, if the banks should be permitted to issue all the currency, it would be most disastrous to the country. The concentration of capital would enable them to bring the commerce of the country to their feet. Scarcely a car-load of wheat could be purchased and shipped from Saint Louis to New York without a draft on a bank.

The power of contraction and expansion would give them the control of all the values of productions and property. By contracting their currency they could force a credit system on the country and the concomitant evils of high interest, usury, extortion, mortgages, distress sales, bankruptcy, and beggary.

Again, their political influence is of the most dangerous character, as proven in the history of the old United States Bank. Though they were chartered to have only a financial relation to the people and the Government, yet they have not scrupled to enter the political field. In a speech which I delivered in Congress June 14, 1876, I adduced the proof they were at that time assessed $1 on the $1,000 of their circulation "as a fund to secure legislation in their interests." By associations, syndicates, and combinations at home and abroad; by their facilities to communicate by telegraph, and large resources in money, they appear to be endowed with financial ubiquity, and may bring within the spell of their influence the ballot, the bench, the legislature, political conventions, and even Congress. They have aspired to make and unmake Presidents of the United States.

Again, national banks have always been condemned and opposed by the democratic party. The following extract from my speech June 14, 1876, gives a summary of the history of democratic opposition to national banks:

The demonstration is complete that opposition to national banks for forty-four years has been a vital and cardinal principle of the democratic party. It is proved by the veto of the United States Bank act by Jackson in 1832; by the indorsement of his veto on his re-election by the people; by five democratic national conventions; by the democratic vote against the national-bank bills in 1863 and 1864; by the democratic vote to authorize States to tax Government securities and obligations held by the national banks; by the democratic vote on the McNeeley resolution of January 17, 1870, to wind up the national banks; by their vote against the Sherman bill of July 7, 1870, to increase the national-bank issues; by their vote on the Randall resolution proposing to substitute legal-tender notes for national-bank notes; by their vote on the Morgan substitute on the same day to wind up the national banks and to make legal-tenders receivable for all taxes, customs, and other debts due to the United States, and by their unanimous vote against the resumption act of January 14, 1875, which proposed to supersede the legal-tender notes of the United States.

Now, it is just as well established that the democratic party as a party has been the advocate of Treasury notes as that they have been opposed to the national-bank system.

Now, to the record, to see whether I am right or wrong. The act of Congress of 1814 authorized their issue and it was approved by Madison. The act of October 12, 1837, authorized the issue of ten millions, making them receivable in payment of all duties, taxes, debts due to the United States. The act of May 21, 1838, made them reissuable. The act of March 12, 1839, authorized the issue of the remainder of the notes which had not been issued. The act of March 31, 1840, extended the time of issue twelve months and made them reissuable. The act of February 15, 1841, authorized the issue of five millions additional. The act of January 31, 1842, authorized five millions to be issued in place of others redeemed. The act of April 15, 1842, authorized the reissue of any that had been taken up. The act of July 22, 1846, authorized the issue of ten millions additional. That was during the Mexican war. The act of August 6, 1846, (and now I want the attention of every Representative in this House if I can get it,) provides—

"That on the 1st day of January, 1847, and thereafter, all duties, taxes, sales of public lands, debts, and sums of money accruing or becoming due to the United States, and also all sums due for postages, or otherwise, to the General Post-Office Department, shall be paid in gold and silver coin only, or in Treasury notes, issued under the authority of the United States."—9 United States Statutes at Large, page 64.

So you find the democratic party so far as that was concerned put the Treasury notes upon a par with gold and silver, and gave the legislative equation to gold and silver and Treasury notes, and there it permitted it to remain until disturbed by other legislation.

The act of January 28, 1847, authorized the issue of twenty-three millions additional, receivable in like manner for all taxes.

The act of December 23, 1857, authorized the issue of $20,000,000 additional, receivable in like manner. The act of March 3, 1859, authorized the issue and reissue of notes, extended to July 1, 1860.

So we find that Treasury notes were issued by every democratic administration; and after the inauguration of the civil war they were issued by both parties as indispensable to move the armies and float the navies. And, as the language was used by the Supreme Court of the United States, there was not gold enough to have answered the purposes of the Government for three months, and the nation from necessity had to coin its credit. So we find that they were not only used in time of war, but they were used in time of peace; twenty-three years of peace during these five successive democratic administrations with the broad seal of the legislation of the country stamped upon them. And now let me make the inquiry here: When, since the foundation of the Government, was there a more safe, uniform currency than from the time of the issuing of these Treasury notes during these democratic administrations?

The fact cannot be longer concealed that the issue is now sharply made whether the Government in the exercise of its sovereign power shall issue its currency or whether it will delegate the power to bank corporations. In a few years the charters of the national banks will expire, and they are now waging war to destroy or depreciate the legal-tender notes to furnish an argument of necessity to recharter their corporations. Time will soon furnish a test who are in favor of gold, silver, and the cheapest and best currency of the country; whether it shall have its primary issue by the Government, without comparative cost, or whether it shall have a secondary issue by corporations at a cost to the country of from one hundred and fifty millions to two hundred millions per annum.

It will soon be seen when positions are taken who are standing on the platforms of Jefferson, Madison, and Jackson. It will soon be seen whether the hard-money howl which has resounded through the land does not chime in with the refrain of the national banks. We will soon see who are apostates from the faith of the fathers.

I now pass on to the consideration of another financial blunder of the "first magnitude"—resumption of specie payments, so called. Every enlightened financier admits and all history proves that disaster is inseparable from forced resumption; that is, resumption by compulsion of law. General Grant said in his first annual message that it "would bring bankruptcy and ruin to thousands." Secretary Sherman in the Senate, on the 27th January, 1869, said:

> It is not possible to take this voyage without the sorest distress to every person except a capitalist out of debt or a salaried officer or an annuitant; it is a period of loss, danger, lassitude of trade, fall of wages, suspension of enterprise, bankruptcy, and disaster.

And yet he helped to drag the country through the fires of Tophet to get to what he calls resumption.

When he used the language in the Senate no doubt the frightful picture of English resumption was before his eyes. He saw that a set of ignorant financial jugglers, stock-jobbers, and dabblers in political economy had taken possession of the British Parliament and turned loose their resumption policy, which swept over the land like a wave of fire.

I will call the attention of the House and the country to the history of the passage of the English resumption act and its disastrous consequences. I read an extract or two from Doubleday's Financial, Monetary, and Statistical History of England, (London, 1847,) page 238 et infra:

> The currency bill of 1819 was passed at the instance of a committee among the members of whom were included all the parliamentary dabblers of political economy of any name or talent, and of whom Peel was chairman.
> Horner, the chairman of the bullion committee of 1810, was dead, but in his stead they had Ricardo, a rich Jew stock-jobber, who having made an immense fortune by the worst species of stock-gambling had also contrived to obtain a reputation by the publication of some books on political economy, ingenious in argument, but, in many points, of very questionable soundness, and frequently substituting an elaborate superficiality for wisdom and depth of reflection. Backed by the authority of this rich and arrogant man, the economists obtained on this occasion an almost entire command of the House of Commons. The ministry were led into the snare, with open eyes indeed, but, like somnambulists with eyes of which "the sense is shut." They selected a young man of their own body, Mr. Peel, to bring the bill for the restoration of cash payments before the House of Commons, and hence the bill, much to his detriment, has borne his name. It is only justice to say that to Mr. Peel, now Sir Robert Peel, the obloquy of this greatest blunder that ever legislature committed ought not to be given. He was but the mouth-piece and the ignorant mouth-piece of an ignorant and blundering House of Commons led by the nose by a self-conceited and shallow junta of theorists.

In another connection the same author described the effects of this act.

> The distress, ruin, and bankruptcy which now took place were universal, affecting both the great interests of land and trade, but among the landlords whose estates were burdened by mortgages, jointures, settlements, legacies, &c., the effects were the most marked and out of the ordinary course. In hundreds of cases, from the tremendous reduction in the price of land which now took place, the estates barely sold for as much as would pay off the mortgages, and hence the owners were stripped of all and made beggars.

The country fell a prey to "a combination of usurers" whom Lord Chatham characterized as "the cannibals of Change Alley."

So it will be seen that under the blighting curse of English resumption the property relations of the kingdom were shattered to pieces and these were gathered up and reconstructed into a property class and labor class. The property of the country was concentrated into the hands of one-fifth of the former owners. The consequences of the folly live in England to-day and perhaps will live for generations to come.

Capital rests upon the labor of England and Ireland with the absorbent powers of a mighty sponge. In proof of this I call attention to an extract from a letter addressed to myself from London, England, May 12, 1879, by Warwick Martin, an American citizen, a gentleman of fine intelligence and a profound thinker:

> The distance from Liverpool to London is two hundred and forty miles, being from one end of England to the other. We made the trip by rail in five hours, more than forty miles per hour, on the best railroad I ever saw.
>
> The country between Liverpool and London is the most beautiful I ever beheld. As far as the eye could reach, on both sides of the road, splendid farms present themselves, all in a state of high cultivation. They are cut up into small fields all fenced with hedges, and those not in grain are covered with grass, already green, upon which fat cattle and sheep were feeding.
> Had I seen such a country as this in the United States it would have proved the population prosperous, rich, and happy, so far as surrounding circumstances could make them happy. But this is far from being true of the people who occupy this land. They do not own one foot of these millions of acres, which their toil has from generation to generation cultivated, beautified, and enriched.
>
> All the land between Liverpool and London, I am informed, belongs to six men, who have inherited it from their ancestors. It is rented to these toilers at five pounds per acre per annum—more than would purchase that quantity of the best land already under cultivation in the Western and Southern States of America. If the five pounds a year are promptly paid, and the land is well taken care of, the lease is continued from year to year, from father to son. If the seasons are favorable and the crops good, these toilers are able to pay the rent, and to make a scanty living besides; but if the crops are poor, and they fail to pay the rent, they are turned out of house and home, and compelled to beg or starve. These people have no power to rise above their condition; as was the father so is the son, from generation to generation.

So some would imitate the example of English folly and hail the permanent establishment of an aristocracy of wealth and the enslavement of labor.

The far-reaching consequences of American funding, contraction of currency, forced resumption, and refunding may be felt like a moral curse to distant generations.

But let us inquire a few moments into this so-called experimental resumption and the stability of its foundation. As a general fact it may be stated that it was not brought about by the measures which were projected for its accomplishment; but it was brought about by the concurrence of causes excluded from the original calculation.

The following may be enumerated as the leading causes which have brought us to our present condition of resumption:

First. By remonetizing the silver dollar and compelling its coinage, now amounting to above $50,000,000.

Second. By Germany demonetizing her silver, and the Latin Union suspending the coinage of silver, so that we can keep our silver at home by the limit of the foreign demand.

Third. By the large productions of our fields and forests and the demand for them in foreign markets, enabling us to introduce foreign coin through our commerce, which may be set down to the bounty of Providence and not to the impious claim of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Fourth. By selling bonds to the amount of $95,000,000, and by hoarding $46,000,000 which ought to have been applied to the sinking fund—the two items costing the country in interest about $7,000,000 annually.

Fifth. By redeeming and destroying $33,318,984 under the act of 1875, so that it could not be presented for redemption.

Sixth. By the temporary forbearance of the banks, the clearing-house, and bond syndicates to move upon the coin in the Treasury—only deferring the raid until they can dispatch jobs which they have on hand.

Seventh. By the large amount of legal-tender notes kept out of circulation by requirement of law and commercial necessity, to wit, $108,820,099 held in the Treasury as deposit and redemption funds; $69,196,696 held as reserves by national banks; and $100,000,000 estimated amount held by State and savings banks for the payment of deposits—making together $278,016,795. This amount deducted from whole amount of legal-tender notes, would leave less than $70,000,000 in circulation, and make it so scarce that it cannot be spared from circulation.

Eighth. By receiving legal-tender notes for custom duties in violation of law, which was a begging of the question and an abandonment of the policy which prohibited the receipt of legal-tender notes for customs. The receipt of legal-tender notes for customs was all that was necessary to bring them up to par with coin. This was the theory of the democratic party, and for which they had voted over and over again. Their policy has been to enlarge and not diminish the legal-tender quality of the Treasury note. In a speech in this House, June 14, 1876, I used the following language:

I have stated that the Government has depreciated the Treasury note. It only remains for the Government to re-enact the law of 1846, making the revenues of the Government collectible in gold and silver or Treasury notes, and it will come to its equation. Such a measure will fall like a bursting bomb into Wall street, and will blow up all their gambling-shops, and the currency will be relieved from its fluctuations as compared with gold and silver. Othello's occupation will be gone.

But let the country be not deceived. Our flush of prosperity is not the fruit of the Secretary's resumption scheme, but it was produced despite his policy and partly by agencies in contravention of his policy. His policy did not add a blade of grass to the productions of the country nor lighten the burden of its debt a single dollar. But we are indebted for whatever increase there is in our prosperity to the arrest of the destruction of the legal-tender notes in 1878; to the increase of $50,000,000 in silver dollars; to unlocking the Treasury and releasing $10,000,000 which was held as an idle fund for the redemption of fractional currency and paying it for arrears of pensions; to a wholesome reduction in the expenditures of the Government; and above all to the bounty of Heaven which gave increase to the earth and poured foreign wealth into our lap.

Again, I say let not the country be deceived with the Secretary's resumption scheme. To bring the legal tender to par with coin in the use does not necessarily make it convertible into coin. The whole resumption scheme is partial, discriminating, and unjust. All sums under $50 are not convertible anywhere, and a large majority of the people in the United States deal in sums under $50. Why is this, except it be, as the Secretary said on one occasion, that "gold is the money of the rich?"

Again, it is convertible in sums over $50 at the sub-treasury in the city of New York. In all our extent of country from lake to gulf and from ocean to ocean the golden beams of the financial sun shine but upon one acre by legal requirement. Every dunderhead in the land knows that the loss of time and expense in transporting treasury notes to New York and packing the coin back across a continent would amount to a premium on coin of from 3 to 5 per cent. This shows that it is impracticable and unjust. The whole scheme looks like the Government had collected and placed its redemption coin in New York, at an expense of about $7,000,000 per annum to the people, for the exclusive benefit of the money-dealers of that favored city. This statement demonstrates the fact that the finances of the country are not on a specie basis, but, on the contrary, are resting almost exclusively on a fiduciary basis, or on the faith of the Government and the banks. The national-bank notes rest upon the faith of the Government bonds, and the bonds rest upon the faith of the people. The legal-tender notes have rested and now mainly rest on the faith of the people, and not on the coin in the Treasury. Nearly all the financial systems of Europe rest on a fiduciary basis to a greater or less extent. Seventy-five million dollars of the notes of the Bank of England rest alone on the faith of the Government and not on the coin in the bank. While I am the friend of coin and would not limit its circulation among the people, the fact is that it has a wonderful faculty of sliding from the vaults of banks which profess to bank on a specie basis just at the time when financial trials come. The fault is not in the coin, but in want of it.

Again, let me warn the country that the Secretary's resumption scheme, partial, impracticable, and unjust as it is, has but little stability in it. It exists only by the sufferance of the Secretary himself, of the banks, and the bond syndicates. Let the syndicate be released from their obligation of forbearance and be dissolved and a new combination be formed to reach the coin in the Treasury, the first push they make at the Secretary they will put him in the ditch. The national, State, and savings banks can place $200,000,000 in legal-tender notes in the city of New York, which would easily overbear the Secretary's coin in the Treasury. Or if the Secretary should refuse to receive tender notes for custom duties, it would put them to a discount and cause a rush upon the coin in the Treasury. A discount of ¼ of 1 per cent. would be fatal to him. But I will call him as a witness against himself. In his examination before the Committee of Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives in the Forty-fifth Congress, the following question was asked and answer given on this point:

Mr. EWING. Of course if there is an established difference of 1 per cent. or ¼ of 1 per cent. between gold and greenbacks, the Treasury would be broken pretty quick?

Secretary SHERMAN. Yes, sir, or a quarter of 1 per cent.; there is no doubt about that.

When the funding projects are disposed of the calculating money-schemers will be after the gold in the Treasury, and there is but one thing that can protect the Secretary, and that is to make the greenback a full legal tender, equal in use with gold and silver coins. The Government was unable to pay on presentation the sixty millions United States demand notes, and they immediately depreciated in the market. In 1862 they were made a full legal tender with coin and receivable for custom duties and they at once sprung to par and held their place with gold.

The House will pardon a glance at a few of the Secretary's inconsistencies. He claims the glory of his forced resumption; yet he denounced its incalculable evils. He opposed making legal-tender notes receivable for custom duties; yet he receives them for customs. He opposed the remonetization of the silver dollar; yet he boasts its accumulation in the Treasury as an auxiliary to resumption. He and his friends claim that his policy brought prosperity to the country; yet he forgets that the heavens dropped fatness on the land. He claims that he brought greenbacks up to par with gold; yet he recommends to Congress that their tender quality in the payment of private debts should be stricken out, so that it would cease to be lawful money. And after his work of funding, contraction, forced resumption, and consequent financial ruin of one hundred thousand of good business men and the forging of financial fetters for an enslaved posterity, yet he now finds that the people do not want his hoarded coin and prefer the greenbacks in their business transactions. After blundering through a long financial experience he is brought to the knowledge of the fact that greenbacks used for all purposes as coin need no redemption.

The House will further indulge me for a few reflections on the refunding performance of the Secretary of the Treasury. That the amount refunded was great none will deny; but that it was brought about by the masterly skill of the Secretary I do deny. The key to all this funding magic was in the fact that all the bonds issued prior to the refunding act of 1870 and 1871 were payable on a day fixed, beyond which they ceased to bear interest; and another fact, the principal was payable in lawful money—greenbacks, if you please. The acts of 1870 and 1871 authorized the refunding of these bonds in others payable in coin, at its "then standard value," at a lower rate of interest, in ten, fifteen, and thirty years, at the pleasure of the Government; but the interest would continue to run until the Government gave notice that it would pay the principal. The original bonds would soon fall due when the interest would stop and the Government would not be able to pay the principal; and the bondholder was eager to accept the new bonds which were payable in coin and would bear interest perpetually, like the British debt, until the Government was ready to pay it.

The outstanding bonded debt not refunded amounts to $782,071,700, which falls due in 1880 and 1881, when the interest will cease as to part. Of this amount, $104,654,050 may be refunded under the act of 1870. There is yet no provision for refunding the balance, $677,417,650. The bondholders will struggle for a long coin bond at 4 per cent., others will advocate 3½ per cent., and others a 3 per cent. bond. This balance of the bonded debt, if refunded at all, ought not to be refunded at a higher rate of interest than 3 per cent.

First. Because the outstanding bonds, in part, by their terms, are payable in lawful money or legal-tender Treasury notes, and the Government might justly so pay them and save all the interest as one act of justice to the tax-burdened people. The bondholders expected the principal to be paid in notes at any time after five years. In support of this I will call attention to an extract from Simon Newcomb's Financial Policy, written in 1865, giving the contemporaneous construction of the true intent of the bonds:

How is the principal of the funded public debt, the five-twenties, for example, to be paid? * * * By the letter and the spirit of the legal-tender act the bonds can be redeemed in notes at any time after five years. We tacitly repudiated all obligation to pay any portion of the principal of the public debt in coin, and lenders took us at our word by giving us no more for them than for bonds payable in paper. This was perfectly natural, because it was not to be supposed that we would deal any better by the public creditors than we were bound to by the terms of the contract.

Then if the Government may pay them in notes not bearing interest, the holders would have no just cause to complain at receiving a 3 per cent. bond.

Second. I would say that it would be reasonable and liberal in the Government to fund in a 3 per cent. bond, because it has already paid in gold as much as the original value of the debt and 6 per cent. interest upon it, and it does not lie in the mouth of the bondholder to stickle about interest when he has already received the full equitable consideration of his debt. If Congress will provide for funding at 3 per cent. the bonds will soon be funded. Our 4 per cent. bonds are now at a premium from 6 to 8 per cent. in England and the United States.

Third. The bonds ought to be funded at a low rate of interest, because it would be iniquitous and unjust to continue a high rate of interest which sends the bonds above par and thus encourages capital to retire from the industries of the country and become an insatiate cormorant to prey upon the fruits of human industry.

Fourth. The bonds ought to be funded at 3 per cent., because it is practicable. We funded a large part of our revolutionary debt at 3 per cent., and England has funded a large part of her debt in 3 per cent. annuities.

Fifth. Because a national debt is a public curse and a severe strain on our republican institutions and it ought to be paid as rapidly as possible, and the less we pay in interest the more we will be able to pay in extinguishing the principal.

But time will not permit me to enlarge further on this subject and I will close my protracted remarks by suggesting a few remedies for our financial evils.

First. The national banks should be gradually wound up and tender Treasury notes should be substituted in the place of the bank notes—which would save probably $50,000,000 per annum to the country and give the country riddance from these cumbrous and oppressive establisments.

As the national-bank notes are retired tender notes might be issued in their place. The tender notes can be put into circulation by paying the expenses and debts of the Government as they were put out in the first instance—or the Government might justly use them in paying the 5-20 bonds. A redundant circulation of tender notes can always be remedied by absorbing the surplus in taxation.

Second. The free coinage of standard silver should be restored and all our mints worked to their full capacity.

Third. Restore the income tax so that capital shall bear its portion of the burdens of government, and apply this tax to the payment of the public debt.

Fourth. Make the Treasury notes a full legal tender for all debts public and private, except the contract provides for the payment of coin.

Fifth. As a matter of duty and self-defense, within constitutional bounds, let the Government assume the control of monopolies so that they shall not outgrow and defy the Government.

Sixth. Put the Government on rigid economy in its expenditures and cleanse the channels of our civil service.

But if we shall leave the country in the stifling folds of a contracted currency; if we shall look unmoved upon the country devoured by usury and extortion; if we shall view with indifference the fruits of the earth pouring into the craving void of the syndicate; if we bid God-speed to the Shylocks to march to wealth and power over the causeway of down-trodden labor; if we stand idly by and see chains forged to bind the producing class that they may be plundered by the non-producing class; if we shall listen to the advocates of aggrandizement of power, of low wages and high taxes, and bayonets at the polls, then, indeed, we may expect to hear the wail of national calamity; then, indeed, we may expect a Cæsar from the gestation of the times, and soon see the country parceled out among rapacious proconsuls.

Let the people be not deceived with the delusive assurances of prosperity. The vampires are only fanning you into slumber that they may suck your blood. The great battle of right and freedom must be fought by the people themselves. Let their voice arise from the ballot in appalling thunder to rebuke the misrule of the land. Then we may hope to see our prostrate country remount to the level of its former prosperity and grandeur.

RETIREMENT OF GREENBACK NOTES.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. Mr. Chairman, the President, in his message to Congress, presented at the opening of this session, recommended the retirement of the greenback currency yet in circulation.

This is a proposition to surrender the entire control of issuing and regulating the volume of the currency to national-banking associations.

It opens the whole subject of finance. It is an expression of the conflict which is just beginning to rage between the money power and the producers of wealth. In my judgment we are amid the incipient throes of one of the great revolutions in human affairs. Oppressed people are rousing to throw off burdens which have accumulated until they can be endured no longer. From the day that Nimrod attempted to crush a multitude of individuals into an arbitrary mold that his will might sway them all until the present the genius of oppression has persistently sought to rule mankind. No sooner has one form of his sway been broken than he has assumed another.

He now rules through the concentration of wealth. The tyranny wielded by the "money power" is the most relentless, crushing, and hopeless under which men ever groaned. Its diabolical rule is far wider than that of any of the great world monarchies. Its grinding sway is universal. It knows no mercy and feels no pity. The screws of its press have been turned until human life can be compressed but little more. The people of Europe are groaning and travailing in pain together beneath this crushing tyranny. The suppressed curses of nihilism, internationalism, communism, anti-rentism, &c., presage an earthquake. The mad endeavor to smother these cries of distress, desperation, and vengeance by multiplying police forces and enlarging standing armies, and dogging the steps of the suffering with spies, and crowding to suffocation prisons, will serve only to make the day of retribution the more dreadful. Such is the present aspect of affairs in Europe and countries subject to the money-kings of Europe.

The same state of oppression is being fastened upon this country, and the revolt of American freemen from its incipient movements against their liberties is sought to be smothered by sneers, ridicule, bribery, intimidation, purely partisan judicial decisions, a subsidized press, perverted pulpits, a prejudiced religious press, and the whole power of the administration of the National Government, with its multiplied office-holders, aided by more than two thousand moneyed corporations.

An irrepressible conflict has commenced between the money power of the world and American freemen. That conflict will not end until the money power is broken and routed. They who think otherwise have very much to learn of the temper of our people.

The uprising of the producers of wealth in our country against the wholesale robbery which has impoverished them for the last decade is not a spasm. It is not a periodical rush for the power and pelf of office such as characterize partisan political warfare. It is the beginning of a revolution. It is the inception of an epoch in the world's advance. It is pregnant with results of good to mankind which will distinguish it as the crowning achievement of liberty. In this revolution the toiling masses have asserted and will maintain the divine right of every toiler to the results of his labor against the blasphemous assumption of a few families, distinguished by greed of gain, to all the products of labor save a bare subsistence grudgingly left to the millions who do the producing. Let us give attention to the facts which make this revolution a necessity and which gauge its magnitude.

The ability to produce from nature means for the necessities, comforts, and culture of mankind has been increased very many fold within the present century. This marvelous increase of the power of production has resulted principally from three causes. First, discovery of the latent provisions laid up by an all-provident foresight on the part of the Infinite Father. Among recent discoveries of stores of nature from which industry may draw are coal, rubber, petroleum, the mines of the West and of Australia, and measureless fields of iron. Then the application of machinery and the harnessing of the occult forces of nature to industry have multiplied the power of production full fifty-fold per capita. Once more, the facilities for distributing the products of labor by means of railroads and steamboats have increased the ability to subordinate nature to man's behest.

It is perfectly safe to affirm that these and other causes of less moment originated mostly within fifty years have increased the power of civilized peoples to produce wealth one hundred fold per capita. We have a right to expect that the masses of producers should enjoy the immense benefits of this increased power of production. Want should be banished from civilized nations. At least all who labor should have, not only the necessities of life, but comforts, and even luxuries, and there should be no need of drudgery. There ought to be no need that any should devote more than eight hours per day to physical toil.

Now, the fact is that producers work on an average as many hours and as hard as they did fifty years ago. It is also a marvelous fact that, take the whole civilized world together, the toiling masses share no more of the products of their labor than they did fifty years ago.

British writers assure us that the peasants of India, numbering one hundred and ninety millions, are reduced to a condition of poverty utterly hopeless. They tell us that the drain of interest and taxes has been so great that it has only left a bare subsistence to the producer, forbidding him to replenish fully the wastes of the years, until he has reached absolute destitution. If a single crop fails, famine with its nameless horrors must follow. The people with good crops are just above starvation.

The condition of the peasantry of Ireland is fresh in our thought. Every breeze across the Atlantic is burdened with the famine wails of men, women, and children.

The toiling masses of England and Scotland and of the Continent are scarcely above those of India and Ireland. Everywhere across the waters poverty and squalor and misery curse the masses as never before.

Where have results of the exhaustive toil of those millions gone? A portion has gone to support governments with their vast armies which are the agents of the money-kings, to keep the people submissive to their crushing exactions, but more has gone directly to minister to the luxury of those money-kings and their voluptuous courts. The direct support of the money-loaners of Europe costs far more than they allow to go to governments and armies. The drain of interest is more exhaustive than that of taxes, and taxes are largely collected to pay interest. The drain directly and indirectly from the products of labor by the Rothschilds is appalling. That house has gathered billions. One of the brothers has expended millions on his barn. The stall of a favorite horse cost a fabulous sum. That barn is a palace worthy comparison with the gorgeous residences of the moguls of India. Every dollar wasted on it was produced by the toil of laborers who are doomed to drudge all their waking hours and subsist on the meanest food and cover their nakedness with rags, and leave their children to grow without care, joy, or education. This money power is like Victor Hugo's devil-fish; it reaches forth its horrid arms, boneless, soulless—ever multiplying, ever extending—wrapping all industries and sucking the life-blood from them through interest. The terrible monster, more dreadful than the dragon of the Apocalypse, has drawn into his embrace of death the toiling millions on the other side of oceans.

I affirm that this concentration of the products of labor is the great curse of the world. It is the gigantic force of evil which prevents the lifting of mankind to a higher plane of manhood. It is the great hinderance to the success of the gospel of Christ; compared with it all other forms and combinations of sin are as the small dust of the balances.

The one supreme purpose of human life in probation is to unfold a strong, symmetrical, pure, and beautiful manhood, and thus train for high service in the immediate presence of the Creator in an endless life. The Gospel is solely devoted to that grand purpose. It has no other aim. It seeks and saves lost men. It does not condemn, but saves. It ignores the petty distinctions of human life, and regards man only in those high endowments which distinguish him as man. It seeks to lift into refinement, high culture, broad education, and spirituality the entire race.

It is as anxious to educate and refine the poorest as the richest, the slave as the prince. In its estimation the children of squalid beggars are as dear as the offspring of the wealthy. It recognizes the awful fact that in the most unfortunate—doomed from infancy to be made brutal by surroundings of squalor, misery, and vice, a trinity always combined—are wrapped all the measureless possibilities of a human destiny. The great disparity in physical conditions between a few and the many, the bottomless gulf between the multitudinous poor and the small class of the rich caused by the centralization of wealth, constitutes the mighty barrier to its success. It curses both the poor and the rich; it blights manhood both ways; it antagonizes the gospel on both wings and along the whole line; it dooms the toiling millions to undue physical drudgery: inadequate food, clothing, and shelter; deprives them of access to mental, social, and spiritual helps and leaves them slaves to animal wants and superstitions which are the lowest forms of spiritual activities.

Let us dwell a moment on the disabilities which poverty imposes. First, it necessitates drudgery. The vital forces are all expended in a struggle for physical subsistence, leaving no inspiration to mental, social, or spiritual activity. When the life of a family is a perpetual struggle to sustain physical existence neither parents nor children can devote time to reading or to thought which reading inspires. Go into the factories of the East or visit the laborers of Europe or India and you will find all, even young children, drudging from dawn till evening. If a family is permitted to eat their meals together they are too weary to converse, especially on any theme requiring exertion. When the exhaustive toil of the day is over they are all too tired for any social festivity, and they sink into their stupid slumber without those sweet ministries of love that should make the evening of every day a scene of refining, joy-inspiring heart communion to every household. Drudgery so exhausts vital force as to chill the affections and sour the tempers and cause cross words and low quarrels amid which millions of children, with their sensitive, blossoming natures, are forced to take in the scenery which must form the furniture of their temples—not made with hands—forever. Childhood has been cruelly treated, shamefully abused, dwarfed and deformed by the effects of squalid poverty in its parentage. This state, while it does not inspire any upward force, does gender and intensify all low passions and low appetites and fiendish tempers, causing misery and vice. It deprives thousands, yea millions, of a claim to any spot of earth as their own. Impoverished families are not permitted to feel that there is one place where they are sheltered from all intrusion, one hallowed temple sacred to their lives and worship, from which no landlord can eject them, into which no tyrant may enter to make his exactions. They are deprived of all the divine ministries, the freeman's inspirations, the unspeakable joys which are embodied in that word home. The enshrinement of the families of mankind in homes would advance the race Godward more than a thousand years.

By the aid of the occult forces of nature harnessed to industrial enterprises a few years' labor would create homes for every household if labor's results could be equally distributed. The world is now producing enough to furnish all with comforts and gradually with ministries to culture. With the help of machinery it is not necessary for any to toil all waking hours. All might have rest and leisure for study and enjoyment. But because of this unequal distribution of wealth the vast majority are deprived of comfort, culture, rest, study, and joy. This abnormal state does not bless even the few. It curses the comparatively small class into whose hands the wealth goes. Jesus knew what was in man. He made no mistake in stating the philosophy of human life. He spoke the sad truth when he said, "It is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God." The undue accumulation of wealth has a powerful, almost irresistible tendency to make men sordid, selfish, and sensual. Look on the inner scenes of Vanderbilt's home. Behold his sons and daughters exhibiting to the world the private vices of their dead father, who has accumulated for them one hundred millions. The view is disgusting to nausea.

Riches, unless used by their possessors to bless the poor, are an unmitigated curse. They do not minister to the development of the hardihood and beauty of character, the development of which is the sole purpose of life. For these reasons and many others which are obvious, I affirm that the concentrations of wealth as now exhibited in the world's condition is the monster evil against which all regenerating forces should be arrayed. It is evil and only evil, and that continually. It presents not one redeeming feature.

Now I ask, has not human society a right to protect itself from this evil by legislation and executive and judicial forces? Ought not government to be arrayed against it? Is it not the grand purpose of governments to protect peoples from evil? Is it not possible to protect society from this monster of iniquity? Those who support it declare that it is impossible to prevent it. They tell us that if a pro rata distribution of the wealth of the world were effected ten years would suffice to drain it to the centers as now. They believe that this tendency to apoplexy is normal and cannot be prevented, and society must remain in the diseased state of a fevered brain and chilled extremities.

We acknowledge a strong tendency to this condition resultant from the disordered condition of human nature under the power of sin. We affirm that the tendency calls for the strongest and most persistent remedies of which the Government is capable. Yet we charge that the governments of the civilized nations are all devoted to intensifying this abnormal and ruinous tendency.

The money-loaners rule the governments. They control legislation and rulers obey their behests. They have absolute dictation in the world's finances, and by a regular system of inflations and contractions of the volume of the medium of the people's exchange they manage to rob them of the results of their labor. They do this mainly by means of the specie basis, which they so control as to regulate the volume of the people's currency.

No one will question that the Rothschilds and other money-kings rule Europe. The superiority of their power to monarchs and legislatures is notorious. It is by their rule that Europe is in the condition to which we have alluded. That condition of hopeless poverty on the part of the masses and luxurious licentiousness on the part of a few threatens to deluge Europe and India in blood. It has become intolerable and society gives ominous signs of revolt.

The matter in which we are immediately interested is the fact that the monster evil which has pushed the Old World to the border of a horrible revolution is being fastened upon us. The devil-fish which has embraced Europe and is sucking its life has risen out of the sea of the civil war and is fast wrapping our industries and liberties in its horrible and fatal arms. Within twenty years the money power has gained absolute control of our Government, and is wielding it to absorb our wealth and make of us a nation of serfs and lords. I affirm that the financial policy which has been foisted upon our people, in its every element, has been dictated by the money-loaners through a few republican leaders. Not one measure of that policy has been asked for or desired by the people, but every one has been demanded by the money-loaners in the sole interest of their class. The exceptions to the legal-tender power of the greenbacks, the change of the contracts in favor of the bondholders, the demonetization of silver, the refunding of the national debt, the national-banking scheme, the change of the paper fractional currency into silver at the enormous cost of fifty millions of bonded debt fastened on the people for thirty years, draining from them 5 per cent. interest, the forced resumption, and the settled purpose to destroy all the currency issued by the Government and leave the people solely in the power of the banking corporations, constitute that policy. It is well known that each one of these measures was dictated by the money power, and not one of them desired or asked for by the people.

There is one other measure to which I wish to call special attention. All will remember that in 1873 there was a panic. At the close of the war we had about two billions of currency. Near one billion was interest-bearing legal-tender and other notes. They were pushed into wide circulation by being paid to the Army and used in buying supplies. They were abnormal currency, and not likely to remain in active circulation for obvious reasons. Most of these notes were of short duration, and by 1873 they were withdrawn from the channels of business. That vast system of industry on which our people were launched, largely by the inspiration of the volume of currency swelled by these notes, felt the immense drain and began to falter. The fiasco of Jay Gould and the demand for currency to move the crops, added to that drain, caused the crash of 1873.

The President suggested to Congress some measure of relief. Mr. Morton, who had more brains than is left to republican leadership now, pushed through a measure. The people backed him by a loud, emphatic demand. Both Houses passed the measure by large majorities and it went to the President's table. Never was the voice of the people more unanimous and emphatic in the demand for any measure at the hand of their own government—their servants intrusted with their interests. Mr. Grant had solemnly promised them that he would execute their will and not his own when he took from their generous hands the highest place and honor in their gift. But Belmont and other bankers forbade him to execute the will of the people. They ordered him to veto that measure for the people's relief and let the business ruin go on, that they might continue their process of spoliation, and Mr. Grant obeyed his masters, and they rewarded him by a gorgeous reception at the courts of the old world which those masters rule. Finding him so pliant a tool, they now propose to place him again at the head of the Government, that in case the people revolt from their service he with his iron will may crush them, and they have been exhibiting him to the people in a brilliant pageant to inspire them with the feeble sentiment of hero worship that they may be induced to vote for their choice. The spectacle has been one of amazement and deep humiliation. I have greatly overestimated the people of this country if the second, sober thought does not cause a revolution of popular sentiment which will thwart the bold purpose.

This policy, dictated by the money loaners and foisted on the nation by a few politicians at the head of the party in power, has resulted in concentrating in the hands of those who dictated it the wealth of this country. It has pushed us far on toward the intolerable condition to which a like policy has crushed the old world. It has bankrupted the men who put their money and their talents into productive and commercial enterprise. It has sequestered a very large number of freeholds, leaving a majority of our people with no property interest in the stability of our form of Government.

It has burdened the property accumulated and the productive power of the people with a debt which through its drain of interest will absorb it all.

It has doomed large numbers of toilers to hopeless poverty and taken from them the inspirations and means to rise in manhood. It has filled our land with tramps and our cities with crimes and our prisons with victims. It has driven hundreds from life through the power of suicide. It has crowded backward the work of the gospel and all the agencies of a higher civilization. It has so impoverished and pushed down the masses that universal suffrage is beginning to assume a threatening form. The authors of the policy and its results are beginning to manifest alarm; but instead of repenting and retracing their ruinous course they are preparing to organize a centralized force to take the place of the moral sentiment of the whole people, to which the founders of the Government trusted its power. It is clear that no Government can rest safely and permanently on the hearts of a people the vast majority of whom have no property interests in its stability. It will degenerate into anarchy, the miseries of which will drive to the arms of a centralized power.

The great questions which we face are, Shall our form of government go under or shall this money power be dethroned? One or the other is inevitable. If the money power prevail and establish itself permanently, then we shall have a dictator backed by a standing army, and the wide, deep gulf between those who produce the wealth and those who consume it will be made bridgeless, and the masses will be doomed to remain in a low condition of manhood, and the small aristocratic class, who will luxuriate in the wealth created by the drudgery of the ignorant multitude, will sink into the emasculated, feverish, diseased manhood which luxury and dissipation produce. To prevent such a catastrophe to all the interests embodied in our national life is the task imposed upon us; and this movement is inspired to do it. It is one of the most sublime movements of the ages. It cannot be suppressed by sneers nor hindered by being ignored. It is a movement by the people.

Our oppressors congratulate themselves that the people are without leadership. They quiet their fears with the idea that the people are incapable of acting for themselves and must be led by self-appointed guardians, as Mr. BLAINE leads the republicans of Maine and Mr. CONKLING leads those of New York. It is well known that the party blindly follows those noted leaders in their respective States. I once saw such leadership graphically illustrated. I was crossing the plains from Kansas City to Denver. While the train was thundering along amid the solitude I noticed a small herd of buffaloes feeding not far from the track about two miles ahead. When they heard the train they looked up wildly a moment, and then their leader started to run away from the peril, followed in single file by the herd. He put his nose very near the ground, and each follower did the same. As the train gained rapidly on the fleeing animals, the leader stopped suddenly, and with nostrils distended and his eyes flashing, gazed at the hissing, thundering monster, and every buffalo did just as the leader did. Then, frightened to madness, the leader dropped his head and made more frantic efforts to outrun the steam-driven train, and each buffalo did just so.

In like manner the present republican voters follow leadership. Where Messrs. BLAINE, CONKLING, Sherman, and GARFIELD lead they follow, though their leaders grow rich and they themselves grow poor. In this grand movement the people are not following leadership. It has not been inspired and is not being pushed by self-appointed leaders. It is of, and from, and by the people themselves, and in due time they will choose from among themselves men to be intrusted with the management of their affairs. Geology teaches us that the mountains which pierce the clouds and gather in their capacious bosoms the dews and rains, sending them forth in streams to replenish the slopes and valleys, are the upheavings of the granite. Revolutions in the bowels of the earth have heaved the gigantic elevations. So the people, when roused to revolution by oppression, or by any force which imperils their liberties, lift from themselves leaders who serve them instead of fleecing them, as the present republican leaders are doing.

In the last revolution through which we passed the people thus elected Abraham Lincoln. He was selected out of their ranks. He had developed a stalwart manhood by toil. He lacked the polish which much contact with polite society gives. He could not bow with the ease or kiss his hand to the ladies with the grace that Mr. CONKLING does, yet he possessed the elements of leadership in a degree never surpassed. I once saw him in a brilliant assembly gathered to do him honor. His awkwardness was conspicuous. He seemed at unrest. Happening to stand for a time where I could study his face, it made an impression on my spirit that I shall retain with all its original vividness through life. There was more in its expression than I ever saw in a countenance before or since. I said to myself, "Godlike man though you are, you are not fitted to shine in a parlor. You stand full six feet four inches under the heaviest load ever carried by mortal, and you walk firmly with it." Such are the leaders that the people select in times of their extremity.

In accomplishing the task of relieving themselves from the crushing power of this despotism the people must wrest from the money power the administration of the Government.

That will be a difficult achievement. It is in full possession of every department of the Government. It has controlled perfectly each republican Administration. Presidents and cabinets have obeyed its behests absolutely. The present Administration has recently expressed obsequious devotions to its interests. The President, Secretary of the Treasury, and Comptroller of the Currency have advocated in their reports to Congress the entire surrender of the people's currency to the unchecked control of money loaners, that they may inflate or contract it at their pleasure. Their recommendations would have been embodied in law by Congress ere this, but for the fact that the election of next fall would be affected by it.

The Administration is backed by nearly one hundred thousand office-holders who live off the taxes the people pay.

Office-holders constitute a large army who work with desperate energy, inspired by fear of being returned to private life. This army drains from the public Treasury money sufficient to equip and sustain it in the field. It is supported by a much larger host of money loaners, with more than two thousand perfect and efficient organizations, which command every election precinct in the nation.

These banking associations can furnish money without limit out of the wealth they have accumulated by their privilege of furnishing the people's currency and draining out of the products of their labor a double interest; and they are inspired to do their utmost to hold the control of the Government by the fact that their special subsidy depends upon it.

Back of this bank power is the money power of Europe. The money loaning interest of the world is arrayed actively against us in this great struggle. We have its whole mighty force to meet on our battle-field, and upon us rests the grave responsibility of fighting the decisive battle in the world's conflict with this relentless despotism. Its leaders in Europe are wise enough to know that our success will presage their downfall.

Then, again, we have the press arrayed with them. The press is very largely controlled by money, and they have the money to control it. The leaders of the people and their purposes are misrepresented without the slightest regard to truth. They not only wield the tremendous force of the periodical press, but are subordinating our standard literature. They have changed the definition of money in Webster's Dictionary and mutilated Wayland's Political Economy to suit their purpose.

Very reluctantly and sadly I add that the religious press and the pulpit are largely on the side of the absorbers of the products of other men's labors. As an illustration I cite you to Maine. The pulpits of Maine, by command of Mr. BLAINE, were closed to me, although I never desecrated a pulpit by a political partisan harangue in my life. Yet those pulpits were made to ring out BLAINE's behests in his recent struggle for the State government in a manner that would have disgraced a political arena.

Worse still, the unblushing contradictory decisions of the supreme court of Maine to aid partisan success assures us that the judiciary is warped, to say the least.

Still further, the great railroad, land, and other huge monopolies, with their power to control the votes of their employés, tenants, and dependents, are against us. But for the control of votes by intimidation of dependent laborers and tenants in Maine, the State would have gone against the money power by many thousand votes. I am not speaking at random. I was there through the canvass and know whereof I affirm.

This brief statement shows that we are engaged in no holiday parade. There is stern work before us; to accomplish it we must combine all who are oppressed with the noble few who though not suffering themselves have hearts to feel for those who do suffer. Comparatively small differences must be ignored. We must "mark those who cause divisions and from such turn away." All who seek to make this revolution serve merely their individual ambitions must be summarily dismissed from leadership.

We must organize and drill our forces, and move against this gigantic power with the majesty, the resistless might, and relentless purpose of the people whose united voice is the fiat of God.

The ballot is our weapon. We will not resort to any destructive enginery, but we will have the ballot, and all efforts to take that from us or to deprive us of its effectiveness must be met with a spirit that will make our enemies fear to again seek to wrest from us its sacred right as in many places they did in the last elections. We must demand—and make good that demand—a fair election. This will require nerve and sleepless vigilance. Our foes have no scruples whatever. Their purpose to hold power at any hazard is relentless. There is no question that the republican party is now in power by fraud in counting votes. It is notorious that the greenback vote was not fully counted in the last election. We will assert and maintain our rights in this matter at any cost and all hazard. The only possible way to avert a bloody revolution is to hold the power of the ballot. Let the people be assured that that sacred right is gone and it will be impossible to prevent them from use of brute force, which may Heaven prevent. If the money power attempts to execute the purpose avowed by the millionaire, Senator SHARON, published in a late number of the Nevada Chronicle, in answer to questions by a reporter as to the republican candidate for President, then the people will give them blood to their heart's content. He says:

General Grant will be nominated without doubt, if he will accept it. We need a strong central government—the wealth of the country demands it; without capital and the capitalist our Government would not be worth a fig. The capital of the country demands protection. Its rights are as sacred as the rights of the paupers who are continually prating about the encroachments of capital and against centralization. We have tried Grant, and know him to be the man for the place above all others. He has nerve. As President he would be Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, and when the communistic tramps of the country raised mobs to tear up railroad tracks and to sack cities on the sham cry of "bread or blood," he would not hesitate one instant to turn grape and canister loose upon them. The wealth of the country has to bear the burdens of government and should control it. The people are becoming educated up to this theory rapidly, and the sooner this theory is recognized in the Constitution and laws the better it will be for the people.

Without bloodshed, and rivers of it, there will be no political change of administration; the moneyed interests of the country, for self-preservation, must sustain the republican party. Democratic success would be bankruptcy to them. To avert bloodshed a strong central government should be established as soon as possible.

When we gain control of the Government we shall not engage in any of the wild, fanatical schemes which the press and orators of the money power have charged that we meditate.

Their representation of a bill I presented to Congress in the extra session is a fair specimen of their utter untruthfulness. In the first place it was not my bill, and I could not legitimately be held responsible for it at all. I presented it for another man at his request, a practice very common. It proposed that it should be made lawful to issue one billion of full legal-tender paper money, with the distinct understanding that it should take the place of the national-bank currency. It provided for the actual issuing of less than three hundred millions, and it would have required at least five years to have pushed that amount into circulation on Mr. Chiles's plan. That was charged by the whole republican press and all their speakers as an awful scheme of inflation so utterly wild as to prove its author a lunatic or idiot.

The national-bank scheme, which is the pet institution of the republican party, makes it lawful for the national banking corporations to issue one billion eight hundred millions, or up to within 10 per cent. of the bonded debt of the nation. Mr. Chiles proposed to allow the Government to issue currency, as the interests of the people might demand, up to the amount of one billion. The republican party have by law given favored corporations power to issue one billion eight hundred millions as may suit their interests. Which is the wild insane scheme of inflation? Again, there was the most extravagant abuse of Mr. Chiles's plan, because it proposed to loan money to corporations. He did propose to loan about two hundred millions to corporations to construct internal improvements. That part of his plan I did not indorse, and so stated in Congress and through the press. But I was amazed that the republican press and orators went into spasms about it. In their scheme of issuing our currency they have arranged to loan national-banking associations one billion eight hundred millions, and they have already loaned them near four hundred millions. Mr. Chiles would loan money on a plan that would pay into the people's Treasury 3 per cent. interest; the republican plan pays out of the Treasury from 4 to 6 per cent. interest in gold. His plan would loan money to secure the creation of wealth and employ idle laborers, giving them opportunity to support their families; the republican plan loans money to enable non-producers to drain from producers the results of their toil, that with their families they may riot in wealth.

Then, again, there was unstinted sneering about Mr. Chiles's plan of internal improvements. They were stigmatized as "De La Matyr canals." I was not a little surprised at the contemptible ignorance on the part of republican editors and orators manifest in their tirade of cheap wit and far-fetched sarcasm. Mr. Chiles only proposed to execute what one of the ablest republican committees ever appointed by the Senate, on which were John Sherman and ROSCOE CONKLING, unanimously recommended as of great importance. I recommend to the study of said editors and orators the Senate committee's report on transportation routes to the seaboard, presented in 1872. It is one of the ablest and most important reports ever presented to Congress. I have neither time nor heart to follow the lying tirades against us. I will proceed to state what the reformers propose to do, as I understand it, and I am familiar with their purposes. We propose to so revolutionize the work of civil government in all its departments as to make it serve all the people, and not privileged classes, bringing it back to the purpose of its original framers. So far as possible we propose to have the Government aid an equitable distribution of the products of labor, instead of suffering it to continue to exert all the force of its tremendous influence in aid of the vicious natural tendency to the absorption of those products in a few hands which have not been soiled by producing labor. In short, we propose to array the whole power of Government in the effort to secure to each toiler the legitimate results of his labor.

In this work we mean first to stop the absorption of lands by those who do not cultivate them, and by graded taxations to make decidedly unprofitable the holding of large tracts of the soil by corporations or individuals, on the same line that the State banks were gotten rid of—seeking in every legitimate way the division of the lands as freeholds among those who actually cultivate them. On this all-important matter we are all united and determined.

In the same line we shall seek to aid in the multiplying of freeholds in towns and cities. In all legitimate governmental ways we shall seek to multiply homes owned by the people, giving as many voters as possible a property interest in the stability of our institutions. We regard this a far better plan than to use grape and canister, as republican leaders propose. Such a change will be a revolution. Now the whole power of government favors absorption by individuals and corporations of the lands, and town and city residences, making the producers tenants at will of landlords, which is the blighting curse on poor Ireland.

Secondly, we shall take from a favored class, created and subsidized by the Government, the power to issue and control the volume of the people's currency, and restore that tremendous power to the people acting together in their Government. We take no stock in the republican theory that the people are incapable of self-government in this most important of all their interests. We repudiate with emphasis Mr. Hayes's idea that moneyed corporations will furnish a more stable currency than the people's Government.

That power which regulates the volume of a people's currency has very large control of all their interests. The money-loaners have always managed that matter for us, and inflation and contraction have made a circuit once in a decade, causing successive financial crises, which have robbed the producers of wealth of the results of their toil, causing disaster to productive enterprise and untold misery to the people.

With this history before us, we prefer to trust the representatives of the people to gauge the volume of their currency, rather than a class who have every temptation to make it fluctuate. We do not believe it possible to elect a Congress and executive officers such fools or knaves as to make a currency as unstable as ours has always been under the management of money-loaners.

We propose to base the currency on the authority of the people's government, which is the only stable basis—a foundation which will stand while the Government endures. We object to the specie basis, because it is so unstable and unreliable. It always fails when tested. For instance: When war came we had to place our currency on the authority of law, because specie utterly failed us. It has always failed in emergencies which have tried it. It answers only in perfect calm. It cannot endure a storm. We mean to have a basis which bankers have no power to remove at their pleasure; one that will stand when the severest test comes, and one on which we can build an abiding volume preventing ruinous fluctuations.

The whole specie of the world would not afford a basis broad enough to rest the world's currency upon. The vesting of three dollars of money on one of specie is a supreme farce which exhibits its contemptible ridiculousness every time it is tested, and yet this is the fiction which hard-money men declare the acme of wisdom so clear that to dissent from it is evidence of lunacy or idiocy.

Aside from an inadequate amount even if the whole were used, it has the following elements of change: Uncertainty of productions, amounts converted into other uses, and, most of all, it is subject to the manipulation of money-gamblers. No intelligent financier will question the fact that the money-houses of Europe can, at pleasure, withdraw any portions of the specie of our country, and thus lessen our volume and precipitate a contraction of the currency and the unsettling of all prices of property and labor. I would greatly prefer to trust Congress to regulate our currency rather than to commit so vital a matter to the absolute control of European financiers.

We propose that the volume of currency shall be sufficient to inspire and sustain the maximum of our productive power. To determine what that volume should be will require much study. That is the most difficult question in the whole matter of finance. To it will be given thorough research and the best thought of our statesmen. No wild hurried inflation is thought of. All statements to that effect are simply false.

We propose to push into circulation the needed amount, first, by absorbing in it, as fast as possible in compliance with the plighted faith of the Government, the public debt; second, by replacing with it all bank-notes now afloat. On these points all are agreed. In my judgment another desirable mode is to employ idle laborers on much-needed internal improvements. That course would gradually put the money directly into the hands of the producing classes. The Hon. HENDRICK B. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania, proposes to loan on small interest to homesteaders an amount. His plan has many advocates.

There is no difficulty in legitimately pushing into circulation a sufficient volume of currency. When a sufficient volume is reached, we propose to make it as stable as possible by law, either statutory or constitutional.

We propose that whatever the material of which money is made, its legal-tender value for all dues, public and private, shall be the same. The dollar, whether gold, silver, or paper, shall have the same debt-paying power. Then there will be no need of hoarding specie in the Treasury at an expense of interest paid specie-gamblers.

If the balance of trade should turn against us, we can use bullion in exchange as we do now, and shall have more to use when not required to hoard millions in the Treasury to meet the fiction that the people cannot trust themselves.

Such is a rough sketch of the purposes of the party I have the honor to represent in part. We challenge for them most thorough and exhaustive criticism and discussion.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I propose to occupy the time extended to me by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DE LA MATYR] in discussing the provisions of a bill which I had the honor to introduce on the 2d of June last, now pending before the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which it was referred, in the following words:

A bill to provide for the equalization of bounty to the soldiers of the Army of the United States during the war of the rebellion.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That each and every soldier who enlisted in the Army of the United States after the 12th day of April, 1861, and before the 15th day of July, 1865, and who has been honorably discharged, and the widow, children, or parents, in the order named, of any such soldier who died in the service of the United States, or of disease or wounds contracted while in the service and in the line of duty, shall be paid bounty at the rate of eight and one-third dollars per month for the time between the date of his enlistment and the date of his death in the service, or the date of his discharge: Provided, That all sums paid as bounty under any act of Congress shall be deducted from the amounts to which the soldiers who received the same would be entitled under this act: And provided further, That no soldier who received any State, county, or local bounty, or who received pay for acting as a substitute for another, shall receive additional bounty under this act, unless the bounty to which he would be entitled under this act shall exceed the amount of such local bounty or such pay, and in such case he shall receive only such excess.

SEC. 2. That the reception, examination, and settlement of all claims under this act shall be regulated by the provisions of sections 15 and 16 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867," approved July 28, 1866.

In the Forty-fifth Congress I introduced a bill of the same tenor as that now before the Committee on Pensions, but it was not reported by the committee. I hope at some time during this Congress to obtain action upon it.

The object of this bill, Mr. Chairman, as its title indicates, is to equalize the bounties of all the soldiers who served during the recent war. Now, I think the Government has, in dealing with the soldiers, extended to them generally great liberality in the payment of pensions, and yet it may not be known, or fully understood, that a very large number of soldiers who enlisted in the Army in the early part of the war and who served their country faithfully and well never obtained one dollar of bounty.

As a general principle, under the statutes of the United States all soldiers who enlisted for three months, nine months, and for twelve months received no bounty whatever, and a large number of soldiers who enlisted for a period of three years, but served a less period than two years, received none. One hundred and seventy-five thousand soldiers of that class who enlisted for three years, but served for a less period than two, never received a dollar of bounty.

Now, I find, from a statement received from the Treasury Department, this to be the case: Of those who received $100 bounty the number is 467,098; of those who received bounty amounting to $150 there were 30,950; of those who received $200 bounty there were 1,126,388; of those who received $300 there were 150,000; of those who received $400 bounty, 158,507; while 641,665 soldiers never received a dollar of bounty. Why was this? The Government, by three or four bounty laws, established the principle of paying soldiers bounty at the rate of $100 per annum; that is, if a soldier served for one year his bounty amounted to $100; if two years, $200, and $50 for six months, and so on, which amounts to an average of eight and one-third dollars a month if paid for the time they actually served. But it turned out in many cases after long service actually rendered by the soldier, by reason of wounds received or disease contracted in the line of duty, he was discharged before the expiration of the term of enlistment, and, as the law was construed, he could not receive a dollar of bounty because he did not serve out his full term.

For instance: if a soldier served five months out of six, or any fraction of a period short of the full term of enlistment, and was discharged, although it was by reason of disability arising from wounds received in battle or from disease contracted in the performance of his duty, as the law was construed, he received no bounty whatever. If he enlisted for two years and was permanently disabled after serving one year and eleven months, or any other portion of the time less than two years, and was discharged, although his discharge was because of such disability, he received no bounty. This state of facts, as I said before, applies to no less a number than one hundred and seventy-five thousand of our gallant soldiers.

From a statement of the Second Comptroller, which I have here, I find that of the number of men who responded to the first call of the President, April 15, 1861, for seventy-five thousand men to serve three months, there were 93,326 who received no bounty. Of the number who responded to the second call of the President, May 3, 1861, for six months' service, 2,715 received no bounty; under the call of July 22, for twelve months' service, 9,056 men received no bounty. Again, under the call of June, 1862, 15,007 men who enlisted received no bounty; under the call of August 4, 1862, 87,588 men enlisted and received no bounty.

All these men were deprived of bounty because no provision of law was ever made to pay bounties to soldiers who enlisted for three, six, nine months, or a year.

There is another class of soldiers who were debarred from receiving the full bounty which in equity they should have received under the law, as I believe. Under the act of July, 1864, which provided for three years' enlistment, soldiers were to be paid one-third of their bounty at the date of enlistment, one-third when they had served one-half of their term of enlistment, and the remainder of the bounty at the end of the period of service for which they were enlisted.

Under the call of the President, pursuant to that act, the call of July 18, 1864, for five hundred thousand men, there were 272,463 soldiers enlisted, and under the call of December 19, 1864, for three hundred thousand men there were 194,635 soldiers enlisted for three years. But those soldiers were all discharged by reason of the termination of the war before the end of three years; and the Government only paid them, or the greater portion of them, one installment of bounty, the other two installments being refused because the soldiers had not served out their full term. The soldier's contract with the Government was that he was to serve for the period of three years, and he was to receive his $300 bounty as a reward for that service; but the Government mustered the soldier out of the service before the close of his term, and he was not paid the full amount of his bounty because he was mustered out before his term expired. The statement furnished by the Comptroller shows the average amount of bounty paid under the law of July, 1864, was $100. In this case the soldier performed his contract with the Government as fully as he was permitted to do. It was the fault of the Government in mustering him out and not his own that he did not serve out his full term.

Without giving my views as to whether under these circumstances the Government was not morally bound to pay the full amount, I have no hesitation in saying that the soldier should be paid bounty at the rate of $100 a year for every day he served under that contract of enlistment. My bill, if it becomes a law, will pay him for the time he actually served.

So, Mr. Chairman, owing to defects in the law, over six hundred and forty-one thousand soldiers who served during the war for various periods from three to six, nine, and twelve months, never received one dollar of bounty, while other soldiers who enlisted at a later period during the war received, some $300, some $400 bounty besides large local bounties that were paid them. Now, the bill which I have had the honor to introduce, and which I hope at some time to bring before the House, provides for equalizing the bounties of all the soldiers, to pay each soldier at the rate of eight and one-third dollars per month for the time he actually served the Government, deducting from the amount whatever bounty he has heretofore received.

There is another class of soldiers that I want to call attention to before I leave that branch of the subject—soldiers who enlisted and served their country faithfully and received no bounty. I read from page 2040 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 2, 1875, from the remarks of Mr. LOGAN. He says:

I can give several instances. Here is one: I quote from the speech of Mr. Gunckel of his State, a very honorable gentleman, who makes these statements:

"Some soldiers of the Thirty-ninth Ohio state their case thus: They enlisted for the term of three years under the President's proclamation of May 3, 1861, before the 22d day of July, 1861; but by the failure of the officer to correctly date their enlistment and of the United States mustering officer to muster them into the service before August 6, 1861, they have received, and under existing laws, as construed by the Treasury Department, can receive, no bounty."

* * * * * * *

Again Mr. Gunckel said:

"Soldiers from Missouri, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Iowa, and West Virginia, who enlisted for six or nine months, or any period less than one year, were excluded on a decision by the War Department that they were not volunteers but militia."

Again:

Here is another case:

"Some of the enlisted men of the Fourth Iowa Regiment complain that they were enrolled prior to July 22, 1861, but on account of being ordered beyond the limits of the State of Iowa were not regularly mustered into United States service until subsequent to August 6, 1861, and so deprived of bounty."

* * * * * * *

I could give the Senator from Ohio another instance. Here is a Senator [Mr. Spencer] who was in command of a regiment. They served under me a small portion of the time. That regiment was raised in Alabama. While we were stationed in Northern Alabama, we recruited a regiment of cavalry, called the First Alabama Cavalry, and the Senator from Alabama was the colonel commanding that regiment. They served through the war, served as faithfully as any soldiers ever did serve, and they were denied bounty because they were recruited in a rebel State. That is another decision of the War Department.

* * * * * * *

Let me give you another case. Suppose a man enlisted for three years. He served out within one day of his first year, which would entitle him to $100 bounty. On that day he is killed in battle; his wife and his children get no bounty, although he is killed. Why? If he had lived his wife and children would have got a bounty; but they are not entitled to any bounty because he was killed just one day before his enlistment expired; and there are thousands of cases of that kind. If a man, within a week of the expiration of his time, was taken to the hospital, and the surgeon mustered him out of service because he had an incurable disease or wound, that man would get no bounty, although he was wounded and mustered out of the service on account of his wounds. Why? Because his wounds caused him to be mustered out of the service.

I received a letter a few days ago from a soldier in my own town, and his case is but a sample of many others. It is as follows:

BUCYRUS, OHIO, February 6, 1880.

DEAR SIR: I wanted to have a talk with you before you left about my bounty money, but did not have a chance to do so. I inclose you the answer from the Department. There is a mistake somewhere—you know well that my discharge papers were lost; and when I enlisted in 1861 it was for three years, if not sooner discharged. When I, with four of my comrades, got to Washington, we were put in the Twenty-ninth New York Regiment, which was a two-years regiment. Some of the others that went with us from Ohio were put into the Eighth New York Regiment, which was a three-years regiment, and they received their full bounty; but when we were discharged we received nothing. The paymaster in New York City told us we should receive all that was due us, but I never got anything. Now, my friend, what do you think of this? Is there not some way for me to find out why I cannot be paid what is justly due me?

Yours truly,

F. HUFNAGLE.

Hon. E. B. FINLEY.

Accompanying that letter is a letter from the Treasury Department, dated December 13, 1879, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECOND AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 13, 1879.

SIR: Having been enrolled in Company D, Twenty-ninth New York Volunteers, for the unexpired term of the regiment, which was less than two years, you are not entitled to bounty under any existing law. Your claim is therefore disallowed. Your discharge certificate is not on file.

Respectfully,

E. B. FRENCH, Auditor.

FREDERICK HUFNAGLE,
Bucyrus, Crawford County, Ohio.

I am in daily receipt of letters from soldiers from all parts of the country, complaining that justice has not been done them. For instance, a soldier from Trenton, New Jersey, writes me as follows:

Allow me to call your attention to a class of soldiers who have been thus far debarred from receiving any bounties whatever. I refer to soldiers who enlisted for two years, in 1861; served from six months to twenty-three months, and then accepted promotion. My own case is an example. I enlisted in Company K, Twenty-third Regiment New York Volunteers, at Elmira, New York, on the 16th of April, 1861, for two years. The pay at that time was $11 a month. I served as a private until February 20, 1862, when I was promoted to first lieutenant Company I, One hundred and third New York Volunteers, then organizing in Elmira, and was even refused transportation from Washington home, on the plea that I was discharged for promotion. There are hundreds of similar cases, and I think you will agree with me that if any soldiers deserve bounties it is those who sprang to arms at the first call of our martyred President for seventy-five thousand men to protect our national capital. These were the soldiers who enlisted from patriotism and not for a bounty of from $300 to $1,200.

Another soldier from Louisville, Kentucky, writes:

I enlisted in the United States Army September 25, 1860, to serve for the period of five years, but was discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability December 9, 1864. Notwithstanding I served more than three years, engaged in numerous battles, as my discharge shows, I have not nor am I entitled to receive any bounty.

A soldier from Saint Louis, Missouri, writes:

I enlisted in July, 1859; was in Texas when General Twiggs surrendered all the Government property and soldiers in the department. My regiment, the Second Cavalry, did not surrender, but immediately sailed for New York. I continued in active service until July 29, 1864, and was honorably discharged. I then enlisted in the Navy, and served until the end of the war. I have never received any bounty of any kind whatever for services up to July, 1864.

Others write that they served as musicians, and therefore got no bounty. Sailors who enlisted the first years of the war write that they got no bounty, and so on. Thousands of those who were first to respond to their country's call, and who endured the trials and hardships of the early campaigns, received nothing in the way of bounty, while the soldiers who enlisted near the close of the war were paid large Government and local bounties.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I find from the report that I have here before me that there were over six hundred thousand soldiers in the Army who served as these men did, who supposed that under the contract they had made with their Government they were to receive a bounty, but got none because they happened to be so unfortunate as to be enlisted at a time when bounties were not allowed by law in regiments enlisted for three, six, and nine months' service, or for one year's service, or for two years' service, or who, having enlisted for three years, were discharged before serving two years—some of them for disability, some of them for wounds received while in the service of their country—because under the law it was necessary that they should serve their full term. Now, is there any good reason, Mr. Chairman, why the Government should not equalize the pay of all these soldiers? Is there any good reason why a man who served twenty-four months shall receive $200 bounty and a man who served twenty-three months shall receive none? Is there any justice in it? Is there any equity in it? We can afford to do justice to the soldiers. They served faithfully, they served well, they served under a contract with the Government by which they had the right to expect a bounty, and it is a debt we owe them, which we ought to pay.

Under the bill that I have introduced we equalize the bounties of the soldiers by giving to each one eight and one-third dollars per month for the time he actually served. There can be no injustice in that. Each soldier will then have been served alike, and each one will receive that which is justly due him.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. What will it cost?

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman asks me what the cost will be. Although I was about to pursue another line of argument I will reply to his question. On the 9th of this month I addressed a letter to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, asking for an estimate of the probable expenditure under my bill, a copy of which I inclosed to him. In reply I received the following letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 9, 1880.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 3d instant to the Second Auditor of the Treasury, in which you ask for an estimate of the probable amount that the Government will be required to pay under the provisions of a bill to provide for the payment of additional bounty (H. R. No. 2087, Forty-sixth Congress, first session) in the event of its becoming a law, I have the honor to state that it is impracticable to determine how many persons would become entitled to additional bounty under the provisions of any general law, or to form an approximate estimate as to how many of those entitled to it would prefer their claims, hence any estimate on the subject can be regarded as little better than hypothetical. A careful examination, however, of the whole question of equalization of bounties was made in 1874 by the Second Auditor and Second Comptroller, the result of which was embodied in a report to the Secretary of the Treasury, of which a copy is inclosed. It will be seen that the Comptroller was of opinion that to satisfy claims arising under the provisions of a bill introduced at that time (H. R. No. 1910, Forty-first Congress, second session) would require an expenditure of over a hundred million dollars, and would necessitate the investigation and settlement of about fifteen hundred thousand claims, requiring the labor of two hundred and fifty additional clerks in the office of the Second Auditor, and a corresponding increase in his office for a period of four years, to prepare for adjudication and payment of the cases arising under that law.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

Hon. E. B. FINLEY,
House of Representatives.

With that letter was transmitted an estimate made under a bill somewhat similar to mine, not exactly the same, introduced into the House, I think, by Mr. Gunckel, of Ohio. The estimate was made February 15, 1874, at which time the bill of Mr. Gunckel was being discussed in the Senate. According to that estimate it would take something over $100,000,000 to carry out the provisions of the bill.

In looking over that estimate I am satisfied that it will not cost $100,000,000, nor the half of it; nor do I believe it will cost more than $20,000,000, and I will state my reasons for that belief. The estimate transmitted to me by the Secretary of the Treasury was made on the basis of the entire enlistments during the war, amounting to 2,574,608 men. Now, it seems to me that that is not a proper mode of arriving at the cost of equalizing bounties. More than one-third of that number enlisted for a second time, and therefore are counted twice.

Under the first call of the President, for three-months men, nearly one hundred thousand responded, and if they afterward re-enlisted they are counted twice. Under the second call, for six-months men, there were enlisted three thousand who if they re-enlisted are counted the second time. Under the third call, of nine-months men, there were 87,588, who are counted the second time if they re-enlisted, which many of them no doubt did. Under the call of July 22, 1861, for twelve-months men, there were nine thousand and fifty-six who are counted twice on the same principle—that is to say, a great number of these men re-enlisted, and in making this estimate the three, six, nine, and twelve months men are counted twice.

When that bill was under discussion in the Senate very close estimates were made by distinguished members of that body; and also when it was under discussion in the House estimates were made by members who arrived at different conclusions from those arrived at by the officers of the Government.

For instance, Mr. Gunckel, the author of the bill, made a very careful estimate, and announced that it would require $29,728,000 to carry out the provisions of the bill. General Schenck at the same time estimated that it would require $30,000,000; Mr. Krebs estimated it at $20,000,000, and General LOGAN made an estimate of $20,712,552.42. It will be observed that General LOGAN figured it down very closely.

It will not do to take the entire enlistment of the war as a basis on which to calculate; besides all the re-enlistments which should not be counted there should be deducted deserters, bounty-jumpers, soldiers dishonorably discharged, minors discharged, and substitutes, who are not entitled to a bounty. Then a considerable percentage is allowable for soldiers who died in the service and since, leaving no surviving relative entitled to bounty under this or other acts of Congress. A large percentage is allowable for soldiers or their heirs who, from inattention or other causes, would never apply for balance of bounty; with a great number the balance due would be so small that it would not be called for. Again, the clause in my bill providing that local bounties shall be deducted will, in my opinion, make a difference of perhaps several million dollars. This local-bounty clause was not in the bill of 1875, and if General Schenck, General LOGAN, Mr. Gunckel, and the other gentlemen I have named were justified in making the estimates they then made, I think I am reasonably within bounds in estimating the cost at $20,000,000. But, Mr. Chairman, suppose it does cost the full amount estimated by the Treasury Department; if we owe it, if it is a just debt, why should we not pay it? The question of cost should not be considered if the obligation to pay is conceded. Does any gentleman doubt our obligation in that regard?

The Government set out to reward her soldiers for their services rendered during the war, on the principle of paying a bounty of $100 for each year of service. For want of proper legislation on the subject, about one-fourth of all the soldiers who enlisted received no part of this bounty. Another class, through technicalities in the construction of the law, got a mere moiety of their just bounty, while the others were paid in full. Now, is it not right and proper that a law should be enacted by which all soldiers will be treated alike? I believe the obligation on the part of the Government to equalize and pay to the soldier the bounty due him is just as binding as any other war debt. In fact, it is a part of the war debt of the Government as much as the 5-20 or 10-40 bonds were. Our obligations to the soldier who gave his personal services to the Government are surely as great as to the capitalist who assisted with his money. The latter class has, to put it mildly, been royally paid for the use of his capital. Every dollar he gave to the Government has returned to him with an increase in interest and the enhanced value of his investment. Not so the soldier! He received but a pittance for the services he rendered his country and the hardships endured. Thousands who served their country faithfully for the small sum of $13 per month have been doomed to poverty on account of that service. Thousands drag out a miserable existence on account of wounds received or disease contracted in the service, who—owing to inability to make the necessary proof under the technical rules adopted by the Departments—do not draw a pension. While we are being magnanimous in our generosity to the bondholder, let us at least be just to the soldier.

We appropriate millions annually for improvement of rivers and harbors, millions in the construction of Government buildings, millions in the payment of interest on Government bonds, millions in the payment of a multitude of salaried officers, many of whom are as unnecessary as the fifth-wheel of a wagon. We make these appropriations annually without demur or protest, but when a proposition is made to appropriate a few millions out of the Treasury for the payment of bounties to soldiers, a debt that should have been paid long ago, gentlemen shrug their shoulders and get alarmed for fear it will cost too much. The obligation to equalize the bounty of soldiers rests upon the Government in the nature of a debt. We owe it. Let us pay it whether it costs little or much. For the past fifteen years soldiers have continued to petition Congress for legislation of this kind. At each session the petition-box is filled, yet thus far their prayers have been in vain. On three different occasions bills similar to this passed the House, but failed to pass the Senate. At one session both Houses agreed to a bill like this, but it failed to become a law because President Grant neglected and refused to approve it. It remains to this Congress to render to these soldiers the justice which has so long been denied them. Will we do it?

Mr. LAPHAM addressed the committee. [His remarks will be found in the Appendix.]

NATIONAL FINANCES.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, the question pertaining to our national finances is a question which has occupied more of the thought of our people during the past few years than any other one question. It has occupied column after column in our daily and weekly papers, has filled page after page in our magazines, has crowded itself into our pulpits and institutions of learning, has been extensively discussed in the legislative halls of both State and nation, and has formed the chief topic of conversation among the people all over the country. As must always be expected in discussing a question so profound and intricate as this, many theories have been put forth of the most vague and unsound nature, and much has been said which was utterly void of all reason or sense. Every individual who had an idea on this subject which he thought important has stepped to the front and uttered it, hoping that it would prove to be just what was needed to settle all our financial difficulties and start our nation forward upon a career of unheard-of prosperity. In this profusion of ideas, while there has been much of nonsense and mere theory, there has also been much of good, sound, practical sense. Discussion on this question, as it does on all questions, has accomplished much good. It has exploded many false theories, shown the rottenness of many seemingly sound ideas, and brought to light much that is reliable and true. Such a deep interest in any question is always a good sign. It shows that the people are in earnest, and gives us a sufficient guarantee that, although we may for a time be surrounded with difficulties, yet in the end these difficulties will be removed, and we shall discover the solid rock upon which we can build with safety. When a people grapple with any great question, as our people have grappled with this, there is good reason for encouragement, for in the end light is sure to come, and the safest and best way will be discovered.

Mr. Chairman, what I have to say on this occasion I shall say not because I have any pet theory in regard to our finances which I wish to advocate, or because I desire any change in our financial affairs, but because I want the American Congress to take its hands off from the financial question, cease all agitation in regard to it, and let it remain undisturbed for one session at least. After years of discussion and change in legislation we have secured a financial system with which the people are abundantly satisfied. Bringing experience to our aid, we have taken the system which we established during the war, and have gradually changed, amended, and completed it until at last we have a system which, if not absolutely perfect, is sufficiently so for all practical purposes. Whatever unprincipled politicians, demagogues, and would-be financiers may think of this system, one thing is certain, the people have sufficient confidence in it to ask us, their representatives, to let it alone for the present, just as it now is, and to cease at once all our attempts to disturb or change it. The people understand what is for their interest much better than we do. They have tried this financial system, and by their own experience have demonstrated that it is most admirably adapted to their wants both as individuals and as a nation. In all their financial transactions, in meeting the demands of trade and inspiring confidence in every department of business and commercial life, they find it abundantly satisfactory. Hence they do not want it disturbed. They want no more congressional agitation and tinkering at present in regard to it. They have suffered sufficiently from this sort of thing during the past few years to lead them to be exceedingly apprehensive whenever any new financial legislation is proposed in Congress. They know that most of the legislation on this subject for the past decade has been productive of evil and only evil, and they now demand that the financial question be let alone as the only sure way to avoid additional evils. They realize, what Congress ought to realize, that it is the worst thing imaginable for the country to keep up this constant agitation of the financial question on this floor. What the good of the people demands, not only to-day, but for all time, is something fixed, reliable, and permanent in financial matters. There is nothing so detrimental to both our manufacturing, commercial, business, laboring, and all other interests as frequent changes in financial legislation. The great cause of our serious financial troubles during the past few years was the constant tinkering with the currency. If Congress had let the financial question entirely alone, after it had passed the act for strengthening the public credit in 1869, except to provide for free banking and for funding our bonded debt into bonds bearing a lower rate of interest, we should have been spared much of the hardship and suffering we have experienced since then. The fact is, we had no genuine prosperity in the country while the financial question was the all-absorbing question in politics and in Congress, and we can never expect to have any prosperity which is lasting until that question is settled and placed where politics and Congress cannot disturb it. To have prosperity, we must have confidence among the people and make capital feel secure. It is idle to talk of lasting prosperity without these, and these will never be brought about so long as Congress keeps agitating the financial question. Capital is naturally timid; it does not like to take risks. When it reaches out to help forward any enterprise, it must have some guarantee that it will be safe to make the venture. No man of sense or business ability will put his money into any kind of business so long as he has reason to fear that the financial system of the country may be changed every time Congress meets. Capital would take fright and the good times that have come to us would be speedily driven away if this Congress should enact into law one-tenth part of the many crazy financial schemes that gentlemen on this floor have proposed. What the people want, and what every business interest in the country demands, is a financial system that cannot be revolutionized every year, and that is not liable to change with every change of the party in power. Stability and permanency in financial matters are necessary to prosperity, and it rests with Congress to determine whether or not we shall have them.

But, Mr. Chairman, while most of us feel that stability and permanency in our financial system are desirable, there are certain men, both in and out of Congress, who are ever clamoring for change. These men are not at all satisfied with the present order of things. They imagine that all the financial wisdom of the country is centered in their brains, and so fully persuaded are they that they have mastered the financial problem and have discovered all the newest and best ideas in regard to it that they persist in thrusting their peculiar views upon Congress and the public, at all times and under all circumstances, regardless of consequences.

One man wants a single gold standard, and demands not only that the Government stop the coinage of silver but retire the silver coin already issued. Another says let us continue the double standard and provide at once for the free coinage of silver. Another asks us to wipe out the greenback currency and give to the national banks alone the right to furnish all the paper money of the country. Another is willing to let the greenbacks remain in circulation, but wants them stripped of their legal-tender quality. Another demands that the national banks, national-bank notes and all, be blotted out, and that greenbacks be the only paper money of the country. And so it goes. Every man who has an idea on the subject of finance makes it a sort of hobby, and demands that Congress embody it into some measure and enact it into law. But the people want no such nonsense in regard to financial matters. They demand that these financial agitators be put down, and that Congress turn a deaf ear to all their unwise schemes. Whatever these would-be financiers may think of the matter or desire, the people of the country have faith in our financial system as it is. When we reached specie resumption on the 1st of January, 1879, we all thought that agitation of the financial question was at an end. Thinking thus, confidence was everywhere restored. Men of all classes and in all departments of business felt that at last we had gotten down to the solid rock whereon we could stand firmly and build with safety. With this feeling of confidence capital at once pushed out and engaged in new enterprises, business revived, our manufacturing establishments started up, labor was given employment, and good times once again came back to us. All this has continued, until to-day we behold prosperity in every portion of our land. Restored confidence brought good times, and why should we now go to work and destroy this confidence and drive good times from us by useless, unwise, and untimely agitation of and interference with the financial question?

Having said this much, Mr. Chairman, in regard to the folly of interfering in any way with our financial matters, I wish now to say a few words in regard to some of the financial theories which have been pressed upon our attention by gentlemen upon this floor.

The gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHITTENDEN,] in a speech which he delivered in this House on the 20th of January last, took occasion to denounce our greenback currency and to demand that Congress make provision at once for its retirement and destruction. The following sentence will show how the gentleman regards this currency:

> Mr. Speaker, I respectfully but earnestly ask the attention of the House for fifteen or twenty minutes, while I try to show that our legal-tender currency in times of peace is a popular snare, a political device, in a bad sense, of vast scope, tending to corrupt and destroy individual honesty and public integrity, which are the mainspring of good government.

The gentleman then goes on to argue that it is a "crime against the Constitution and common sense" to keep the greenbacks in circulation as we have been doing since the close of the war. But, sir, how is it a "crime against the Constitution?" Who is to decide whether it be a "crime against the Constitution" or not? Is it the gentleman from New York or is it a power higher and more potent than he? I have great respect for that gentleman, but I beg leave to say to him that this question is not to be decided by any one individual, but by the people as represented either in Congress or the Supreme Court. The people govern this nation. They make laws through their chosen representatives and enforce them through the President whom their votes put in office; consequently they are sovereign. What they under the Constitution decree shall be, is law; and what they decree shall not be, is not law. Now, sir, during the war the people decreed that it was absolutely necessary, in order to save the life of the nation, that they should issue legal-tender non-interest-bearing notes. They said that this was the only way out of the unheard-of difficulties which then hedged us in. They claimed that such an act would be constitutional on the ground of absolute necessity in time of war.

The first act providing for the issue of such notes was signed by President Lincoln on the 25th day of February, 1862, and other acts followed, as occasion required, until over $400,000,000 of these notes were issued. Now, sir, not only did Congress regard the act authorizing the issue of these notes as constitutional, but the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that it was constitutional, both Congress and the court basing its constitutionality upon the same ground, namely, absolute necessity in time of war. In view of these facts of history, I ask what power was it that was called upon to decide when the necessity existed which made the issuing of these notes constitutional? I answer that it was the law-making power. It was the people, through their representatives in Congress; and they alone. If, then, Congress had the exclusive right to decide when the necessity for issuing these notes arose, has it not the right to decide how long that necessity exists and when it ceases to exist? There is certainly no other power that has this right, and if Congress decides that the good of the people demands that these notes be continued in circulation, why should any individual object to its being done? I am aware that the Supreme Court has the power to decide that the legal-tender notes are an unconstitutional currency in time of peace, and when the time comes, such may be its decision. But until that court does decide against these notes, why should we talk about retiring them?

But the gentleman from New York goes on to denounce the Government for not calling in the legal-tender notes, paying them off, and destroying them. He says we can easily pay off these notes with our surplus coin. But, suppose that we can do this, would such a policy be wise? I say not. These notes are out. They are redeemable in coin upon presentation in sums of $50 at the sub-treasury in New York City, and thus have a fixed and constant value. The people are satisfied with them, and would it be wise under such circumstances to retire them? He says these notes represent a debt that we owe. I admit it, but if the holders of these notes do not want them paid why should any one else worry himself about it? Our present greenback currency represents about $346,000,000 of debt on which we pay no interest. Now, sir, if we have a surplus of coin in the Treasury would it not be the part of wisdom to take it and buy up our outstanding bonds which bear interest, instead of using it to buy up greenbacks which bear no interest? I ask the gentleman if the former plan would not be more peculiarly in the interest of the tax-payers of the country and show much better business sense than the latter? The gentleman is a shrewd business man. If he had two notes of $1,000 each outstanding, payable on demand, the one bearing interest and the other not, and if the parties holding these notes were not only willing to let them run but were anxious that they should run, which of them would he take up, provided he was prepared to take up but one of them? Why, sir, both he and every other business man, if he had any common sense whatever, would take up the note bearing interest. And shall not the people act with like good sense? We are not able at present to pay our entire indebtedness. Each year, however, we can pay a small portion of it, and I say that it is not only good business sense but is in the highest and best interest of the people that that small portion should consist of the interest-bearing debt of the nation in preference to that which bears no interest.

But, sir, the gentleman from New York appears in a new rôle in this speech to which I have referred. Hitherto it has been thought on this floor that he spoke only for the gold men of the East. Now, however, he comes forward and claims to speak for the farmers of the West. His words on this point are as follows:

> It is no better than a proposition to inflate and corrupt the currency to the prejudice of the cotton-growers, cattle-growers, and corn-producers of the South and West. The jeers of my friends at banks and bondholders do not touch me! I neither own national-bank stock nor Government bonds. I have no business now but farming. I speak as a producer of wheat and corn in Illinois and Iowa, and I speak earnestly, because I know that unless the laws of gravitation are to be abolished, that presently, or whenever the currents of foreign exchange are reversed, I in common with all farmers will have no coin but the short-weight silver dollars which have already become a great inconvenience to Congressmen. The gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Iowa may, with the other gentleman from Iowa and his cohorts, compel me and all western farmers to receive the short-weight dollar for our products, but they cannot compel the New York merchants who buy and ship our products to take their pay in anything but a full-weight gold dollar. I believe the farmer entitled to the same good money that the New York merchant gets. I tell farmers everywhere that the cry "let well enough alone" means exactly the opposite. It means gold for New York and silver or irredeemable paper for the South and West.

Now, sir, I wish to say to the gentleman from New York that he is wholly ignorant of the wants and wishes of the farmers of the West if he is to be judged by the language employed in the speech from which I have quoted. I can tell him that if he were to go among the farmers of the West and talk to them as he talks to us in this speech they would tell him that he did not know what he was talking about. These men are satisfied with both the silver dollar and the greenback note which the gentleman sneers at so contemptuously. They have never had a currency that suited them so well as the greenback currency, and if they are being cheated in receiving either that currency or the silver dollar in exchange for the products of their farms they have not yet discovered it, although, I imagine, if such were the case, they would discover it about as quickly as the gentleman from New York.

The gentleman endeavors to make us believe that the farmers of the West do not have "the same good money that the New York merchants get." But, sir, I cannot think that he believes any such stuff as this. He knows as well as any other man that the western farmer gets just as good money as the New York merchant or anybody else. Is he not aware that our legal-tender notes are redeemable in coin and that all of our money stands upon the same equal footing any and everywhere throughout the country? Our greenback currency has been in circulation for eighteen years, and during all that time it has been the medium of exchange in almost all of the financial transactions of our people. Prices everywhere have become adjusted to it, and when the farmer of the West sells a horse, a cow, or a load of corn, and takes his pay in greenbacks, he receives just as much in purchasing power as if he had been paid in gold. The gentleman knows this as well as I do, and I am greatly surprised that he should attempt to create an impression directly the reverse of this by the speech from which I have quoted.

But the gentleman takes occasion to criticise quite severely the financial policy advocated by several gentlemen upon this floor, of letting well-enough alone. But I wish to tell him that this is not the policy of any one man or any particular set of men. It is the policy advocated by the people, who are tired of constant tinkering with financial matters. It is the people who demand that the financial question be let alone, and that demand it is the duty of the Representatives upon this floor to heed. The people are nearer right in regard to this matter than the gentleman from New York. On all such questions as this financial question there are apt to be extremists. On this question there are the extreme gold men who would have nothing but gold as a legal tender, and there are the extreme paper-money men who would have no money but paper in the form of greenbacks or Treasury notes. Now, there is a healthy medium between these two extremes, and that medium the people have discovered and favor. They say: "Let us have not gold alone, but gold and silver both; and not greenbacks alone, but greenbacks and national-bank notes." Having tried all these various kinds of money they say to both the extreme gold men and the extreme paper-money men, "We are content with our money as it is now, and we ask you to let it alone for the present at least."

But, Mr. Chairman, another gentleman from New York [Mr. LOUNSBERY] comes forward with a proposition quite as startling and dangerous as that of his colleague to which I have just referred. That gentleman proposes not to take the life of the greenbacks, but to deprive them of their legal-tender quality—not to retire them, but to degrade them by stripping them of their crowning excellence. Now, sir, for one I regard this proposition as far more unwise and dangerous than the proposition to retire the greenbacks altogether. Indeed, there is some little show of sense in the latter proposition, but the former is utterly devoid of every semblance or shadow of sense. In fact, it is not even good common nonsense, and why any man who claims to know anything about the financial question, or about the needs and wants of our people in their business and commercial relations, should advocate such a proposition as this, is something that I cannot understand. Why, sir, we labored for years to make the greenback a safe and reliable medium of exchange. We sought in every possible manner to dignify it, and to clothe it with such attributes as would give it a value equal to gold. We passed the resumption act, and thus made it redeemable in coin of either gold or silver. As a result of all this we have seen the greenback, during the past fifteen months, going up and down through every portion of the land doing its work as well as gold would do it, and in every respect maintaining a position of perfect equality with that coin. To-day it is practically a legal tender for all debts, both public and private, the Government receiving it for customs duties and paying it out for both the interest and principal of our bonded debt. And now, sir, after all the long and severe struggle we have had to bring the greenback up to an equality with gold, it is now proposed to turn around and strike it down again. For one I am decidedly opposed to any such proceeding. My idea is not only to keep the greenback in circulation, but to make it as good as we possibly can make it and then hold it there. There is nothing in the future more certain than this, that the business of this country which is transacted with money at all will be almost wholly transacted with some kind of paper money. The people have tried the greenback, and have found it to be just what they want. It is much more convenient than coin, and so long as it is a legal tender and redeemable in coin it is just as safe and reliable. Having such a paper currency as this, why should we seek to degrade it by striking from it its legal-tender quality? Since we have placed it upon the same platform where it stands side by side with gold, and equal to it in every important respect, why not keep it there?

But the gentleman says it would be in the interest of labor, business, manufacturing, commerce, and every other interest of the country to take from the greenback its legal-tender quality. How, I would like to know, will such an act produce such a result? The gentleman does not propose to retire this currency. He expects that it will continue in circulation and that the people all over the country will use it largely in their financial transactions. This being so, how can it be in the interest of any kind of business to degrade it? Will it give capital any more confidence and lead it to invest in new and more extensive enterprises? Will it give any fresh impetus to business or encouragement to manufacturing? Will it make the various industries of the country more secure, or better in any particular the condition of the laboring man? If it will, then I fail to see how. On the contrary, I believe that all of these various interests will be better subserved by preserving the legal-tender quality of the greenback as it now is. As I said before, this currency, together with the national-bank notes, will be largely used among our people, for some years at least, in all their financial transactions. People everywhere will take it for what is due them and pay it out for what they owe. It will be the practical measure of value of everything that is bought or sold in all parts of the country. It will enter into the every-day business life of our citizens everywhere, and will prove to them either a blessing or a curse according as it has a constant or a fluctuating value. This being so, our aim should be to make this currency as nearly perfect as possible. It will not do to take from it its legal-tender quality or to degrade it in any other way. In saying this I do not speak for myself merely, but for the people of the whole country, who, with almost a unanimous voice, demand that Congress let the greenback alone as it now is, with all its legal-tender qualities undisturbed.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to notice another financial proposition, advanced by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. TOWNSHEND.] In a speech which he delivered in this House on the 21st of last January that gentleman takes strong and decided ground in favor of wiping out the national-banking system of the country and doing away with the national-bank circulation. This proposition he advocates not merely because he as an individual favors it, but because opposition to national banks has always been a cardinal principle of his party. Having proclaimed his hostility to the national banks, he proceeds to "briefly set forth the reasons of his opposition to any permanent national-banking system in this country." He claims to know all about the national-banking system, and hence feels competent to point out all its defects in a masterly manner, for he says:

> I was for several years engaged in national banking, and I have had opportunity to understand the internal machinery of the system and its effect upon the interests of the people.

This shows, sir, that the gentleman has had great opportunities and ought to have been greatly profited by them. Yet I fear that these opportunities have all been lost upon him, and that he is but little wiser now than he was before these opportunities came to him. Indeed, I am surprised that a gentleman who has had such great experience as a practical banker should be able to give no stronger reasons than he gives in support of the proposition which he advocates. I am surprised that he displays such a very limited knowledge of our national-banking system after having so long and carefully studied its workings and its effect upon the interests of the people. Indeed, sir, judging from his speech, one would naturally conclude that he had never been inside of a national bank or ever taken a look at its "internal machinery." Like all other opponents of the national-banking system, he is wonderfully free with statements and assertions which are remarkable only for their lack of correctness. The great point which he makes against the national banks, and which leads him to seek their overthrow, is the immense sum which they cost the people. He claims that by wiping out the national banks we could "save the people of this country over $14,000,000 that come every year out of the pockets of the tax-payers." In support of this assertion he speaks as follows:

> I have already said that the national-bank circulation costs the people of this country over $14,000,000 per year, and I challenge contradiction of that assertion. * * * The amount of the bonds held at that time (November 1, 1879) by the Treasury for bank circulation was $363,802,400. The Treasury Department pays to the national banks every year on these bonds $17,215,640 for interest. * * * Deduct from the $17,215,640 which the national banks receive every year from the tax-payers the $3,198,833 which they pay into the Treasury on their circulation, and that will leave $14,019,000, which goes into the pockets of national-bank stockholders as part of the profit they receive on their circulation.

Let us now look at these statements and see if they are in accordance with the facts. The gentleman is advocating the destruction of the national-bank system on the ground of its immense cost to the people, and places that cost at over $14,000,000 per year. Now, I make the assertion that this system not only does not cost the people $14,000,000 per year, but does not cost them a single penny. But this point I will discuss further on. What I wish to do here is to follow out the gentleman's method of figuring and see if he is correct in his conclusions. For the better accomplishment of my object I will admit for the time being that the national-banking system is a matter of expense to the people, but even with this admission, I propose to show, by comparing what the people pay to the banks with what the banks pay to the people, that the gentleman does not get within gunshot of the actual facts. The gentleman's speech, whether he intended it or not, has a tendency to deceive. He says truly that the people pay to the banks as interest on their bonds, each year, the sum of $17,215,640, but when he comes to state what the banks pay the people, he puts the sum at only $3,198,833. But, sir, this sum is but a very small portion of the amount which the banks pay the people. The sum which he gives is merely what they pay as a tax of 1 per cent. on their circulation. But in addition to that they pay a national tax of one-half of 1 per cent. upon the average amount of their deposits, and a like tax upon their capital in excess of the amount invested in United States bonds. During the year ending November 1, 1879, according to the Comptroller of the Currency, these taxes were as follows: On circulation, $3,009,647; on deposits, $3,309,668; and on surplus capital, $401,920—making a grand total of $6,721,236. Besides these national taxes, these banks pay State, county, and municipal taxes, which for the last seven years have largely exceeded the national taxes, and which for the year 1878 amounted to $8,056,533. I give the amount for 1878 because I have not been able to get the amount for 1879. Below I give a table, showing the amount of these taxes, both national and State, for each year since 1865:

I have already stated, Mr. Chairman, that the amount of interest paid by the Government (or the people) to the national banks for the past year was $17,215,640. Now, if we subtract from this amount the amount of taxes, national and State, which the banks pay the people, taking the year 1878, we have left the sum of $2,431,875. That is, the national banks only cost the people $2,431,875 per year, instead of $14,000,000, as the gentleman from Illinois would have us believe, even if we figure according to the gentleman's own method, by striking a balance between what the banks receive from the people and what they pay to the people. Now, sir, does it not seem a little strange that a person who "was for several years engaged in national banking," and had such a fine "opportunity to understand the internal machinery of the system," should figure so wildly as this? For some purpose, I cannot conceive what, unless it be to make a good showing for his side of the question, he holds out the idea that the national-banking system costs the people six times as much per year as it actually does cost them, thus endeavoring to bring the system into disrepute by misleading the people in regard to it.

Again, the gentleman says:

> The legislation needed by the people to-day is that which will lighten the burden of taxation, which has for so long been crushing the energies and hopes of the tax-payers.

I most heartily agree with the sentiment here expressed, and I will labor as earnestly and faithfully as the gentleman himself to secure such legislation. But, sir, I wish to say to him that he is not going to lighten the burdens of the people by destroying the national-banking system. I claim that we add to these burdens whenever we destroy a national bank, and lighten them whenever we organize a national bank. This may seem like a very strange statement to my colleague and others on this floor who may sympathize with him in his views of our national-banking system; but I will endeavor to make my assertion so plain that a wayfaring man, though a fool, need not fail to comprehend it. Suppose each of five men in any town owns $20,000 in 4 per cent. Government bonds. Now, just so long as these men keep these bonds locked up in their own private coffers they draw interest on them regularly every three months, but pay nothing in return; that is, they receive from the people each year as interest on their bonds the sum of $4,000, but do not pay to the people a single penny in the shape of taxes. Now, it is to the interest of the people, if they can, to get something out of these men in return for the $4,000 paid them each year. How can this be done? If these bonds which they hold can be brought, in some way or other, into the channel of taxation, the object is secured. Suppose, then, that these five men are induced to go to work and organize a national bank. They put their capital stock at $100,000, take their bonds and send them to Washington, where they are deposited with the United States Treasurer, receive $90,000 in national-bank notes, and then launch out in the national-banking business. As soon as this is done the whole aspect of the case changes. The people now begin to get something in return for the $4,000 which they pay out each year. The bonds, which were not taxable before, are now brought within the channel of taxation, where, like all other kinds of property, they pay their due proportion of taxes. Let us see what these taxes amount to each year.

In the first place, the stockholders of this new bank pay to the people a tax of 1 per cent. on their circulation, ¼ of 1 per cent. on the average amount of their deposits, and a like amount upon their capital in excess of the amount invested in United States bonds. Besides these taxes their capital stock, which is based upon their bonds in the hands of the United States Treasurer, is taxed for all State, county, and municipal purposes, just the same as any other kind of property. Now, all these various kinds of taxes, both State and national, taking all the national banks of the country together, show an average during the past ten years of over 3½ per cent. on their capital stock. Now, 3½ per cent. on the capital stock of this new bank amounts to $3,500. That is, this new bank pays taxes each year in various forms to the amount of $3,500. From this we see that so long as these bonds were locked up in the coffers of their owners their owners drew from the people each year $4,000 and did not pay back to the people a single penny. Now, however, when these bonds are made the basis of a national-bank organization, their owners draw from the people their $4,000 as before, but at the same time they turn around and pay back to the people $3,500 in the shape of taxes. That is, by organizing this national bank the taxes of the people are lessened $3,500, and we actually reduce the interest on this one hundred thousand dollars' worth of bonds from 4 to ¼ of 1 per cent.

In view of these facts I ask the gentleman from Illinois or any other gentleman on this floor if there is not a saving to the people every time a national bank is organized? By making them the basis of national-bank organizations, do we not bring our bonds, which are otherwise not taxable, into the channel of taxation, where they are virtually taxed just the same as any other kind of property is taxed? The gentleman objects to the national banks because it costs the people so much to sustain them. He says their circulation alone costs over $14,000,000, and on account of this heavy cost he would wipe out the whole system. But the gentleman puts the case in the wrong way. The national banks do not cost the people a single penny, as I have said before. On the contrary, they are a saving to the people. During the year 1878 they saved the people $14,783,765, which the people would have been obliged to pay in taxes had not the banks been in existence. From the year 1866 to 1878, inclusive, as will be seen in the table already given, the national banks have paid to the people in taxes, State and national, the immense sum of $218,223,700, which has lessened the taxation of the people by that amount. Does any one doubt or deny this? Suppose that there never had been a national bank organized, what would have been the result? The bonds which are to-day the basis of the two thousand and fifty national-bank organizations of the country would have been in the hands of the individual owners, where they would have drawn interest just as they do now, but would not have paid a penny of tax. Now, the whole amount paid to the banks as interest on their bonds deposited with the United States Treasurer to secure circulation since the national-banking system went into operation, according to a statement of the Comptroller of the Currency, is as follows:

Year.	Interest.	Year.	Interest.
1864	$4,917,687 00	1873	$21,220,954 50
1865	16,573,197 00	1874	20,730,904 00
1866	19,948,062 00	1875	19,662,502 72
1867	19,545,789 00	1876	17,873,054 00
1868	19,626,495 50	1877	17,588,000 50
1869	19,625,511 50	1878	17,696,093 25
1870	19,610,605 50	1879	17,225,755 75
1871	20,165,750 50
1872	20,981,476 00	Total	292,991,838 72

Now, sir, in order to make more clear what I desire to say, I will only consider the amount of interest paid to the banks from 1866 to 1878, inclusive, as I did in estimating the amount of taxes paid by the banks. Taking from the $292,991,838.72 above the amount paid for 1864, 1865, and 1879, and we have left as the amount paid from 1866 to 1878 the sum of $254,275,199. That is, if there had been no national banks the people would have been obliged to pay this sum while receiving nothing in return. As it is, however, with these bonds as the basis of national-bank organizations, while the people have paid as interest the sum of $254,275,199, the banks paid back to the people in taxes the sum of $218,223,700. These figures show that, instead of the national banks costing the people $14,000,000 per year, they not only have not cost them a penny, but they have paid into the hands of the people in taxes the sum of $218,223,700, which the people would have been obliged to pay themselves if there had been no national banks. There has been much said during the past few years about taxing Government bonds. Here, then, is the way to do it: Make them the basis of national-bank organizations and they are taxed at once, and that, too, at a rate higher than any other class of property is taxed.

But, Mr. Speaker, I wish to go a step further in this matter. The interest on our bonded debt at present is $83,773,778 per year. Now, suppose we could make all the bonds representing this debt the basis of national-bank organizations, what would be the result? The total bonded debt amounts to about $1,782,967,650. This sum if the bonds representing it were made the basis of national-bank organizations would be the amount of their capital stock. Now, I have already shown that the national banks pay a tax of 3½ per cent. on their capital stock. Three and one-half per cent. of $1,782,967,650 amounts to $62,403,867. That is, while these national banks would draw from the people the present interest on the bonds, which amounts to $83,773,778, they would pay back to the people in taxes $62,403,867. The interest on our bonded debt would thus be reduced from $83,773,778 to a little over $21,000,000.

Now, I ask if there would be no saving to the people in all this? Is it not plain that if we could make all of our bonds the basis of national-bank organizations these organizations would help the people greatly in bearing "the burden of taxation, which," my colleague says, "has for so long been crushing the energies and hopes of the tax-payers?" Indeed, if what I have said is true, and I cannot see how it can be otherwise, nothing can be more evident than this: that so long as we have a bond outstanding, it is to the interest of the people, the tax-payers, to make that bond the basis of a national-bank organization. In this way we lessen the interest on the bond by the amount of taxes which the bank pays. If the bond bears 6 per cent. we reduce it to 2½; if it bears 5 per cent. we reduce it to 1½, while if it bears 4 per cent. we reduce it to ¼ of 1 per cent. In view of these facts, I say that not only does the national-banking system not cost the people anything, but by paying such a large amount of taxes it helps the people wonderfully in bearing the burden of taxation which rests so heavily upon them.

But there is one more thing which I wish to say on this subject. We must have some kind of banks in this country for the accommodation of the people. The national banks are by far the best banks we have ever had, and so long as we can make them profitable to the people in helping them to bear their burden of taxation I am in favor of maintaining them. There is certainly no wisdom in striking them down because some demagogue or ignoramus steps forward and denounces them. I stand by our present national-banking system, not because I have any particular interest in it more than any other citizen has, but because I believe it to be in the interest of the tax-payers of the country to maintain it.

But while I say this, I wish to say further that I shall be perfectly willing to give up this system just so soon as we can get anything better and more fully in the interest of the people. In saying this, I believe I utter the sentiment of every true republican in the land. When the republicans established the national-banking system, we thought it a vast improvement upon the old democratic system of State banks. Subsequent experience has convinced every intelligent man that we were correct. We found something that was an improvement upon what we then had, and we adopted it. In doing this, our party gave evidence of its progressive spirit. In adopting the national-banking system, as in everything else, it showed a willingness to take the best thing that was offered. It has always been ready to discard the old when it could get anything better in its stead, and it will favor doing away with national banks just so soon as something safer and more reliable presents itself. The trouble thus far has been that nothing better has been suggested. The democracy, for the past dozen years, have been engaged in making a bitter and uncompromising war upon the national banks. They have used their best endeavors to bring them into disrepute among the people. They have advocated their overthrow both in their newspapers, on the stump, and in the halls of legislation. But they have not succeeded in breaking them down, simply because they have offered nothing better in their stead, and they never will succeed in breaking them down until they do offer us something better. If, while they advocate striking down the national-banking system, they will present us with an improved system, we republicans will be as ready as they can be to have it adopted. But until they do this or until some one else does it, we shall do our best to maintain the system we now have.

But there is one more proposition, Mr. Chairman, to which I desire to call attention, and that is the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue $500,000,000 of United States notes in addition to those already in circulation. This proposition I do not intend to discuss, as it is too palpably absurd and nonsensical to need any discussion. I refer to it simply as one of the many measures brought forward in this House whose tendency is to disturb our financial affairs and thus interfere with the business and industrial enterprises in every part of the land. It is a measure that no one expects will ever succeed, as no party in power will ever be found which has so little sense or so little regard for the good of the country as to allow such a measure to become a law.

Having said thus much, Mr. Chairman, I desire in conclusion to repeat what I have already said, that our financial system as it now is is abundantly satisfactory to our people, and both wisdom, statesmanship, and the public good demand that we do not at the present time interfere with it. We have money enough to meet all the demands of trade, and that money is as good, safe, reliable, and constant in its value as money can possibly be made. According to the Comptroller of the Currency, the circulating medium of the country on the 1st of last November was as follows:

Treasury notes outstanding	$346,681,016
National-bank notes outstanding	337,181,418
Gold in the Treasury, less certificates held by the banks	157,960,193
Silver in the Treasury	50,078,620
Coin in the banks, (October 2)	42,173,731
Estimated amount of coin held by the people	231,478,515
Total	1,165,553,493

If we estimate our population at fifty millions, this gives us over $23 to every man, woman, and child in the country, which ought to be amply sufficient for all our needs. With this amount of money all as good as gold, and with all our financial matters in most admirable shape, I for one am opposed to any change during the present session of Congress. I came to Congress last December resolved to do all I could to prevent any disturbance at this session in regard to either our financial matters or our tariff. I looked the ground all over before I left home, and I came to the conclusion that every interest of the people all over the land demanded that both the tariff and the finances be let alone. Since I have been here I have become more fully convinced than ever that this conclusion was correct. Disturbance in these matters at this session means mischief and only mischief. We have a gold and a silver coin, each equal in value with the other and both doing their work equally well, and I say let it alone. We have a greenback currency, redeemable in coin and equal in purchasing power to either gold or silver, and I say let that alone. We have a national-bank currency, redeemable in greenbacks and as good as gold or silver anywhere in the country, and I say let that alone. We have a national-bank system which is a vast improvement upon anything we have ever yet had in that line, which is far better than anything ever yet suggested by any one, and which lightens the heavy burden of taxation resting upon the people by the snug little sum of $14,783,765 per year, and I say let that alone. There will doubtless come a time within the next few years when some change in our financial legislation will be necessary. That time may be at our next session or during the Congress which succeeds this, but it is not now. Let gentlemen on this floor recognize this fact and not attempt any change during the present session.

Mr. BALLOU was recognized by the Chair, and yielded five minutes to Mr. CHITTENDEN.

Mr. HAYES. I believe I have some time remaining yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has until twelve minutes past three o'clock.

Mr. HAYES. I will reserve the remainder of my time until the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. BALLOU] and my colleague [Mr. HAWK] have spoken.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I desire to say a single word to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES] about my character as a farmer. In that he has touched me where I am tender. In my thirteenth year I yoked a pair of steers and plowed an honest acre one morning before breakfast. And among all his constituents he will find few boys weighing as little as I weighed at that time who have better established their character as farmers.

I was perfectly sincere in what I said as to farmers both in Illinois and Iowa in the short speech which I made here the other day. And let me tell the gentleman now, in respect to the currency, that what I said is as true as the law of gravitation. I do not say that I am as a farmer or that any farmer of Illinois or Iowa is suffering at this particular moment on account of the dishonest silver dollar. What I said was that as sure as the laws of gravitation are irreversible just so sure will the tides of foreign exchange turn; and when they turn the Illinois farmer will have nothing left but his paper dollar redeemable in a depreciated, short-weight silver dollar, while the New York merchant who buys that farmer's wheat and sells it abroad will, with equal certainty, receive for it the full-weight gold dollar. That is a truth which I affirm is as irreversible as the law of gravitation.

And my friend from Illinois [Mr. HAYES] who speaks so learnedly of farmers will find that he waked up a man on that subject who possibly understands the plow as well as he does. Just as sure as the earth continues to revolve round the sun, when the tides of exchange turn, his farmer friends will call for "the policy of the gentleman from New York," which alone will give them the same good money which the New York merchant gets for the products of their farms shipped abroad.

Now if my friend from Rhode Island [Mr. BALLOU] will give me another minute I will comment generally upon the speech of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HAYES.] There is, as it strikes me, everything in it which has appeared in this House on this subject of currency. It is a complete exhibition of confusion, errors, and—I will not say demagogism, but I insist that there is no class of currency-tinkers in this House who cannot find in that speech a basis of support for their peculiar views.

The gentleman is eloquent for national banks, and he is equally so for the legal-tenders. Why, sir, the national-bank currency and the legal-tender currency can no more be united together on principle than can the gentleman drive an elephant and a mule securely together in his family carriage on Pennsylvania avenue; not a bit more. He must have all mule or all elephant. [Laughter.]

The gentleman who occupies this chair [pointing to the seat of Mr. WEAVER] can make his argument for the issue of $500,000,000 of legal-tenders absolutely unanswerable upon the grounds which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES] has set forth in his speech.

I wish to say with all seriousness that if the legal-tender note in time of peace is constitutional, there is, in my judgment, no other currency for this country. I have thought and said so for two years. I think it very evident that Congress will never determine this question adversely to legal tender. The Supreme Court of the United States must adjudicate it; and if they determine that legal-tender paper money can be issued in time of peace—that fiat money is good money—then I say that the gentlemen who proposed to reconstruct from the national Treasury the levees of the Mississippi River will come here and ask for and get $500,000,000, more or less, for that purpose; the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] will get his $500,000,000 for the soldiers; and other gentlemen and parties coming here will get what they require for their various purposes. You can no more safely employ as a permanent system national-bank currency and legal-tender currency at the same time, the volume of the latter subject always to the whims of Congress, than you can harness a lie with a truth and make them work together for the benefit of mankind!

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman's last remark all I have to say is this: that we have had national-bank notes and greenbacks working together for the last fifteen years and more; and notwithstanding the assertion of the gentleman that we cannot make them work together, they not only have worked together, but have proved an eminent success. They stand together side by side to-day, each being equal in value to gold or silver—to the best gold or silver we ever issued from the Mint. Now, I put the long history of these fifteen years in regard to these two kinds of paper money in opposition to the assertion of the gentleman from New York; and I appeal to the people all over the land who have used them to say whether or not they can be made to work together. If experience and the facts of history amount to anything as testimony, the gentleman is altogether in the wrong.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. One word only. Our financial system for the last fifteen years has been altogether abnormal. The people are not to be kept in an abnormal position forever with reference to their currency. They have tolerated fiat money mixed with good money during the war and in the interval which has led us to resumption; but we must some time or other come down to sound principles on this subject, or we are to be a nation of fiat repudiators—a disgrace to mankind.

I say [addressing Mr. HAYES] that when you have established the doctrine of one part of your speech, you have established the substance of all that the repudiators ask for. You have established the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WEAVER;] you have established the main thing advocated by the party which that gentleman represents, namely, the glory of legal-tender money. And when you make an argument for the national-bank currency you make an argument for the extermination of the other form of currency. No speech has been made in this House in my hearing that so illustrates the confusion of thought and tongue in the Congress of the United States on the currency question as that speech of yours. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HAYES. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman intends to misrepresent me at all. But if he had listened carefully to what I said, he would understand that I advocate the ideas embraced in my speech, not as a permanent thing but as the best thing for the present time. I said let our finances alone during this session of Congress. Good times have come to us. The people have relied upon Congress not to disturb our finances; at least they have hoped such would be the policy. They have gone forward and invested their money in new enterprises, and as the result, prosperity has sprung up in every portion of the land. Now, as I reiterated half a dozen times in my speech, it is the policy of wisdom and good government for the representatives of the people not to disturb this prosperity by any tinkering with the finances during this session of Congress. When the gentleman gets up and talks about "confusion of ideas" he must understand that the main burden of my speech is to show that it is in the interest of the people to let the finances alone for this session of Congress; and that is as far as I go. Here are the words I use, "There will doubtless come a time within the next few years when some change in our financial legislation will be necessary. That time may be at our next session or during the Congress which succeeds this, but it is not now." The gentleman will observe that I talk only of the present needs of the country in my speech and of what it is best for Congress to do and not to do at the present time. If it will gratify him, however, I will go a step further and say that so long as our present financial system with our gold, silver, greenbacks, and national-bank notes continues to work as admirably as it has done and is doing to-day and to give as good satisfaction to our people, I am not in favor of disturbing it. This is my platform and I propose to stand on it both here and elsewhere.

When the gentleman talks about his having yoked a couple of steers together at the age of thirteen and plowed an acre of land before breakfast, he may say what is true; but that does not give him any more right to speak on this financial question in favor of the people of the West than it does myself.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Did I claim that it did?

Mr. HAYES. I understood that the gentleman so claimed. He said he had the right to speak for the farmers of the West, and gave as a reason the fact that at the age of thirteen he had done so and so on a farm. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman makes that fact the ground of his right to speak for the farmers of the West, I can discount him by several years. I want the gentleman to understand that I was born and reared on a farm; that I drove a yoke of cattle at an earlier age than thirteen years; that I plowed and harrowed and did many other kinds of work on a farm at the age of ten or twelve years. I want him to understand, moreover, that I live among the farmers of the West; that I come in contact with them every day when I am at home; and that I know something of their wants and needs. I can tell him, also, that this honest, hard-working, and intelligent class of our citizens are satisfied with our financial system as it is, and do not want it overthrown in order that a new system may be built up to suit the money-kings of Wall street, whose peculiar ideas are advocated so earnestly on this floor by the gentleman from New York.

THE CURRENCY QUESTION—NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. BALLOU. Mr. Chairman, the currency question seems to be the topic for discussion to-day, and, as briefly and clearly as I can, I wish to state my reasons for believing that legal-tender paper money is both unconstitutional and unnecessary in time of peace, and that the issue of national-bank notes under our present free-banking system is the safest, cheapest, and best circulating medium for the Government and the people.

LEGAL-TENDER PAPER MONEY UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

Any interpretation of the Constitution which gives the Government of the United States the right to make paper currency a legal tender, or that can justify such an act except to meet the exigencies of war or for self-preservation, seems upon its face to be strange and unreasonable, when the Constitution expressly declares that "no State shall make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts," and that "Congress shall have power to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures." Certainly paper cannot be coined, and it will be difficult to make it money and regulate the value thereof by weight or measure; and it does not seem probable that the framers of the Constitution should expressly prohibit the States from making anything but gold and silver legal tender and then authorize the Government, composed of all the States, to nullify this constitutional prohibition by making paper a legal tender by every State.

War may sometimes make it necessary to adopt measures for temporary purposes not authorized by the Constitution, which should cease when the exigency shall have passed; and if it is ever wise for the Government to issue a paper currency of any kind in time of peace, which may well be questioned, it certainly cannot be that which is irredeemable, and which could have no limit to its issue except such as partisan Congresses might give it; and which would therefore be fraught with the greatest danger to the credit of the nation and the business of the people, and be a constant temptation to use the power of the Government to make money for personal, sectional, and party ends. If redeemed on demand, there is no necessity of making any other currency a legal tender than that which the Constitution expressly recognizes, as paper would then always represent and be convertible into coin—a privilege seldom used when made easy, as coin in large amounts is only wanted when difficult to obtain and made valuable by irredeemable paper. So much, therefore, of the act which makes paper currency of the United States a legal tender, being unnecessary for business transactions and undoubtedly unconstitutional, can and ought to be repealed; not that the Government currency must necessarily be retired from circulation at once, or any faster or further than the interests of the people may seem to require, but that whatever currency the Government does issue in time of peace should at least be in harmony with the Constitution.

But with a paper currency redeemable in coin as a circulating medium of exchange in all financial transactions, what kind is safest, cheapest, and best for the people and the Government; that issued by the individual States, the United States, or the national banks? This is the question for us to solve, and the importance of a correct solution, with its practical workings for the benefit of the country, perhaps cannot be overestimated.

THE NECESSITY FOR BANKS.

Banks of some kind, either State, national, or private, for the investment and loan of capital, and for the temporary deposit and withdrawal of such funds as the commercial world recognizes as a medium of exchange, are not only a great convenience but a necessity in every community where trade and commerce make an important part of the business.

Until February 25, 1863, when national banks were first organized, the banks chartered by the several States were the only institutions authorized to issue a paper currency, which was done oftentimes to an unlimited amount and without much real capital behind to redeem it, causing frequent failures of these banks in all sections of the country, and preventing even the strongest of them from having anything more than a local reputation, making the exchange of currency from State to State, both for the traveler and for all commercial transactions, a burdensome and an annoying tax.

There is, probably, not less than four thousand millions of exchange issued annually upon New York alone by the Western and Southern States; to which add the amounts drawn on the East and what the banks in the commercial cities and States draw on each other, with the rate of exchange, varying as it did in 1859 and 1860, when the State banks alone were in operation, from ¼ to 1½ per cent., and we shall get some idea of the burden which a local or State currency imposes, as well as the benefits of that which is homogeneous and national, fully secured, redeemable in coin, and exempt from any discount on account of locality, because of equal value in every State in the Union.

To those who remember the old system of bank issues under State authority, with the different degrees of security under different State requirements, and the "wild-cat banks," with no security at all, the numberless counterfeits, because each bank had a different engraving, often varying in style and quality, leaving no way to detect the false from the true beyond the locality of the bank; the difficulty of passing the genuine even, without heavy exchange, where not known, and the certain loss to the note-holder on the failure of the bank, and compare this with our present national system, almost without counterfeits, of uniform issues, and of equal value and perfect security for all in every State, and the advantages are so great and so apparent and its practical workings have proved so beneficial that no argument need be offered in its favor. The only question, then, is whether this national currency shall all be issued directly by and from the Government or principally, if not altogether, through our national banks. Which is safest, cheapest, and best?

GAINS AND LOSSES ON GOVERNMENT ISSUES.

If the Government issues all the currency and destroys the national banks, it will get the benefit of the circulation which they now have of about $325,000,000, the interest on which, at 4 per cent., the present price of the bonds to be held for its security, would be thirteen millions annually; but the Government would then have a trial of its credit to redeem this circulation and to find a new market for more than $350,000,000 of its bonds which the banks have purchased and deposited with it to secure and redeem their notes, which might prevent a further issue of the 4 per cent. bonds and the saving of many millions of dollars by substituting them for more of the five and six percents, so successfully accomplished heretofore, at one-fourth to one-third less rate of interest.

The Government would also lose the income from the tax which the national banks now pay on their circulation of over three millions, and if deposits should be included of about $7,000,000 annually, and be obliged to keep on hand at least one hundred million more of coin in order to be able to redeem this circulation at all times, the interest on which, at 6 per cent., if it could be obtained for that, would be six millions more. It would also have to pay the expenses of redeeming the notes, now paid by the banks, which would probably exceed a million dollars, so that in the interests of economy it would be no advantage to the Government to destroy the national-bank circulation and issue its own, as under almost any circumstances the expense to the Government by the issue and redemption of the currency, with the unremunerative coin it must keep for that purpose, and the income it would lose which is now paid to it by the national banks, would be more than any interest it could save on the circulation. And if the bonds of the national banks, thus thrown on the market, should stop the sale of the four percents at par, which would naturally follow from such an increase, and thus prevent the Government from reducing its rate of interest on its indebtedness, an additional loss would be incurred, so that the substitution of Treasury notes for national-bank currency would be an absolute expense to the Government, while under the present system the national banks furnish an annual income to the Government of several millions of dollars, which, from their organization to July 1, 1879, has amounted to a total of $92,754,791, of which $42,785,464 was for circulation alone, while the whole expense of the Government during the same period has been only $4,732,731, being a net gain on the circulation of $38,052,733, and including the tax on capital and deposits the national banks have paid to the Government over all expenses it has incurred for them the sum of $88,022,060. Surely, those institutions that pay into the public Treasury such an amount in clear profits cannot be robbers of the people.

Shall they all be destroyed and this source of income blotted out, with all the advantages which they confer in their varied relations to the business of the country? Far wiser, better, and more economical would it be for the Government and the people to re-enact the original law for the issue of legal-tender notes by making them convertible into an interest-paying bond, or gradually retiring them from circulation as fast as national-bank currency shall increase, which would not contract the circulation, but would free the Government from the business of banking altogether instead of making it a great banking institution by issuing all the currency.

DIFFICULTY OF SUBSTITUTING LEGAL TENDERS FOR NATIONAL-BANK NOTES.

Another practical difficulty not easily overcome would probably occur in endeavoring to substitute legal-tenders for national-bank notes, for it is not easy to see in what way the Government would get the money it might issue into the hands of the people and receive security therefor except so far as it pays its own indebtedness, for it cannot be expected to take the place of the national banks in loaning money on individual securities and thus get its notes into circulation. Or if it should call in its own interest-bearing bonds and substitute Treasury notes for them it would simply change the character of its liability without paying its debt, and as so much currency could not be constantly and legitimately kept in circulation it would have to be redeemed or repudiated, and no man of honor would propose the latter alternative. Redemption therefore is absolutely necessary, the expense of which, with the great amount of coin the Government would have to retain to be in readiness to meet any emergency, insure the permanency of resumption, and maintain its present credit, would more than balance any interest saved by substituting demand notes without interest, subject to constant redemption, for 4 per cent. bonds payable at the option of the Government.

The Government, it is true, can keep a certain amount of its notes in circulation by paying its liabilities, for it is always incurring debt, but if, as has been suggested, five hundred or a thousand millions of Treasury notes should be issued forthwith for the benefit of the business of the country, in what way shall this money be made a circulating medium? To whom shall it be given, and for what shall it be given, and what will the Government have as an equivalent for this currency which will guarantee its redemption?

Or if so much money can be paid out by the Government legitimately in addition to our present circulation how is it to benefit business, or in what way can it be profitably employed? To be expended where it cannot be utilized is simply waste. Our great need has been not more money, but to know how to use what we had. There has probably been no time in the history of the country when more capital has been idle or the rates of interest lower than during the last three years. Why, then, this constant cry for more when what we have is not used? The present national banks are entitled by their capital to $68,000,000 more than they have called for, which would indicate that the demand is not very pressing for more money for legitimate business or that the profit is not very great on the circulation.

NOT MORE MONEY, BUT CONFIDENCE NEEDED.

What we have most needed during the last few years to restore business to its healthy condition, and which resumption has now accomplished, was the restoration of that confidence which had been destroyed by the constant attempt of theoretical but impracticable politicians to change in some way the currency of the country, and thus unsettling its value, under the delusive idea that the national banks were reaping a great profit out of a circulation which properly belonged to the Government, and that if its notes were made a legal tender and interchangeable with bonds there would be no need of redemption. But gold was the standard by which all currency was valued before as well as since resumption, and any currency not redeemable at par in gold will be constantly fluctuating in value, so that no man will dare invest in any business beyond his immediate necessities, with an irredeemable currency as the basis of his transactions.

The Government is responsible, and its credit depends upon its ability and readiness to redeem all the notes it issues in the standard money of the commercial world, and though the property of the country may seem to be a sufficient guarantee of its ability, we must not forget that its only means of meeting its liabilities is by taxing the people, and the increase of its obligations increases their burden.

If not to be redeemed, it does not matter how much is issued, nor to whom it is given, for if it is worth anything all expenses could be paid from its own issues, and all the debts of the Government could be paid by the paper-maker and the use of the printing-press without taxing the people at all.

THE LABORING CLASS INJURED BY CHEAP MONEY.

If anybody can be benefited by such a currency it must be the wealthy, who are generally the debtor class, and who may thus pay their debts by cheating their creditors with cheap paper called money, that the few may be benefited at the expense of the many, the employer at the expense of the employed; for the creditor class exceeds the debtor class in number more than ten to one. Of the eight millions of laborers in this country receiving monthly wages there is always due them, from less than one million employers, at least $100,000,000; and the twenty-five hundred thousand depositors in our savings-banks have all their funds loaned to less than two hundred thousand borrowers; and though they are the debtor class, they are also the moneyed class, who have been able to give satisfactory security for their loans. Must the currency be depreciated that the two hundred thousand may be helped, while the twenty-five hundred thousand suffer; that the few with much property may be benefited at the expense of those who have little or none; that the employer may cheat his help and the borrower his creditor by paying them their honest dues in a cheap and deceptive paper note called money? All this pretense of helping the laborer by an irredeemable currency is a sham and a swindle, and whoever else may be benefited, the laborer who earns his daily bread by daily toil is sure to suffer.

But the absurdity of this, for a time, somewhat popular and delusive theory of a legal irredeemable currency is becoming apparent to all, and the note of the Government, like the note of the individual, will be valued in the future by its purchasing power of real property, and its redemption in the coin which the commercial world recognizes as money.

ARE NATIONAL BANKS MONOPOLIES?

It is claimed, however, as a reason against the national-bank circulation, that these associations are monopolies, owned by the wealthy and fostered by the Government as a class, at the expense of the masses, obtaining great profits for themselves which rightfully belong to the people, and that the whole system ought to be abolished. Yet national banking is really so free that any five respectable individuals in the land who can control $50,000 can organize a bank and have all the benefits of this monopoly, and if the business is really as lucrative as supposed there will probably be enough to engage in it to bring its profits by natural competition on a par with other kinds of business, for most men will invest their means where there is supposed safety and the greatest profits.

The fact is that there is no business more free for the people to invest in than national banking, and there is none with greater risks, for as its business consists in loaning its capital to others, instead of keeping and using it, its success depends upon theirs, and the failure in others is sure to bring loss to the banks, which, during the last four years, has been over $85,000,000.

WHO OWN THE NATIONAL BANKS?

Again, instead of the banks being owned by the rich, more than one-half of the stockholders do not own to exceed $1,000, and a large fraction of the whole number are women. Comparatively few of the wealthy are large stockholders in national banks, so that of the more than two hundred thousand in all, there are less than eight hundred, including the various institutions who invest for the many, who exceed $50,000, and less than eleven thousand who exceed $10,000. Our wealthy business men have their wealth in their business and are the debtor class to the banks, always borrowing from them, while the employés of the wealthy are the creditor class, whose surplus earnings are either deposited for safety and profit in some savings institution or invested in the purchase of national-bank stock, and thus a large majority of these reputed aristocratic bank-stock holders and capitalists are really the laboring class and persons of quite moderate means.

Why, sir, in six of the national banks nearest my own home, in an active business community, and which are a fair sample of those outside the large cities, having an aggregate capital and surplus of $1,200,000, there are six hundred and thirty-eight stockholders, and two hundred and eighty-nine of them are women, in all averaging less than $1,900 of capital and surplus to each, and a large majority of them do not exceed $1,000; and yet these are the ones who are designated as the bloated capitalists—the Shylocks—cheating the laborer and oppressing and grinding the poor!

And yet it is proposed that these men and women thus denounced, who have saved and invested a few hundred dollars from their daily toil, and whose only income consists in the dividend they may draw on their little investment and their pay for daily labor, should receive whatever they may be nominally entitled to in an irredeemable currency, with the idea that the stamp upon its face can fix its value, as though we could change tares into wheat by a label, or by stamping a gold eagle a hundred dollars would make it worth more than ten—as though the value of what we pay may be increased by a stamp to meet the requirements of any promised obligation. The delusion consists in supposing that money, which the commercial world recognizes as an equivalent for all kinds of property, can be made as easily and in the same way as promises.

It is an easy matter for the government or an individual to make a note, but quite another thing to pay it in its promised value. It costs no more to write or stamp a note for $10,000 than for ten with a promise to pay; but it will require a vast deal more of time and labor to pay the one rather than the other in what the world means by money. The laborer needs his pay not in promises but in money the purchasing power of which shall be an equivalent for his toil, and the most cunningly devised scheme to cheat and defraud him of his honest earnings is this attempt to substitute stamped paper, to be redeemed only by new issues of the same kind, under the delusive idea that this is money instead of that real honest money everywhere recognized, and which is as stable in value the world over as the pound and the yard are of weight and measure, because it costs as much of time and labor to obtain it as do any of the articles of like value which are necessary for the sustenance and comfort of human life; and this is gold, or such paper as can be turned into gold at the will of the holder.

PROFITS AND DRAWBACKS OF NATIONAL BANKS.

The enormous profits of national banks, too, is as imaginary as the bloated financial condition of the stockholders, for the average earnings of the banks on capital and surplus during the last four years has been less than 6 per cent. per annum, and during the last two years less than 5½ per cent., and dividends which have exceeded that have been drawn from the surplus, while during the year 1876 there were two hundred and thirty-five banks that made no dividends, which number has been increased in 1879 to three hundred and four, and the average number during the last four years of banks which have failed to make dividends has been two hundred and ninety-two.

There are so many drawbacks to the double interest which banks are supposed to receive on their capital invested in bonds and the circulation received for them that the seeming profit almost becomes a loss in the final settlement. First, by the reserve which banks are required to retain of 15 to 25 per cent. on deposits, and which the exigencies of business will keep to nearly double that amount, and by the last report of the Comptroller of the Currency exceeded the requirement by more than $44,000,000. Then the taxes on deposits, circulation, and capital, the stamps on checks, and the expenses of examination and the transportation and redemption of notes, to which should be added the excess of valuation of bank stock over other personal property, for State and municipal taxation, because of its public recorded value, while other personal property escapes, having no public record, all of which drawbacks must be deducted from the gross income to obtain the net gain.

TAXES AND RATE OF INTEREST.

The amount paid the Government by the national banks in 1878 was $6,727,232, and the State and municipal taxes were $8,056,533, making a total of $14,783,765, and by the last report of the Comptroller of the Currency it appears that the average of national and State taxes paid by the national banks annually during the last thirteen years has been $16,786,438, nearly four millions more than the interest on all the bank circulation at the bond rate of 4 per cent.

The bank currency was, however, a source of some profit when the interest on the bonds was 6 per cent., payable in gold, which, before resumption, could be sold at a premium, and banks were thus generally enabled to obtain the required surplus and make dividends; yet three hundred and seven have gone into voluntary liquidation, believing that the premium on the bonds deposited as security for redemption was worth more than the circulation of the notes, and the national-banking capital has diminished during the last four years $45,100,000. But with the 4 per cent. bonds for the security of the circulation and with the present taxes the national-bank currency will be more a matter of convenience than of profit to the banks, and the small but exceedingly annoying stamp-tax on checks, and the unjust tax on deposits, being on what they owe and not on what they own, if not soon repealed, or at least reduced, will probably drive many of them into liquidation without any special legislation to that end; for the tax on deposits, through the process of collections and credits, will average more than three times the real original amount, as every note, draft, or bill of exchange discounted and deposited in one bank and forwarded through others for collection to various sections of the country is credited to deposit account by each, and a tax paid to the Government on the same piece of paper collected by all.

It must also be borne in mind that in addition to the taxes paid to the Government by the national banks the capital stock is also subject to municipal and State taxes to its full amount, notwithstanding it may all be invested in Government bonds which are exempt from taxation when held by others.

This excessive taxation also necessarily increases the rate of interest, as banks are compelled, if they continue to exist, to charge such interest as will enable them to realize profits equal to other kinds of business, which is always competitive in relation to net gains, and this especially affects the rural and farming districts where money is mostly borrowed on bond and mortgage of other institutions for long time, but seldom less than the higher range of bank rates, thus indirectly bringing the heaviest burden on those least able to bear it, while in the cities where loans are made by banks mostly on short commercial or indorsed paper the rates would vary by the demand and supply, so that a reduction of the tax on the banks will be the greatest relief to those who need it most, by reducing the general rate of interest to those whose homes and farms are mortgaged.

NATIONAL BANKS SECURE PERMANENCY OF RESUMPTION AND MEET BUSINESS DEMANDS.

Yet for another reason it is important that the national banks should be sustained and their circulation continued, not only because most economical for the people and the Government, but because the circulation by them is the surest and easiest, if not the only way, in which the permanency of specie resumption and the public credit of the Government can be maintained. The superior ability the national banks possess over the Government to do this will be seen by comparing the available means of each for redeeming all demand notes promptly with coin.

The liabilities of the Government for its demand notes and fractional currency are in round numbers $362,000,000, and all that it has of available means to redeem this is $150,000,000 of coin and bullion, leaving a deficit of $212,000,000, while the liabilities of the national banks for deposits and circulating notes are $1,050,000,000, to meet which they have assets of United States bonds and of coin and legal-tender notes amounting to $580,000,000, and loans and debts due them based upon the real property of the people of more than $1,000,000,000, showing a surplus over all liabilities of at least $530,000,000, or $150 of assets to every $100 of liabilities, while the Government has but about $42 of assets for each $100 of its liabilities, and has no way to get the balance except by the slow process of taxation.

Resumption can be maintained, too, by the national banks much easier and on a smaller specie basis than the Government can possibly do it should they be abolished. No contingency would be likely to occur which would produce a run on the banks for redemption that could not be promptly met. Their notes being distributed throughout the country there could be no sudden and unexpected demand, as the notes of no one bank could be easily gathered in amounts large enough to prevent prompt redemption, and the amount of coin necessary to enable them to meet all demands would be much less proportionately than the Government would require should it issue all the circulation; for its notes would all be subject to redemption at once, wherever or by whomsoever held, and the least increase in coin value either from legitimate or speculative causes, would make it necessary for the Government to hold a large amount of unremunerative coin constantly on hand to be ready to meet any emergency, maintain its credit, and retain the confidence of the people. If the Government can therefore maintain specie payments with its own issue of eight hundred to a thousand millions of dollars, which may well be doubted, it will be at an expense greater than any interest that would accrue to it by substituting its own for national-bank notes.

ELASTICITY OF NATIONAL-BANK CURRENCY TO BUSINESS DEMANDS.

The elasticity, too, of the free national-bank system in expanding or contracting its issues as the demands of business might require, without change in the security of its notes, is another great advantage over Government circulation which must be regulated with a fixed amount by law and necessarily limited to the means of redemption, or be constantly fluctuating in value. And as the demands of trade might seem to require more or less circulation than the amount issued, perpetual legislation would be necessary to meet the real or fancied wants of sections or parties, and thus constantly changing the value of that which more than anything else should be uniform and stable for the business health and prosperity of a commercial people.

CONCLUSION.

The inevitable conclusion then must be, that while national banking is free there can be no monopoly; that with specie resumption there can be no fluctuation of values; that with a deposit of 10 per cent. of the bonds of the Government in excess of the circulation received for its security and redemption, with the responsibility of the stockholders in national banks for the par value of their stock in addition to the stock itself, there can be no loss under any circumstances to the note-holder; that the national banks not only pay all their expenses but are a source of income to the Government to the amount of several millions of dollars annually; that they are owned principally by the industrious classes and persons of moderate means, whether merchants, mechanics, or laborers, rather than by the wealthy, and are especial helpers to the business of all classes, not only as places for investments and loans, but also as the best medium of exchange for all financial transactions in all sections of the country.

I therefore answer the question propounded at the commencement of my remarks, that in my judgment the national banks, as at present organized, free for all, with a circulation redeemable in coin and secured by the Government, making the notes of every bank of equal value with each other and with coin throughout the country, constitute the safest, cheapest, and best currency and circulating medium for the financial transactions of the Government and people. Safest, because twice the amount of its own stock is held in addition to the Government bonds for the security of its notes, and the general distribution of these notes prevents such sudden demands for redemption as would endanger specie payments. Cheapest, because of the expense of issuing and redeeming Government notes, and the large amount of unremunerative coin which must be held for that purpose, and the loss of the income from the national banks would be more than the interest on their circulation; and best, because the national banks will adapt their business to the wants and needs of the community where located better than the Government can, and will command the confidence of the people more than State institutions or private bankers; and I doubt not that with the removal of some unjust taxes now existing, and the repeal of the unconstitutional legal-tender act, the circulation of national-bank notes would gradually be increased to an amount sufficient to meet all legitimate business demands, and perhaps without much special legislation eventually supersede Government issues and all other paper currency, because safest, and cheapest, and best.

COMMERCIAL RECIPROCITY.

Mr. JOYCE. Mr. Chairman, since I have been a member of this House numerous propositions have been presented here looking to the appointment of a joint commission to arrange and agree upon the terms of a treaty for commercial reciprocity between this Government and the Dominion of Canada.

One of these propositions, in the form of a joint resolution, was introduced by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] during the last session, and is now pending before this House. That resolution reads as follows:

Joint resolution authorizing the appointment of commissioners to ascertain on what terms a mutually beneficial treaty of commerce with Canada can be arranged.

Resolved, &c., That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to appoint three commissioners, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to confer with other commissioners duly authorized by the government of the Dominion of Canada, or whenever it shall appear to be the wish of that government to appoint such commissioners, and to investigate and ascertain on what basis a treaty of reciprocal trade for the mutual benefit of the people of the United States and the Dominion of Canada can be negotiated.

While no effort has been made by the friends of this policy to provoke discussion or to bring the House to a vote upon it, yet on several occasions gentlemen have seen fit to travel out of their way in debate upon other subjects to eulogize and advocate it, and have seemed to delight in heaping terms of reproach and censure upon those who are so unfortunate as to differ with them as to the constitutionality and expediency of such a policy.

Not sympathizing with those gentlemen in their efforts to build up and extend Canadian and British industries at the expense of our own, I shall avail myself of the present opportunity (so kindly given me by the House) to examine this subject somewhat at length, and shall endeavor to convince those who do me the honor to listen to my argument that, practically, commercial reciprocity is a delusion and a snare, and that instead of adopting it as an element in our commercial policy we should discard and ignore it as destructive of our industrial interests and ruinous to our national prosperity. I think I shall be able to show that notwithstanding this policy is simple and plausible in appearance, although it may be covered with the specious and attractive garb of equality and fairness, and hidden under a multitude of mutual promises and benefits, yet it is full of deception, of dangerous tendency; that it is a subject of vast importance to this country, and that the reasons for its being urged and the object sought to be accomplished by it ought to be thoroughly understood, not only by Congress but by the people, before any action is taken upon it with a view to its final consummation.

While it is a question seriously affecting the manufacturing and industrial interests of the whole country, in which every State in the Union is deeply concerned, yet the agricultural and manufacturing classes of the northern border States will be, perhaps, more directly and injuriously affected than any of the others by this unwise and pernicious policy which gentlemen are attempting to force upon the people in this blind and clandestine manner.

Sir, this is not the first time since the abrogation of the unequal and unjust treaty of 1854 that this fell spirit of "free trade" has manifested itself in this direction; but, fortunately for the country, it has always been met and stifled before it had attained dangerous proportions or fastened its poisonous fangs upon our sensitive and struggling industries.

Ever on the alert and keenly alive to whatever threatens the advancement and success of the agricultural, manufacturing, and commercial interests of this country, the people of Vermont have repeatedly, through their Legislature and in public assemblies and conventions, entered their solemn protest against the renewal of any reciprocity treaty with the Dominion of Canada; and the republican convention in my congressional district, in August, 1874, expressed the same determined opposition by unanimously adopting the following resolution:

Resolved, That believing that the renewal of the reciprocity treaty would prove seriously detrimental to the agricultural interests and the laboring classes of our State, we are opposed to its renewal in any form.

From this, sir, the House will see that in opposing this or any other scheme of reciprocity I not only act in strict accordance with my own convictions and judgment of what is right, but in exact harmony with the wishes and desires of the people I represent.

In discussing the proposition now under consideration, in order to uncover and expose the whole scheme, and place the matter in a clear light before this House and the country, I shall first call attention to the meaning, scope, and novelty of a commercial reciprocity treaty; second, inquire whether the President and Senate have the constitutional power to bind the Government by entering into such a treaty; third, review and examine the history of such treaties to which our Government has been a party; fourth, inquire as to the causes which led to the treaty of 1854 with the Dominion of Canada; fifth, show the injurious effects of that treaty upon the producers, manufacturers, and laborers of this country; sixth, demonstrate the fact that the duties we collect upon imports from Canada do not enhance the price of the article to the consumer here as claimed by the advocates of reciprocity; seventh, give the reasons why the United States cannot afford to enter into such a treaty with Canada; eighth, show why the Canadians desire this so-called commerical reciprocity with the United States; ninth, inquire as to the policy of granting special favors, and whether such an arrangement as is proposed would in any manner conflict with our commerical obligations to other nations.

AS TO THE MEANING, SCOPE, AND NOVELTY OF A COMMERCIAL RECIPROCITY TREATY.

The right of a State to negotiate and contract public treaties with other nations is an essential and necessary incident to its sovereignty, and the form and manner in which it is accomplished, and the person or department in which the power is vested, must always be determined by its own constitution or fundamental and organic law.

An ordinary treaty is defined to be an agreement, league, or contract between two or more independent states or nations, embracing foreign objects beyond the reach of legislation, and requiring the solemn assent of both governments.

A reciprocity treaty is a compact between nations which is designed to regulate the conditions of reciprocal trade, define and secure the imperfect rights and duties of commercial intercourse, and confer upon each country equal rights and privileges respecting the customs and charges upon all articles of import.

This is what, in theory and as it appears upon paper, such a treaty is designed to accomplish, but practically a commercial reciprocity treaty between this country and the Dominion of Canada means that we must in all our dealings with the people of that province adopt the theory of free trade, throw wide open the doors of our markets to their productions and manufactures, and reduce the price of labor upon our farms, in our mills, factories, and quarries, to the Canada-English standard. Such a result would necessarily follow from the fact that any treaty which should "admit articles of Canadian production and manufacture into this country free of duty" would be "an unpleasant approximation to a repeal of our tariff on the same articles of British production and manufacture."

It is a principle which underlies all national progress and prosperity that "the first and paramount duty of every government is to its own people." This principle is recognized and this duty acknowledged by every civilized nation on the face of the earth in the restrictions which are imposed in the shape of customs duties upon the imported productions of other nations. Such restrictions are intended to place our own people in a position of equality "with the producers of other countries" in respect to the price of the labor and materials which enter into such importations.

This policy of reciprocal commercial relations with foreign governments, which is merely an offshoot of the dogma of free trade, is not only especially obnoxious and offensive to the laboring and producing classes of this country at the present time, "but it is also comparatively modern and novel, having, therefore, neither merit nor age to recommend it to our favorable consideration."

As was well said by Senator MORRILL, of my State, in an able and exhaustive speech upon the Hawaiian treaty, delivered in the Senate of the United States in March, 1875:

Such a treaty as a reciprocity treaty was unknown at the time the Constitution was formed, and to-day there is not one existing in the world between any nations here or elsewhere. It is wholly a new and modern invention.

Now, sir, whatever may be the ostensible reasons given for such a treaty by those who negotiated it, or its advocates and supporters, I here affirm, without fear of successful contradiction, that the ultimate object sought to be obtained is open ports and free trade. This fact makes it doubly necessary for us to exercise the utmost care and circumspection when this subject is presented, in order that we may the more successfully guard against deception on the one hand and ward off the dangers of such an unfortunate consummation on the other.

I submit, then, sir, whether it is advisable, in the light of our experience under the treaty of 1854, ever again to take such a new and dangerous departure, and, if it is, whether it is good policy, in view of the present condition of our revenues, resulting from recent legislation, the present state of our industrial interests, and the late heroic struggles of our producers and manufacturers to outride the financial storm of 1873, to take it at the present time.

Can we, sir, who are especially charged for the time being with the protection and preservation of the rights and interests of the people, and who will be called upon by our constituents to give an account to them for every word uttered and every vote given in this Hall, afford to inaugurate a system and enter upon a line of policy, the only effect of which will be to create and build up an aristocracy of wealth, to increase the riches of the opulent and add to the miseries of the poor, to crush labor and honest industry, to enable the importer and speculator to live in luxury and splendor, to build up the city at the expense of the country, and to "fertilize the rich man's fields by the sweat of the poor man's brow?"

If Canada was an independent power and the favored-nation clause was out of the way, it is barely possible that a treaty might be framed which would be beneficial and equitable to both parties; but as long as the position of Canada is that of a colony or appendage to Great Britain it is absolutely impossible, as was clearly and fully demonstrated by the operation of the treaty of 1854, and any attempt upon our part to renew it would be the extremest folly, and would result, as that did, in building up the prosperity of the people of Canada and Great Britain at the expense of our own.

HAVE THE PRESIDENT AND THE SENATE THE CONSTITUTIONAL POWER TO BIND THE GOVERNMENT BY ENTERING INTO SUCH A TREATY?

The Constitution of the United States provides that the Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, excises, and to regulate commerce with foreign nations, while it prohibits the States from doing it, and requires that all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives.

It also provides that the President shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and that all treaties made under the authority of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

The power to raise revenue by means of levying and collecting taxes and duties upon foreign imports is thus explicitly given to Congress by express grant of the Constitution, but the policy contended for by the advocates of reciprocity would take away this power and tie up the hands of Congress during the existence of the treaty.

It would most effectually deprive Congress of the power to tax such articles as were covered by the treaty, and would, for the time, suspend the power of Congress, granted by the Constitution, to impose duties on foreign imports.

Such a policy, it seems to me, would be both unconstitutional and impolitic. Customs duties are the main source of our revenue, and they should be kept clear from all entangling alliances and ready for immediate use in any and every emergency.

While the policy of our Government is, and has always been, to cultivate a spirit of honorable peace with all nations, yet in times of great trouble we may be driven into war. "In such an untoward event," as was said by Senator MORRILL in the speech already referred to, "the whole resources of the country should be kept untrammeled, ready to be unleashed for instant use, and no part of them should be placed beyond our reach." In such a crisis "the power to originate revenue bills becomes imperative and indispensable to the preservation of the national life."

Again, the power to regulate commerce is given by the Constitution to Congress, and not to the President and Senate. This power is exercised by Congress by "the passage of general laws applicable to all the world alike, but under the guise of reciprocity the treaty-making power undertakes to regulate commerce by a special bargain which grants favors to one nation that are denied everywhere else."

A reciprocity treaty assumes to, and would if entered into as proposed, regulate our commerce, work a complete change in our tariff system of raising revenue on imports from foreign nations, entirely ignore and annul the power of Congress over the subject, and openly and palpably violate both the letter and spirit of the Constitution.

The sound reasons upon which the wise provisions of the Constitution to which I have referred are based must be apparent to every intelligent man, and the advantages which the Government has derived from them are plainly demonstrated in the past history of our country.

From the organization of the Government down to the present time but one solitary instance of a reciprocity treaty between this Government and any foreign power has occurred, and that was abrogated by our Government the moment the people by the terms of it possessed the power.

This question was settled years ago, in the Senate of the United States, in the case of the proposed German Zollverein.

In 1837 Mr. Wheaton, our minister to Berlin, under specific instructions from Mr. Forsyth, then Secretary of State, in order to procure a reduction of the duties on tobacco, in the interest of our fellow-citizens in the South, negotiated a reciprocity treaty with the German states called the Zollverein. That treaty not only involved the dangerous and unconstitutional principle which I am now combating, but it granted important and valuable privileges to the Prussian government, with the smallest and most insignificant advantages in return.

At the session of Congress in 1844–'45 that treaty came up for confirmation, and the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, after a full discussion and consideration of the subject, decided to reject it, and in their report, drawn up by Mr. Choate, set forth the constitutional objections to such a treaty in the following clear and forcible language:

> The committee, then, are not prepared to sanction so large an innovation upon ancient and uniform practice in respect of the department of Government by which duties on imports shall be imposed.
>
> The convention which has been submitted to the Senate changes duties which have been laid by law. It changes them either ex directo and by its own vigor, or it engages the faith of the nation and the faith of the Legislature through which the nation acts to make the change. In either aspect it is the President and Senate, who, by the instrumentality of negotiation, repeal or materially vary regulations of commerce and laws of revenue which Congress had ordained.
>
> More than this: the executive department, by the same instrumentality of negotiation, places it beyond the power of Congress to exceed the stipulated maximum of impost duties during the existence of the treaty, whatever exigency may intervene to require it.
> In the judgment of the committee the Legislature is the department of Government by which commerce should be regulated and laws of revenue passed.
>
> The Constitution in terms communicates the power to regulate commerce and to impose duties to that department. It communicates it in terms to no other; and the committee believe that the general rule of our system is, indisputably, that the control of trade and the function of taxing belong without abridgment or participation to Congress. They infer this from the language of the Constitution, from the nature and principles of our Government, from the theory of republican liberty itself, from the unvaried practice evidencing the universal belief of all, in all periods, and of all parties and opinions.
> They think, too, as the general rule, the representatives of the people, sitting in their legislative capacity, with open doors, under the eye of the country, communicating freely with their constituents, may exercise this power more intelligently, more discreetly, may acquire more accurate and more minute information concerning the employments and the interests on which this description of measures will press, and may better discern what true policy prescribes and rejects than is within the competence of the executive department of the Government.
> To follow, not to lead; to fulfill, not to ordain, the law; to carry into effect, by negotiation and compact with foreign governments, the legislative will, when it has been announced, upon the great subjects of trade and revenue, not to interpose with controlling influence, not to go forward with too ambitious enterprise—these seem to the committee to be the appropriate functions of the Executive.

In further support of the position I have taken I may be permitted to refer to what was so ably said by Mr. MORRILL, of my own State, upon the same subject:

> The Constitution of the United States gives to Congress the whole power to regulate commerce with foreign nations. There is no residuum of power left to be exercised elsewhere. It is as exclusively belonging to Congress as any other of the provisions in the whole chapter, or as the power to "provide and maintain a navy," or "to establish post-offices and post-roads," or "to raise and support armies." What would be said of a treaty which should be made providing for a reciprocity in establishing post-roads; we to build one and Canada another? What of a treaty providing for doubling the number of our naval vessels or for reducing them one-half? What of a treaty that should reciprocally require a larger or smaller standing army? * * * Congress regulates commerce only by the passage of general laws applicable to all the world alike, but here, under the guise of reciprocity, the treaty-making power undertakes to regulate commerce by a special bargain which grants favors to one kingdom that are denied everywhere else. How far and how long the Senate will advise the Executive to travel in this direction time will disclose, but to whatever extent it may go it will to that extent be a suspension of the legislative power of the nation.
> Of what value to the House of Representatives will be the power to originate revenue bills if the treaty-making power should step by step leave nothing upon which such bills can operate? Will it be said that a treaty is not a "bill," and therefore is not inhibited? That would be merely a petty subterfuge. This is one of the popular privileges of the people—to tax or not to tax, when and how they please—confided to the sole guardianship of the House, and the House as long as it maintains its own self-respect must stand as a sentinel to resist attempts to exclude them from their full participation in the joint power of regulating commerce and especially to resist any diminution of their exclusive power to initiate all revenue measures—never intended to be initiated otherwise than by bills. The Constitution speaks in the imperative mood: they shall originate in the House of Representatives.
> If reciprocity treaties are to become the settled policy of the country, then farewell to all stability in our revenue laws. The Executive will agitate these questions as well as Congress. We shall be subject to all the changes which foreign powers may successfully urge upon whoever may happen to be an able and influential Secretary of State. Our own interests will have to be bartered for the interests of foreigners and reciprocal compromises will be the order of the day.
> This is a privilege of the people older than Hampden, and a privilege made prominent in our Constitution; but reciprocity treaties would abridge and curtail this fundamental privilege of the Representatives of the people. In all of our history duties on imports have been our chief source of revenue, except in extraordinary exigencies our sole reliance; and if tariffs by a treaty can be established, modified, or repealed, or fixed and made unchangeable for a generation, they can be so fixed forever, and the power of the House to originate revenue bills would be practically reduced to a mere shadow. If dutiable articles can be made free, the same power can make free articles dutiable. One of the dearest principles of republican government, cherished as a bulwark of liberty, should not thus be fatally undermined. The power belongs not to one House only, but to every House of Representatives in perpetuity, to the present and also to the future; and the treaty-making power should not attempt to take it away by usurpation or by absorption. Though the present House should give its consent to such a treaty, it could not even bind itself, and far less any succeeding House. The power lives in the Constitution, far above the reach of any suicidal assault, and can neither be abdicated by the House nor subverted by any other branch of the Government, but must remain forever as potential as any other vital part of the Constitution.

Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE, in a letter to his constituents, I think during the congressional canvass of 1874, is reported to have added his emphatic protest against this mongrel free-trade policy in the following characteristic language:

> Against the whole policy of adjusting revenue questions by the treaty-making power I desire to enter, on behalf of my constituents, an emphatic protest. The Constitution gives to the House of Representatives the sole and exclusive right to originate bills of revenue, and this great power should be kept where it can be controlled by the direct vote of the people every two years. It may very well be that sundry articles of Canadian product should be admitted free or with diminished duty; it may be well, also, that Canada would find it advantageous to admit certain articles from us free of duty. Let each country decide the question for itself independently, and avoid the "log-rolling" feature of a treaty in which it will inevitably happen that certain interests will be sacrificed in order that others may be promoted. Let us simply place Canada on the same basis with foreign countries, taxing her products or admitting them free according to our own judgment of the interests of our revenue and the pursuits and needs of our people, always bearing in mind that in governmental as in family matters "charity begins at home," and that "he who provideth not for those of his own home is worse than an infidel."

The late Judge Collamer, of my State, one of the ablest constitutional lawyers of his day, in a speech upon this subject, in the Senate of the United States, once said:

> I am utterly opposed to the regulating the duties on imports by a treaty in any case whatever. I think it at war with the theory of our Government.

The Legislature of my State, after a very thorough investigation and careful consideration of the whole subject, declared its judgment in the following resolution:

> That it is the duty of Congress to oppose the consummation of any treaty relating to reciprocity in trade with the Dominion of Canada, and to insist that the subject of our trade and commercial intercourse with Canada, as well as with other foreign countries, is not a proper matter of treaty stipulation, but belongs to Congress and should be wisely regulated by a judicious tariff.

This House has also given its emphatic assent to the doctrine for which I contend at the present session by the passage of the following resolution, introduced by Judge KELLEY, by a vote of 175 to 62:

> Resolved, That it is the sense of this House that the negotiation by the executive department of the Government of a commercial treaty whereby the rates of duty to be imposed on foreign commodities entering the United States for consumption should be fixed would, in view of the provision of section 7 of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States, be an infraction of the Constitution and an invasion of one of the highest prerogatives of the House of Representatives.

The Washington Post, of this city, in commenting upon the resolution and its passage by the House, makes the following sound and forcible remarks, which I beg leave to quote:

> Judge KELLEY is clearly right, and the House and country will sustain him in the declaration that the executive department has no constitutional authority to make treaties changing duties on imports. The Constitution puts the public purse into the hands of the popular branch of Congress, and that instrument declares in explicit terms that "all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives." A large proportion of our revenues comes from duties on imports. Calculations as to the probable yield of this and other sources are made, and the annual appropriations are gauged accordingly. This is the work of the House, and has been so regarded since the Government was created. We borrowed this plan from England, where dear experience had taught the people the necessity of keeping the power of taxation in control of the Commons. If we concede that the executive department—a President and a Senate in executive session—can remove the duty from a single article, they can do the same with all our imports. If they can add one cent to the duty on any article they can add millions, or make the tariff prohibitory. The principle is embodied in the fact, not in the amount. Concede this claim, and the public purse is taken from the popular branch and given into the keeping of an authority not directly responsible to the people. Concede this, and you declare that the constitutional provision above quoted is the merest nonsense. Why should bills for raising revenue originate in the House if they may be annulled by the treaty-making power? Any treaty that undertakes to deal with the tariff is a direct and positive invasion of the highest prerogative of the House, and as such is an invasion of the rights of the people, whose only direct representatives compose the House.

The laws relating to the commercial policy and the revenues of the Government require constant alterations, increasing the duty upon one article and diminishing it upon another, and changing articles from the free to the duty list, and others from that to the free list. If these laws are found at any time to be bad or defective, they can be amended or repealed; but if these subjects are taken from the jurisdiction of the law-making power and regulated entirely by treaty, Congress loses its power, becomes perfectly impotent, and no change can be effected, whatever the emergency, while the treaty is in force. By such a policy the customs and revenues of the country, as well as the constitutional rights and privileges of the House of Representatives, may be put by the treaty-making power beyond the possible reach and control of any subsequent Congress.

If a reciprocity treaty can be made with Canada, as now proposed, they can be made with all other nations, and then all power to originate revenue bills by the House of Representatives will be absorbed, and the only duty left for Congress with reference to this matter will be to regulate excise duties and levy direct taxes upon the people. If you can do what is now proposed to be done by treaty, then every act and thing relating to our foreign intercourse can be done in the same way, and the House of Representatives may as well be abolished.

Sir, if at any time it is deemed proper or expedient to enter into any reciprocal commercial arrangements with the Dominion of Canada, or with any other foreign power, let it be done in the usual way, by a law of Congress, and not by a palpable violation of the Constitution and the forcing of powers upon the President and Senate which are not claimed by them and which are not granted by that instrument.

But, sir, I fear I have already wearied the House in the discussion of this point, for it seems to me that it can hardly require either discussion or argument to satisfy an intelligent man that trade, agriculture, and manufactures are pre-eminently the subjects for legislative supervision and control, and not for diplomatic intrigue and treaty stipulations.

Now, sir, in further elucidation of the doctrines I contend for and as bearing upon this point, let us next inquire into

THE MANNER IN WHICH TREATIES ARE NEGOTIATED AND MADE.

One of the strongest arguments, and one which may be urged with great reason and force, against the policy and expediency of reciprocity treaties is the manner in which they are negotiated and finally consummated. It has been truly said that the very highest art of the diplomat is secrecy; consequently the people are always kept in profound ignorance of all the terms and negotiations respecting a foreign treaty or compact. When it is agreed upon by the agents of the Government, it is taken up, discussed, and considered, and either confirmed or rejected in a secret session of the Senate. The people have no opportunity to discuss and examine the merits of it or the reasons upon which it is founded, and oftentimes the first knowledge they have of it is when the Executive makes proclamation of its final ratification, and that it has, upon the subjects embraced in it, become the supreme law of the land.

It seems to me that the plain principles of prudence and common sense, as well as the provisions of the Constitution, imperatively demand that questions of such magnitude and vast importance should not be considered and settled in secret, or by any power less than the whole executive and legislative authority of the Government. It seems to me that a question which involves the revenues of the Government and the prosperity of all our industrial interests should be presented to the people and their Representatives, and examined and discussed in Committee of the Whole House, where every word and clause can be carefully considered and thoroughly criticised, where amendments can be offered, and where the wants and interests of the people of every section of the country can be ascertained and crystallized into law.

Now, sir, let us consider, in this connection,

THE HISTORY OF ATTEMPTED RECIPROCITY TREATIES TO WHICH OUR GOVERNMENT HAS BEEN A PARTY.

Fortunately for the credit of the statesmanship of this country the history of our diplomacy furnishes but few instances where attempts even have been made to draw us into these entangling alliances; and the utter failure which has always attended such efforts saves us in the present crisis from being overwhelmed and crushed by the weight and power of bad precedent and evil example.

In 1803, under Mr. Jefferson, our Government negotiated with the First Consul of France for the purchase of Louisiana, and in the treaty of cession from France to the United States, in order to avoid war and to adjust and settle large demands which France claimed to hold against us, "we agreed to permit French and Spanish vessels, loaded only with the products and manufactures of said countries, to trade in all the ceded ports of that territory for twelve years, in the same manner as our own vessels, and also agreed that no other nation should enjoy the same privileges." This certainly cannot be claimed as a precedent for the legislation now asked for, as it will be seen on a moment's reflection that in this case there was no reciprocity, as France granted no special rights to us, either under her revenue laws or in any other manner, for the privileges granted to her; but it was simply the payment of a debt, or the settlement of a doubtful claim which France pretended to hold against us, to avoid a threatened war which we had every reason to believe would come upon us unless the matter was amicably adjusted in this way.

The first real attempt at reciprocity by our Government was in 1837, when Mr. Wheaton negotiated the Zollverein treaty with Prussia already referred to. In that treaty it was proposed for the small consideration of a slight reduction of the duty on American tobacco, and an agreement that the duties on rice, cotton, and lard should not be increased, to grant Prussia a large reduction of duties on some five hundred different articles, provided they were the growth or production of the German principalities.

That treaty was palpably unequal and unjust to our Government, and would, if it had been carried into effect, have cut off nearly the entire revenue arising from our trade with that great and flourishing nation.

Now, sir, although it was defeated and repudiated by the people of this country, yet that attempted treaty stands out in the history of our diplomacy as an admonition and warning, and reveals the dangers into which we may be plunged if we listen to the wailings of impostors or suffer ourselves to be led away by the appeals of British agents or the sophistry of free-traders from New York and Louisiana, who are now attempting to force this unwise and dangerous legislation upon the country.

Since the time that treaty was negotiated the spirit of commercial enterprise and the inevitable laws of trade have compelled the German states to reduce the duty on our tobacco and place our cotton upon the free list, thus enabling us to reap all the benefits sought to be secured to us by that treaty without being obliged to bear any of the burdens which it imposed.

As I have already remarked, during the whole history of our Government there have been but few attempts made to negotiate reciprocity compacts with foreign nations, and those that have been made have generally miscarried so that the only treaty of the kind which has ever been fully consummated and gone into operation was the treaty with Canada in 1854, which died a violent death at the hands of the people at the end of twelve years, that being the very first moment it came into their power.

Vigorous and determined efforts have been made by ambitious and designing men from time to time to thrust this curse upon the country, but they have all with that single exception been repudiated by the people and rejected by the Senate. And the bitter experience of our people, and especially the farmers and wool-growers of my State, under the Canada treaty during the twelve years it was in existence, was not such as to make them very anxious to repeat the experiment.

Let us now inquire, Mr. Chairman,

WHAT LED TO THE TREATY OF 1854.

When the treaty of 1854 was entered into its design and purpose was not alone commercial reciprocity, but its authors and advocates fondly hoped that it would prove the gateway to annexation; but the cold-blooded malignity manifested by the people of Canada during the dark days of our civil war dissipated all such golden anticipations, and convinced the people of the United States that a sordid love of gain and desire for filthy lucre were the motives which actuated them and not a solicitude for our welfare or a wish to aid us in paying the taxes and bearing the burdens of our Government. When the roar of the terrible conflict shook the Republic from center to circumference, when the loyal men of the North were grappling with treason on the battle-fields of the South and the whole land was red with the blaze of war, the people of Canada, in warm sympathy with the rebellion, in envious hatred of the Union and our Government and anxious for our humiliation and dismemberment, mocked at our fears, laughed at our calamities, cheered and encouraged our enemies, harbored and cherished a gang of hell-born desperadoes and assassins, and sent them forth to burn our cities, destroy our property, murder our citizens, and spread contagion and disease among our people.

As was eloquently said by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] when speaking of Canada, "she has been the asylum of our foes in war, and the base of illicit operations against our revenue system in time of peace."

While I am moved by no spirit of malice or revenge toward the people of Canada in my opposition to this measure, and while I can consent, perhaps, that they may be forgiven, yet I believe there is no law, human or divine, which demands that we should forget their barbarous and inhuman conduct, or the fact that they succored and protected the cowardly murderers of our people and the base and infamous assassins whose career of crime and wickedness finds no parallel in the darkest and bloodiest annals of the world's history.

While we are willing, in our great magnanimity, to live on terms of peace and friendship with them, and condescend even to traffic with them, we do most earnestly protest against the adoption of any line of policy which shall give them commercial advantages over our own people, or entering into any treaty or compact with them which shall grant privileges to them not enjoyed by other nations. We are willing they should live and prosper, but not at our expense or by our partial generosity.

We will next inquire as to

THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF THE TREATY OF 1854 WITH CANADA UPON THE LABORERS, PRODUCERS, AND MANUFACTURERS OF THIS COUNTRY, AND ESPECIALLY UPON THOSE OF MY OWN STATE, AND THE REASONS WHY WE SHOULD NOT REPEAT IT.

In the first place, sir, I maintain that no fair commercial reciprocity treaty, which shall be just and equal in its operation, can now be made between this Government and the Dominion of Canada.

The present situation, circumstances, and the condition of the two countries are such as to render it not only impracticable, but absolutely impossible.

The comparative high rates of interest which our people, who possess but small capitals, are compelled to pay on loans, without which they are unable to carry on their business; the almost unprecedented taxes to which they are subjected; the higher revenue and customs duties they are forced to pay on nearly every article they export or consume; the enormous public debts, municipal, State, and national, incurred in putting down the rebellion, and which now cripple and paralyze the business and industries of the country; and the far worse curse of a democratic Congress continually tinkering with the currency and threatening free trade, all combine to unsettle trade, frighten capital, increase the cost of production, and greatly augment the burdens of the laborer, producer, and manufacturer; while in Canada interest is low, taxes are light, revenue duties merely nominal, and labor cheap in consequence of which, under such a treaty, they would be enabled to do as they did under the treaty of 1854, glut our markets with Canadian and British productions and manufactures and defy competition.

Sir, this proposition can be made no plainer by argument or illustration.

It is simply absurd and preposterous for any man to contend for a moment that our people can now enter into a free exchange of agricultural productions and manufactures with the people of Canada on any basis of justice or equality. And this proposition is made perfectly apparent and manifest by the fact that manufacturers are many of them moving their works and machinery from the States to Canada, in order to escape the taxation imposed here and to avail themselves of cheap wages and cheap materials found there.

Every consideration, therefore, of prudence and self-preservation protests against it, while there is no principle or policy of national comity or individual ethics which demands the sacrifice we are now asked to make.

It was said by a distinguished statesman, when speaking of this subject, that "the utmost stretch of the Divine command is to love our neighbor as ourselves, and I can certainly see nothing in personal duty or public policy which should lead us to prefer our Canadian neighbors to our own people."

The people of Canada have always shown a good degree of cunning and shrewdness, and some little statesmanship, in their persistent efforts to create and foster this spirit of reciprocity in certain sections of our country. And while they are always sure to provide themselves with the lion's share, they manage to so disguise their real purpose and intent as to deceive the simple and confiding.

The fact that the treaty of 1854 was abrogated by a notice given by this Government at the earliest possible moment at which it could be done under the terms of it would seem to furnish the very strongest presumptive evidence that could reasonably be required by any man of its damaging and injurious effects upon the business and industries of the country; but fortunately more testimony is at hand, so that we are not obliged to rely on inferences or presumptions.

Mr. BLAINE, in the letter from which I have before quoted, speaking of the effects of that treaty, and the efforts of the Canadian authorities to negotiate a new one, says:

> It is well known that the authorities of Canada are trying to negotiate with our Government for a reciprocity treaty, which, like its illustrious predecessor and namesake, maintains the reciprocity all on one side.
> The treaty of that name which was terminated in 1867 was cruelly oppressive to the people of this country, and inflicted upon our Government during the eleven years of its existence the loss of millions of dollars.
>
> It presented the very singular anomaly of giving to the Canadians the control in our own markets of certain leading articles on terms far more favorable than our own people had ever enjoyed.

The late Senator Foot, of my State, once said, in speaking of that treaty:

> The very title of the treaty was a misnomer. There was nothing reciprocal about it; it produced no reciprocity of benefits between the two governments. It was beneficial to one only of the contracting parties and injurious to the other. Such were the practical results of its operation.

Senator Farwell, of Maine, said:

> It seems to me to be a treaty made expressly and for no other purpose than to promote the industries of Canada to the injury of the industries of the United States.

The New York Times, in an able article upon the effect of the treaty upon the agricultural and manufacturing interests of this country, about the time notice was given of its abrogation by our Government, said:

> There never was a more perfect misnomer than the designation of this agreement as a treaty of reciprocity. It never has secured a reciprocity worthy of the name. From the beginning the benefit was chiefly on one side, and by provincial management since it has now become almost completely so. By its original terms it admitted nearly all the productions of Canada into the United States free of duty, and gave them free transit abroad, while our manufactured articles introduced into Canada have, from the outset, been subjected to import duties; and within the last few years these duties have been doubled on many of the most important articles, so that now there is a virtual prohibition.
> That prohibition is extended just so far as it can operate to build up the manufacturing interests of Canada. Where it cannot so operate it gives place to a system of duties expressly designed to produce as much revenue as possible, whereby internal improvements can be sustained which shall divert the carrying trade of the Northwestern States as much as possible from our own great thoroughfares. The treaty has been equally one-sided in its operations in respect to agricultural products. We have opened the way for Canada to the grain markets of the world and enabled her to compete, on equal terms, with our own farmers. Without that license on our part she would have been utterly unable to maintain any such competition. This agricultural reciprocity is therefore an immense advantage to Canada, but to us an unqualified injury. As in manufacturing and agricultural interests, so in commercial.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to weary the patience of the House with long tables of statistics and minute mathematical calculations, but the figures showing the state and condition of our trade with Canada during the time of the existence of the treaty of 1854 are far more eloquent and convincing than any language I can utter in opposition to the renewal of such a scheme.

In 1850, only about three years before that treaty went into operation, our exports to Canada amounted in round numbers to $9,500,000, and our imports from Canada to $5,600,000; while in 1864, the last year of the treaty, our exports to Canada amounted to $29,356,572, and our imports from that country the same year to $54,714,383. In 1859 we exported to Canada certain manufactured articles valued at $4,185,516, while in 1863 we exported of the same articles only $1,510,-862. In 1854, the year the treaty took effect and went into operation, the imports from Canada to the United States, composed of the manufactures and productions of Canada, amounted only to the sum of $19,383,455, while in 1866, the year the treaty was abrogated, they amounted to $39,582,505. And the manufactures and productions of foreign countries imported into this country from Canada amounted in 1854 to $8,927,560, but in 1866, under the operation of the treaty, they had increased to the enormous sum of $54,714,383. While the amount exported from the United States to Canada, of both domestic and foreign manufacture and production, was in 1854 $24,566,860, in 1866 it had only increased to $28,994,814.

Thus we see that during the time the treaty was in operation Canada increased her exports to this country from $28,311,015 up to $94,296,888, while our exports to Canada increased only about $4,-427,954. In other words, while we during those twelve years gave Canada a free market for her products to the amount of $240,000,000, she only gave us a free market for our products to the amount of $124,000,000.

Under that treaty the quantity of grain exchanged between the two countries was nearly equal, while in 1874, after the treaty was abrogated, the balance in our favor was over $13,000,000.

The exports of fish from Canada to the United States nearly doubled during the existence of that treaty, "while our tonnage engaged in the cod fisheries in 1854, amounting to 102,194 tons, had dwindled, at the close of 1866, down to 42,796 tons, or a loss of over one-half, uncompensated for by any considerable improvement in the distant mackerel fisheries." "From this low state, in consequence of harassing and perpetual annoyances, equal in olden time to provocations of actual war, our fishermen have not even yet been able to recover." "When the treaty began the balance of trade was eight millions annually in our favor, and at the end the balance to be paid in specie was thirty millions in one year against us. That was a reciprocity which cannot be dwelt upon with composure, or that we can afford to have repeated."

Again, sir, during the eleven or twelve years that the treaty of 1854 was in operation we received the products of Canada, which came in free by the terms of that compact, amounting to the enormous sum of $178,500,184, while the people of Canada received only to the amount of $118,853,972 of ours.

During the same time dutiable articles, the product of the United States, were exported to Canada from this country to the amount of $83,347,019, while the dutiable articles sent here by the people of Canada amounted to only $7,750,482.

Now, sir, if we examine this subject as relating to the revenues of the Government we shall find that Canada was equally fortunate in reaping the benefits while we bore the burdens. During the existence of that treaty we paid customs duties to Canada amounting to $16,802,968, while we received from her during that time only $930,447.

If no treaty had existed we should have collected of her during that twelve years, of customs duties, $16,373,880, and she would have collected of us only $2,650,890. From this calculation it appears that during the time of its existence that treaty released from the payment of customs duties a total sum of $42,333,257 in value more of Canadian goods than it did of American, and that it also enabled Canada to escape the payment of $13,772,990, being the balance between $16,373,880 and $2,650,890, in customs duties to us which she would have been compelled to pay if no such treaty had existed.

Now, sir, what can gentlemen say in favor of a treaty which has had the effect upon our exports, imports, and revenues which these figures clearly and conclusively show?

Prior to that treaty the trade with the provinces had always been in our favor, and as population on each side of the line had increased this trade had also increased, and always to our advantage.

But the treaty went into operation, population and business continued to increase as rapidly as before, but all at once the whole trade changed, and instead of exporting $3 and importing $1, we were importing from that country, for the first time in our history, more than we exported to it.

The population of Canada is probably less than one-fifteenth that of the United States, yet with her low taxes and cheap labor she raises more cattle, and horses, and sheep, and wheat, and barley, and oats, and potatoes, and butter, in proportion to her population than we do, which enables her people to undersell us in our own markets and save a fair margin for profits.

Again, sir, owing to the reasons I have already stated, the people of Canada can now raise wool and all other products, including those of the dairy, much cheaper than we can. So that the consequences of such a treaty would be to admit into our markets free of duty all the products of their fields, forests, and mines, with barely one or two exceptions, and thus exclude from the benefits of our protective tariff the farmers and producers of the United States, wound the agricultural interests of the country, and at the same time rob us of twenty millions or more of revenue annually.

The policy of this Government has always been to protect by a wise and judicious tariff our own producers and manufacturers. This has secured us prosperity and given us our present high rank among the nations of the earth.

To enter into such a treaty as is proposed would be to abandon this wholesome doctrine of our fathers, give away our revenue, open our ports to free trade, drive our own people from our markets, and build up the interests of Canada at the expense of our own laborers and producers.

Another thing, sir: the very moment such a treaty is consummated as gentlemen are now seeking to curse us with, as was said by Senator MORRILL, the Dominion Parliament will put Great Britain on an equality with the United States in regard to duties upon its imports. Free trade in American manufactures of iron, steel, lead, cotton, and wool means also the free admission of British products coming under these heads. The natural result of such an arrangement would be to make Canada the port of entry to the United States, by which British manufactures to the amount of millions of dollars would, in more or less modified form, find their way without payment of duty into this country.

The effect of such a treaty would be to crowd into our markets an avalanche of all kinds of articles made of Russian, Swedish, and English iron and steel, boots and shoes made from foreign leather, slate from Nova Scotia and Wales, and monuments and ornaments of all kinds manufactured from Italian marble, which, by means of their cheap labor and open ports, they would be able to sell in our markets at prices which would practically deprive our own people of all fair and just competition.

Not only this, but if we should continue to collect duties on iron and wool from other nations, and Canada should continue to admit them free, she would be able to sell in our markets all goods composed of these two articles cheaper than we could by any possibility afford them, and the only relief from such an evil would be the infliction of a greater by entering into like compacts with all other nations with whom we have commercial relations, which of course would destroy all our revenues and compel us to resort to direct taxation. If, sir, the men who are now exerting all their energies and directing all their efforts to creating an external trade, building up foreign markets, and increasing our carrying trade, would bestow some thought upon the subjects of production, manufactures, and our own markets at home, they would, I think, meet with far better success, and if they did not receive so many flattering encomiums from the free-traders of Great Britain and France they would deserve and receive the approbation and gratitude of their own people.

If by wise and judicious legislation we build up our own manufactures, increase the productive power and capacity of our own country, and create and enlarge our home markets for the consumption of our own products, foreign trade and the demands of foreign markets will inevitably keep pace with our domestic growth and prosperity, and will require neither aid nor anxiety from us.

It is claimed and argued with great persistency and an apparent show of plausibility that our manufacturers would be vastly benefited and reap great advantages from a reciprocal trade with Canada for the reason that, as Canada is a manufacturing country, under the influence and operation of free commercial intercourse it would become a great market for our manufactures.

If there was a reasonable prospect of accomplishing such a result it might be advisable to repeat the experiment of 1854, but I am confident that the slightest examination of the subject will at once explode this theory and show the utter fallacy of such a claim.

It must be admitted by the most ardent and enthusiastic admirers and supporters of this reciprocity theory that, owing to the close and intimate political connections between Canada and Great Britain, Canada can never by any arrangement admit any article from the United States free of duty without being obliged to give Great Britain the privilege of importing the same article upon precisely the same terms.

The result, therefore, would be, that instead of our manufacturers having a monopoly of trade in the Canadian markets they would be compelled to compete with the cheap labor, cheap capital, and low taxes of England and Canada combined, not only in the markets of the Provinces but also in our own, which would be thrown open to free trade by this specious and one-sided arrangement which gentlemen persist in misnaming reciprocity.

It is also urged by the advocates of this system that a commercial treaty with Canada which would enable us to purchase of them all raw materials free of duty would increase our trade and build up our commerce. In my judgment, no such result could possibly follow.

By such an arrangement, instead of increasing our trade it would simply be a diversion of it from our own producers, from customers who now buy most of their wares of us, to those who would be the most unlikely to buy anything of us in return. It would be only buying so much more in one place and so much less in another.

If the people of Connecticut should, under a reciprocity treaty, go to Canada and purchase a million bushels of potatoes, that would be no increase of trade, because they would in consequence of that purchase buy one million bushels less in New Hampshire and Vermont, and the people of those two States would therefore have so much less money to pay for manufactured articles to the people of Connecticut or some other State.

Since the treaty of 1854 was abrogated the markets of New York and the Atlantic States have demanded thirty-two million bushels of wheat annually, which has been furnished by our western farmers, but which before that came from Canada.

So it would be with respect to all other products of which our people have a surplus for the market. If Massachusetts and New York should purchase their lumber and butter and cheese and wool and potatoes and hay from Canada, it would not increase the general trade and business of the country, but only cut off the market for that amount of produce from Vermont, New Hampshire, and Maine.

As has been well said by an intelligent writer upon this subject, "by buying of Canadians rather than of our own people timber and agricultural produce we diminish by so much the wealth and population of this country, and by so much lessen the trade we now have with the home producers of those articles."

Again, the home producers spend all the money they receive from the sale of their produce with us, while the people of Canada, no matter how much we purchase of them, would buy of England, because they can manufacture most articles cheaper than we can, and can therefore undersell us.

There is another matter of considerable importance which should not be lost sight of, but be considered in this discussion as having a bearing upon this subject, and that is the fact that Canada has great natural advantages as a manufacturing country in the shape of superior water-powers, cheap labor and materials, and low taxes.

Adopt this policy of so-called reciprocity, and manufacturing establishments, spurred up by the prospect of an equal chance in our vast and increasing markets, would start up all over Canada. Capital and skilled labor would flow in from England, France, and Germany, by the aid of which they would be enabled not only to supply their own markets but ours also with articles cheaper than we could possibly produce or manufacture them.

The same injury to manufacturers would follow if wool and woolen goods were included in your reciprocity scheme. They would be smuggled through Canada in quantities sufficient to control our markets, and we should in effect be granting to Great Britain the same privileges of free trade in respect to those articles that are given to Canada, thereby diminishing our foreign trade and greatly reducing our revenue.

In short, sir, in any view I have been able to take of this matter, and I have endeavored to look at it candidly and with an earnest desire to arrive at the truth, I am thoroughly convinced that any arrangement of so-called commercial reciprocity which we could possibly make with Canada would prove an advantage to her and a decided injury to us.

Now, sir, in addition to all this, what assurances have you that Canada would not as soon as she had secured the advantages of this proposed treaty do as she did under the old one, increase the duty on every article you import to her markets except those made free by the terms of the treaty, and in this way not only rob you of your revenue but compel you to pay back to her in extra duties all she may lose on the few articles she permits you to send to her markets free of customs dues.

I now desire briefly to call the attention of the House to the effect of such a treaty upon the agricultural and manufacturing interests of my own State, which I believe will fully and clearly explain why the people of Vermont feel so deeply interested in this subject, and why on all occasions they so earnestly oppose all schemes of this kind.

In doing this I beg leave to refer to a report made by the committee on manufactures to the Legislature of Vermont in 1874, while this same project was pending before Congress in the form of a proposed treaty. I quote from that report because the objections to this scheme and the reasons why it should not be adopted are set forth by the able chairman (Dr. Guild) in a much clearer and more forcible manner than I could hope to do it.

In that report the committee say:

It will be observed, by a careful examination of the proposed treaty, that the articles therein mentioned enter, either wholly or in part, into a very large proportion of the manufactures now carried on in this State. The free exchange, therefore, of such articles between the respective countries under the treaty would necessarily bring the items specified in direct competition with our home productions.

The problem for your committee to discuss is, therefore, whether the branches of manufacture now carried on in this State can be carried on at so much lower rates in Canada as to seriously injure this great and paramount home interest.

The first important point that presents itself is the relative price of labor in the two countries. Labor enters into the production of all manufactures in a greater or lesser degree. In some branches it is the leading and almost the only item of expense. Taking the marble and slate interests as an example, the immense capital required to carry them on is almost entirely absorbed by labor. The items of machinery and buildings are, comparatively, of trifling importance. In other branches it enters in a somewhat lesser degree, but is ever a question of such magnitude as to deserve the most careful consideration.

It is an unquestioned fact that skilled labor in Canada is much cheaper than with us, averaging, according to the best information that your committee can obtain, at least 33⅓ per cent. less than in the States. On the borders the percentage is somewhat less, but in the interior it exceeds that figure. With the more common grades of labor the percentage is a little lower, but the fact is apparent that Canadian manufacturers can obtain their labor at one-third less in amount than the rates paid in the States for the same grade of work.

Machinery used for manufacturing purposes is largely an element of absorption of capital in many of our important manufacturing enterprises. Our cotton and woolen mills expend much of their capital in providing expensive but necessary machinery. Our Canadian brethren can obtain such machinery from Great Britain free of duty, which will place it at much lower rates to them than we can possibly obtain it.

Material for manufacturing purposes which we now import from Great Britain under a heavy duty can be obtained in the Dominion of Canada from the same source practically free of duty. This directly discriminates on all imported material for manufacturing purposes in favor of Canada to an amount varying in proportion to the amount of duty paid thereon.

They have, then, in Canada the advantage of cheap labor, cheap machinery, and cheap material for manufacturing purposes; to which, if we add the item of cheap lumber, which so largely enters into a great variety of manufactures, it places this great interest of the State of Vermont at such a disadvantage as to practically close the doors of a large proportion of our now flourishing manufacturing establishments.

By way of illustration of the preceding argument we will take the article of Nova Scotia slate, which now pays a duty of 35 per cent.

Labor is one of the largest elements of capital required in the production of slate, and yet labor is so much cheaper in the Canadian provinces that the duty of 35 per cent. but barely excludes its importation now.

If we remove that duty and free its importation of all restrictions it would utterly destroy that important branch of home industry in which so large an amount of capital is now invested and which gives employment to a large, intelligent, and thrifty class of population.

So, in the manufacture of leather in all its varieties, the Canadians could import their hides from England or South America, if they chose, free of duty, while their vast hemlock forests furnish a cheap and practically inexhaustible supply of bark which, in connection with the reduced price of skilled labor, would give them an advantage that no tannery in the State could long contend against.

Every article into the composition of which iron and steel largely enter and on which we pay so heavy a duty, such as axes, hoes, plows, shovels, &c., could be produced in Canada, with their present arrangement with Great Britain, at so low a rate as to render their production unprofitable here; or they could even be manufactured in Birmingham or Sheffield, ground and tempered there, and receiving a few final touches before they crossed our northern border, come in as articles of Canadian manufacture, in competition with articles which, if imported direct, would be subject to heavy duty.

In the manufacture of woolen goods, the matter was deemed of so much importance by the National Association of Wool Manufacturers that, at their annual convention, held in New York, the executive committee presented the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That the National Association of Wool Manufacturers reaffirm the resolution in relation to the proposed reciprocity treaty with Canada, passed by the government of the association on the 25th of June, it being more and more manifest to the association that the proposed treaty would be prejudicial to the wool industry of the country."

The resolutions referred to, which were adopted in June, hold that the promise of reciprocal advantages from the free exchange of certain manufactures is a delusion; that the free exchange of manufactured products would end in the suppression of our own production; that the American farmer cannot compete with the Canadian in the production of the kind of wool which forms the specialty of Canada; that the admission of Canadian wool free of duty would arrest the now rapidly increasing development of the most promising branches of American sheep-husbandry, namely, that of producing at the same time mutton and combing or worsted wool; that this branch of sheep-husbandry, which had hardly an existence here at the time of the repeal of the former reciprocity treaty, received an impulse from the protective tariff which gives promise of an abundant domestic production; and that the offered boon of free Canadian wools would be dearly gained at the certain cost of the loss of our own production of combing wools and the danger of the revision of a tariff satisfactory to both branches of the woolen industry.

There are many other branches of manufacture which occur to your committee which the ratification of the proposed treaty would similarly affect, some of them perhaps in a lesser degree than those referred to; but, in every branch which they have investigated, the effect would be unfavorable, with the single exception of patented and proprietary articles.

We have thus far discussed this question only in its connection with the Dominion of Canada and the relations of the same with Great Britain, but there is nothing in the proposed treaty prohibiting Canada opening her ports free to the world, and extending her facilities for buying free material for manufacturing purposes to every quarter of the globe—a proceeding which would require us to follow in her wake and make our ports free, or disastrously close many of our manufacturing establishments.

Your committee have therefore come to the conclusion, after a careful survey of the whole ground, that the ratification of the proposed reciprocity treaty would have an unfavorable effect upon the manufacturing interests of the State generally, ruining many of its most flourishing manufacturing establishments and crippling the remainder to such an extent as to render them wholly unprofitable.

Now, sir, the reasons and arguments presented in that report are as potent and conclusive against the measures now proposed as they were in 1874 against the unjust and unequal treaty then sought to be forced upon us, and, as it seems to me, are perfectly decisive of the whole question under consideration, and should lead every friend of American industry and enterprise to vote against it.

In my district, sir, there are millions of dollars invested and thousands of men employed in the quarrying and manufacture of marble and slate. Under the present tariff the producers can barely stand in our markets against foreign competition, and the consummation of this reciprocity scheme or a single shilling's reduction of the tariff upon these articles would close up every quarry, shut up every mill and shop, and throw thousands of men now engaged in their production out of employment.

As the representative on this floor of the men who own and operate those quarries and mills, and the men who are dependent upon the wages they earn in them to support themselves and their families, as well as on behalf of the farmers and manufacturers of my State, I desire to enter my earnest protest against taking the first step in this ruinous policy.

I propose now to show that

THE DUTIES UPON IMPORTS FROM CANADA INTO THIS COUNTRY DO NOT ENHANCE THE PRICE TO THE CONSUMER, AS CLAIMED BY THE ADVOCATES OF RECIPROCITY.

In support of this proposition I do not propose to weary the patience of the House with any arguments of my own, but simply to present the opinions and testimony of men whose official positions under the Government and whose observation and experience in the revenue service on the Canadian frontier entitle them to consideration and credit.

In writing to the Treasury Department in regard to the abrogation of the old treaty of 1854, the collector of customs at Plattsburgh, New York, under date of June 8, 1868, wrote:

I submit the following statement as an illustration applicable very generally to all importations made into this district. The past spring large quantities of potatoes have been imported into this district, and the duty of 25 cents per bushel, gold, paid by the Canadian seller or exporter, as the sale has generally been perfected on the United States side of the boundary lines, duties paid. The American speculators buying at such prices as to successfully compete with sellers in the Boston market, does the consumer of the imported potatoes pay the duty to the United States when he purchases the potatoes at the same price that another pays for the American product? If the Canadian cannot export his goods at a profit, or the speculator cannot buy in the foreign market and pay the duty at a price that he can sell at in the American market at a profit, he does not purchase. The same can be said in relation to grain, and in fact of nearly all importations into this district.

The collector at Cleveland, Ohio, under date of October 20, 1868, wrote:

The chief articles of importation at this port are lumber and barley. The lumber market here is entirely controlled by the Saginaw market, and Canadian markets do not in the least influence us. The Canada market, to a great extent, is controlled by American markets, and the result is that the Canadian producer has to conform his prices to our market figures here; this virtually makes the Canadian pay the duties on foreign merchandise imported here, as he is compelled to sell his goods so as to enable the importer to pay the duties, and still not overshoot the American market. As the demand in Canada is not equal to the production the producer is compelled to look to a foreign market for sale of his merchandise, and for this reason he must necessarily regulate his prices by that market to sell. The purchaser, in buying, always makes allowance for the duties, and the Canadian, in his sales, deducts the amount, and thus in reality pays duty himself.

The collector at Oswego, New York, has this to say upon the subject, under date of July 23, 1868:

The effect of the abrogation of the reciprocity treaty, in my opinion, has been the addition of several millions of dollars to the United States revenue at the expense of our Canadian friends.

There never appeared to me to be any true reciprocity in it, but rather the payment of a very large sum to them for something that was of very little benefit to us. As it now is, the import duty is paid by the Canada producer or manufacturer, and not by the American consumer. Any reduction in the rate of duties on importations from Canada would benefit them just as much, and would not lower the market value here.

The collector at Buffalo, New York, makes the following statement, under date of December 18, 1868:

The termination of the treaty of reciprocity between the United States and the Canadian Provinces, and the subsequent imposition of duties under the tariff enactments on articles of importation, has been a source of large revenue to the United States Government, the burden of which has been borne by the foreign producer or manufacturer; and any abatement or reduction of duties would, of course, redound to the advantage of such producer or manufacturer, and would not tend to reduce the value of the articles imported into this market.

These are the concurrent opinions of four collectors at the leading offices where the revenues were then and are now collected on the northern frontier. They are the statements of men who are brought into daily contact with the realities of the case, who know whereof they affirm, and whose testimony should be allowed to have controlling weight in the determination of this question. They are the utterances of men who could have had no possible motive to deceive or misrepresent, and who daily saw the practical working of our revenue system as affected by our protective tariff.

In addition to this I desire to call attention to the statement of W. Martin Jones, United States consul at Clifton, who, under date of December 28, 1868, wrote to the Treasury Department as follows:

The amount of exports, with the exception of lumber, from the provinces to the United States can have little effect upon the markets in the latter country, and the result is that the duty paid on such exports is borne wholly by the producers, who in receiving the benefits of the markets of the country are thereby compelled to bear a portion of the burden contributing to the support of its institutions.

Who does not know that grain is no higher now under protection than it was from 1854 to 1866 under free trade?

The Canadian farmer who brings his wheat or any other production across the line to our market is obliged to sell it at the same price charged by our people or he cannot sell it at all, because it is our crop that controls the market price and not his. And if you compare the prices of clothing, agricultural implements, and manufactures of iron, cotton, and wool to-day with those paid for the same articles in 1857, you will find that they have been reduced at least one-half.

The cause of this reduction is manifest and plain. The protection of our domestic industries by legislation since 1861 has built up our manufactures, diversified the employments of our people, raised the price of labor, created a home market for the surplus products of the farmer, saved the cost of transportation by bringing the producer and consumer nearer together, and, until the panic of 1873, provoked and fostered a healthy competition in every branch and avenue of business.

Let me now invite the attention of the House to some few of

THE REASONS WHY THE UNITED STATES CANNOT AFFORD TO ENTER INTO A COMMERCIAL RECIPROCITY TREATY WITH THE DOMINION OF CANADA.

The Government of the United States has always acted upon the theory that the agricultural interests of this country are at least equal in importance to those of every other industry; consequently the products of the soil have been "as zealously protected against undue foreign importations as those of the factory," the shop, the quarry, and the mill.

The following is the tariff of duties now levied by our Government upon importations of agricultural products:

Animals, 20 per cent.; bacon, 2 cents per pound; barley, 15 cents per bushel; beans, 10 per cent.; beef, 1 cent per pound; butter, 4 cents per pound; cheese, 4 cents per pound; corn, 10 cents per bushel; corn-meal, 10 per cent.; fruit, green, 10 per cent.; hops, 5 cents per pound; lard, 2 cents per pound; linseed, 20 cents per bushel; mutton, 20 per cent.; milk, 10 per cent.; oatmeal, ½ cent per pound; oats, 20 per cent.; pease, 10 cents per bushel; pease, for seed, 20 per cent.; pork, 1 cent per pound; potatoes, 15 cents per bushel; poultry, 10 per cent.; rice, cleaned, 2½ cents per pound; rice, uncleaned, 2 cents per pound; rye, 15 cents per bushel; rye flour, 10 per cent.; sausages, 35 per cent.; tallow, 1 cent per pound; tomatoes, 10 per cent.; tow, of hemp or flax, $10 per ton; vegetables, not otherwise provided for, 10 per cent.; wheat, 20 cents per bushel; wool, 25 to 50 per cent.; yarns, 20 to 40 per cent.

Under these duties foreign importations are regulated, our farmers are protected, and agricultural products are largely increased each year in this country.

One of the most prominent reasons why we cannot afford to adopt this so-called reciprocity policy in our commercial relations with Canada is because agriculture is the chief industry of that country, and consequently she always has an excess of nearly every farm product, such as pork, beef, butter, cheese, wool, wheat, corn, rye, barley, oats, pease, and lumber, of which we not only raise sufficient for our own consumption, except perhaps lumber, but have a large surplus for the foreign market.

The effect of reciprocity, such as we are threatened with, would be to throw all this excess of Canadian products upon our markets free, the result of which would be to reduce the price of our labor and impose additional burdens upon our own people for the benefit of foreigners. It would be in effect to release the people of Canada from the payment of twenty millions of revenue annually on their productions and manufactures and tax our own people that amount to make it up; and at a time when we have not that amount of revenue to spare, and when our people are in no mood or condition to be afflicted with direct taxation.

Adopt this policy of free trade and thirty million bushels of wheat will flow into the United States annually from Canada, which is now furnished by western farmers, and the money for which is now retained at home.

Four-sevenths of the articles which Canada exports to the United States are those of a perishable or bulky nature which could not be sent to a distant market, but are consumed here at home, while we export to Canada staple articles, for which there is always a foreign demand or a foreign market, of which Canada, under such a treaty, would get the advantage.

On account of the nearness of Canada to New York, Boston, and Albany, the farmers of the West and South would be practically driven out of those markets by Canadian producers as to all products of which they had a surplus.

The fact is, the geographical position of Canada and the lines of transportation are such that her people can reach the markets of our Eastern and Middle States with many of the productions which would be likely to be covered by such a treaty quicker and cheaper than can be done by our own producers.

Again, the people of Canada produce more wool in proportion to their population than we do, and more than they can consume. They, therefore, require a foreign market for the surplus, while we must manufacture all we raise, or forever abandon sheep husbandry.

On a careful examination of this subject I find that the people of Canada have a surplus of nearly all farm products, and so do we. How, then, could Canada under a reciprocity treaty furnish our farmers a market for their surplus products when her people have a surplus of the same articles, which they are anxious to dispose of.

Many of our agricultural products are admitted into Canada free now under their tariff laws, and can with safety always be so long as they themselves raise more than they consume and have a surplus to sell, and which they can afford to sell cheaper than we can.

Under such a reciprocity treaty, therefore, our exports to Canada would be limited mainly to manufactures, in which field we should meet the cheap labor, cheap raw materials, and exemption from taxation of the producers of Great Britain and Canada combined.

If we could manufacture cheaper than they could we might win, but if we could not we should surely lose.

It will hardly be contended either that this so-called Canadian reciprocity would be beneficial to the people of the South, as most of the staple products of those States which would be likely to be admitted into Canada free under such a treaty are, under the Canadian tariff laws, admitted free now, and from the nature of the products are not likely to be changed.

And as to manufactures the same reasons may be urged, that "they would be chiefly of the same class with those now springing up all through the Southern States, and would therefore seriously interfere with new and profitable branches of industry of the highest merit, which ought not to encounter, and could not safely, any such discouragements" or opposition.

We had already shown that the North, the East, and the West have nothing to gain by reciprocity, and now it appears that the South cannot be benefited by it while Canada admits free of duty hemp, cotton, tobacco unmanufactured, rosin, tar, and turpentine, which compose nearly every article, except sugar, which the people of that section have to export.

The truth is the time has not yet come when we can compete in many kinds of manufactures with cheap money, cheap labor, and a people comparatively free from taxation.

Senator MORRILL put this matter in its true light when he said:

We cannot at present afford to produce horses, cattle, and sheep, wheat, pease, oats, butter, and potatoes at the bottom prices of Canadian markets; nor can we at present venture to accept of the unrestricted competition to which we are invited, even in the manufactures of iron, wood, wool, cotton, and leather, with neighbors where all the labor and most of the raw materials are to be had at far less cost than in the United States, and with neighbors, too, as exempt from taxation as they are from many of the costly improvements and institutions demanded by the people of a large republic and by an enterprising and enlightened age.

Our markets are sustained by forty-two millions of people, beyond all question the largest consumers per capita in the world, and the Canadian markets are sustained by less than four millions of people, loosely strung across a broad continent in an elongated and disjointed belt scarcely more than fifty miles wide, and like our own frontiersmen of early times having limited wants and no luxurious habits. Their markets are few and relatively inferior, offering no advantages to us, while our markets are so many, extensive, and accessible, that they may be always reckoned for nearly all commodities at least 25 per cent. better than those across the border. According to the report of J. N. Larned in 1871, made in compliance with a resolution of Congress, the difference is much greater. From numerous details as to the prices of provisions, groceries, &c., he gives the following results:

Mean ratio of prices in Ontario to prices in New York, 1 to 1.58.
Mean ratio of prices in New Brunswick to prices in Maine, 1 to 1.42.
Mean ratio of prices in the city of Quebec to prices in New York, 1 to 1.43.

The same authority gives the results as to wages of mechanics and farm-laborers, as follows:

Mean ratio of wages in Ontario to wages in New York, 1 to 1.65.
Mean ratio of wages in New Brunswick to wages in Maine, 1 to 1.78.
Mean ratio of wages in the city of Quebec to wages in New York, 1 to 2.38.

It is claimed by the friends of reciprocity that we need the Canadian routes of transportation to get our products and manufactures to market, and that therefore we should be willing to make some sacrifice in order to obtain them.

Why, sir, we are not dependent upon Canada or any other power on earth for transportation routes. We have ample facilities within our own borders to enable us to reach tide-water; and, besides, reciprocity or no reciprocity, Canada would be glad to have us build a canal twenty-nine and one-half miles long from Caughnawaga to Saint Johns, which would give us a complete water line from Chicago to the Atlantic.

The truth is, sir, Canada needs our railroads and lakes more than we do her railroads and canals, because this is the only way she has to the ocean on the East; consequently this is a matter which will regulate itself without any sacrifice on our part to bring it about.

Sir, I would be glad to have the House take notice of another fact in connection with this matter, and that is that the people of this country are not urging this measure upon Congress.

It is not the laborer, the producer, or the manufacturer who comes here and makes this unjust and unreasonable request. No, sir, but it is the emissaries of Great Britain and Canada, the merchants and importers of New York, Boston, and New Orleans, and other large seaports, together with the owners and managers of great lines of transportation who expect to be benefited by it, and are seeking by this means to promote their own interests and add to their already princely fortunes at the expense and ruin of the men who are now, in the honest simplicity of their hearts, earning "their bread by the sweat of their brows" and, in the interest of national prosperity, of humanity, and civilization, developing the resources and enlarging and increasing the productive power and capacity of our country.

Let us next inquire

WHY THE CANADIANS WANT RECIPROCITY.

It will hardly be necessary for me to take up the time of the House in giving the reasons why the people of Canada desire this so-called commercial reciprocity with the United States, because they must be quite evident from what I have already said, and may also be found in the utterances of their leading statesmen and the public press of the Dominion.

The editor of the Ontario Reformer, in a late issue of that paper, says:

Canada, so situated (with reciprocity) that she will have all the advantages of being a State in the American Union, and all the advantages of British connection, without any of the disadvantages of either country, will be in a most happy position. Enjoying free access to the two best markets in the world, without any of their burdens to bear, will make Canada about the best country to emigrate to on the face of the earth.

Hon. Malcom Cameron, in the Toronto Globe, thus grows jubilant over the prospect of another reciprocity; he says:

The best and greatest commercial blessing that heaven could send. It means $5 on a cow, $25 on a horse, $2 on a hog, twenty-five cents on a turkey, twelve cents on a chicken, $2 on a ton of hay, fifteen cents on barley, and twenty-five cents on wheat. It means the opening of the largest and best ship-building business that Canada ever saw, and the resurrection of old Quebec. It means building schooners and barges at every port on Lakes Erie and Ontario, and good wages for ships and sailors; the highest price for everything the (Dominion) farmer sells, and the lowest price for all of the goods he buys.

The prime minister of the Dominion, Hon. A. McKenzie, said in a late speech upon this subject:

I am more convinced now than ever that in the port of Quebec must eventually center the whole commerce of the country. Not merely has Quebec the convenient situation and the vast area necessary for the accommodation of all our own transport, but also for that of the long tier on the Northern United States, which stretch along our border. We are now making great efforts to extend the commercial advantages we possess by the renewal of the reciprocity treaty with our neighbor. While it is of course impossible that all can gain every advantage they each desire in the matter, I am perfectly satisfied that Quebec will reap enormous advantages over all other places under the proposed measure, which will no doubt greatly extend our trade relations on both sides of the line.

But this, sir, I apprehend is sufficient on this point, and I will pass on to consider

THE POLICY OF GRANTING SPECIAL FAVORS, AND WHETHER SUCH AN ARRANGEMENT AS IS PROPOSED WOULD IN ANY MANNER CONFLICT WITH OUR COMMERCIAL OBLIGATIONS TO OTHER NATIONS.

The policy of granting special commercial favors to one nation which we do not to another, if constitutional, is one of very doubtful expediency, and should not be adopted or resorted to except under peculiar circumstances and when it can be done without exciting the jealousy or anger of other nations.

It has, therefore, always been, as it always should be, the almost universal rule and policy among civilized nations to grant "equal favors to all nations with whom they have commerial intercourse." Any other policy would lead to jealousy and troublesome and dangerous complications.

The divine command, which has been defined to be "a constant and perpetual disposition to render to every man his due," is no more imperative and binding than the great law of self-preservation, which applies in all its force to nations as well as to individuals.

Our Government has been preserved and our progress secured by a strict and rigid adherence to this golden rule.

Our policy has been to deal honestly and fairly with all nations; treat them all alike, and demand of them the same rights and privileges which we have been willing to concede on our part. In this way we have been able to promote our own advancement and prosperity, and avoid all troublesome and embarrassing complications and "entangling alliances" with other nations.

With the blazing light of our past history and the grand experience of a century to illuminate our path, it is to me beyond comprehension that sensible, patriotic men can be induced to forsake the beaten path of peace and safety, which we have followed for a century, for a road which must inevitably lead to war, humiliation, and national dishonor.

A wise statesman has said that—

Secret treaties or partial treaties find little favor, and whatever is granted to one party is practically open at once to all others willing to accept of like terms. If England negotiates a treaty with China it is at once duplicated with the United States. If the United States make a treaty with Japan, equal favors are promptly obtained by England and other nations. It is even reckoned, if not discreditable, somewhat beneath the dignity of independent nations to grasp at any exclusive privileges by means of treaties, and a sure mark of imbecility for any nation to grant them.

Such favors as promote national interests, enlightened by the liberal policy of the age, are made by general statute laws, not upon the application of suppliants, and are applied universally; but such favors as cannot be open to so wide an application are entirely withheld from any narrower or more exclusive field of operations. Once these favors, secret and precious, were the bribes of offensive and defensive alliances, but such alliances have proved odious, if not unprofitable, to all mankind. Once they were terms extended or withheld by victors to or from the vanquished. But now it must be either a nation conscious of its weakness and desirous of leaning upon a stronger and more opulent power for support, or one sadly lacking spirit to stand toward all the world in the attitude of erect and broad independence, which can stoop even to those exceptional arrangements called reciprocity treaties, although they are in point of fact only reciprocal in words, and never reciprocal in effects.

The language of Washington in his Farewell Address is to the same effect, and will bear repeating. Hear it:

Harmony and a liberal intercourse with all nations are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand; neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the stream of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing with powers so disposed (in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants, to enable the Government to support them) conventional rules of intercourse the best that present circumstances and natural opinion will permit, but temporary and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another, that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character, that by such acceptance it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not having given more. There can be no greater error than to expect or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

The inquiry as to whether such a treaty would conflict with our commercial obligations with other nations is one of great and commanding importance in this discussion, because if the conclusion of such a compact with the Dominion of Canada would conflict with our present engagements with other nations we ought not to and must not enter into it, however advantageous it may be to us and however much it may be desired by a portion of our people.

This, therefore, is a branch of the subject which invites thought and discussion, and which invokes the most serious and candid consideration in its investigation and settlement.

It will only be necessary, sir, to refer to some few of our existing treaties with leading foreign nations to satisfy the most incredulous that a compact of commercial reciprocity such as was concluded with the Hawaiian Islands, and such as it is now proposed to negotiate with the Dominion of Canada, would compel us by force of the terms of our treaties to extend the same privileges to other nations which we grant to Canada and the Sandwich Islands.

The stipulation in our treaties to which I refer is known among diplomatists as the "favored nation clause," by the terms of which the Government of the United States and the nations with whom it has entered into these treaties have bound themselves that—

If either party shall hereafter grant to any other nation any particular favor in navigation or commerce, it shall immediately become common to the other party freely, when it is freely granted to such other nation, or on yielding the compensation, when the grant is conditional.

This stipulation has been incorporated into nearly all of our treaties now in force, and the solemn obligation it imposes to deal fairly and impartially with all nations, and to grant the same favors to all that we do to any one, rests upon us to-day and a strict observance of it will hereafter be demanded of us by France, Austria, Prussia, Russia, Portugal, Brazil, Denmark, Peru, Italy, Belgium, China, Bolivia, Chili, Hanover, Sardinia, Colombia, Central America, Algiers, Ecuador, Guatemala, Morocco, the Swiss Confederation, Honduras, New Granada, the Hanseatic Republics, Hayti, Venezuela, the Argentine Republic, Costa Rica, Liberia, and the Two Sicilies.

Now, sir, what is to be the effect of such a treaty as gentlemen are now trying to force upon us, upon our commercial relations with these countries, from whom we are now receiving annually millions of revenue?

It seems to me, sir, that there can be but one answer to this question, and that is, that we shall be bound to admit into our ports free of duty every article from those countries, under the "favored nation clause," which we admit from Hawaii and Canada under these so-called reciprocity treaties with them, and that the articles embraced in the free lists of those two powers will, when fully completed, cover a very large and important portion of our commerce with the nations I have named.

With this fact conceded or proved, it requires no argument to demonstrate the dangerous and ruinous consequences of the policy now sought to be inaugurated, by which this House is to be stripped of its constitutional function of laying duties, the Government deprived of a large share of its revenue, and our people subjected to all the annoyances and troubles arising from the angry feelings of slighted and jealous nations.

As was truthfully and eloquently said by the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] in the discussion upon the Hawaiian treaty:

We are now asked to sanction a treaty which takes money out of an almost bankrupt Treasury to feed with bounty aliens across the sea. And how are we to make up the difference? Either by increasing the burdens of our own people, or by continuing the burdens which we desire to lift from their shoulders.

A large portion of the money required to carry on our Government has always been realized from duties laid upon foreign imports, but once adopt this proposed system of so-called reciprocity and two-thirds of the revenue arising from that source would be at once cut off without any corresponding advantages to us, and we should be obliged to raise the money by direct taxation upon the people.

If we are prepared to commit the Government to such a scheme, let us vote for this measure; but if we desire to stand by the old landmarks and avoid all the dangers to which such a system would subject us, let us not be flattered and deceived by the wiles of British agents, the honeyed words of French emissaries, nor the intended threats embodied in the late Canadian tariff, but let us join hands and crush this evil in the bud, protect and save the toiling millions of our country, and deserve the thanks and blessings of posterity.

What I have said respecting the proposed reciprocity treaty with the Dominion of Canada will apply with even greater force to the proposed reciprocal commercial arrangements with France. For some time past agents of the French government, aided by certain importing interests in this country, have been earnestly at work to secure the abrogation of American duties on articles manufactured in that country.

This effort on the part of France to establish free trade with the United States is so clearly and fully explained, and the selfish reasons for it so strongly stated by Gurth, in a recent letter to the Irish World, that I beg leave to quote what he says upon that subject as expressive of my own views and as a conclusive answer to the proposed scheme:

The transition from the import to the export trade has alarmed French capitalists. Two years ago the French senate adopted a resolution providing for the appointment of a commission to investigate "the causes to which may be attributed the sufferings of commerce and industry, and to suggest remedies." The general tenor of the evidence submitted showed that alarm was felt at the rapidly increasing industries of the United States, which were entering into competition with their own manufacturers. To avert it, or in a measure modify it, a determined effort is being made to secure a special treaty on a free-trade basis, whereby French manufacturers may more readily compete with our home industries.

From 1873 to 1878 there has been an enormous decrease in importations from France. During those five years the imports of manufactures of iron and steel decreased from $59,000,000 to $9,000,000. The decrease in importations of manufactures of silk during the same period was over $10,000,000; of wool, $26,000,000; of cotton, over $16,000,000; manufactures of tin, glass, leather, and wood, over $20,000,000; sugar and molasses, nearly $13,000,000; raw wool, $12,000,000; and so I might enumerate a variety of other articles. It is therefore easy to see why French manufacturers desire a general reduction in our tariff. It is also easy to see why our large merchants engaged in the carrying trade should also desire it, and why they should keep men in Congress to protect their interests.

Delegates sent out by English manufacturers to visit manufacturing districts in France report as a reason why French workmen can work for less than the English is because the consumption by the English workman of bacon and ham, cheese, butter, eggs, potatoes, spirits, wines, and tea has increased largely per capita since 1860. For instance, they computed the change as follows: Bacon and ham, from 1.27 pounds in 1860 to 8.26 pounds in 1875; eggs, from 5.83 to 22.62; tea, from 2.67 to 4.44. The moral to be drawn from this is that the manufacturer begrudges an increased habit of consuming good food because it prevented competition with France—the French trade being of more importance than workingmen's stomachs!

Wages in France are exceedingly low. The recent consular report says: "In Bordeaux agricultural laborers are paid from forty-five to sixty cents per diem, without board. In other districts labor ranges from sixty to ninety cents, and," it is added, "skilled labor commands but little, if any, higher than unskilled labor does." Another consul writes: "The nearest statistical information that I can arrive at gives the average daily wages in France at forty-five cents, and the amount of the annual revenue of the typical French family, composed of father, mother, and five children, one of which is old enough to work, at $180."

The hours of labor in France are twelve hours per day, or seventy-two hours per week, and yet the cutlers and forgers at Thiers receive only from fifty to fifty-five cents per day. British manufacturers are restricted by law to fifty-six hours per week. Nine hours per day is the general rule, and the interesting facts brought out regarding the Englishman's ability to consume more food bears out the argument that every reduction in the hours of labor elevates the workman, increases his wants and social standing, and consequently his wages, which necessarily rise with his wants.

To the condition of the French workman some of our law-makers would bring us in their anxiety to increase the profits of those engaged in foreign commerce. To build up our commercial marine is the great desideratum before which all other considerations sink into insignificance. Low wages, squalid living, comfortless homes, scattered families, wives and minor children doomed to profitless labor, as well as no markets at home for our farmers, is not a pleasing picture to look on, but this is the feast to which we are invited.

CONCLUSION.

In conclusion, then, Mr. Chairman, I desire, in the name of the people of my own State, who are almost exclusively engaged in agriculture and manufactures, and in the name of the laboring, producing, and manufacturing millions of our whole country, to enter my earnest protest against the adoption of this policy, and entreat the House to stifle this insidious evil in its inception. The facts and figures I have presented prove to the satisfaction of every unbiased mind that this unjust and pernicious doctrine ought not to become the settled policy of this Government.

The enemies of peace and sound commercial policy, during the Forty-fourth Congress, under the guise of a great national necessity, intensified by a few brilliant flashes of sentimental patriotism and the strong persuasion of a few interested sugar-planters, broke through the strong bulwark of a successful experience and the settled course of action of our Government for nearly a century, and gained an important victory for their favorite doctrine. Amid the dust and smoke raised by the cry of annexation, manifest destiny, and a promised millennium, the champions of the Hawaiian treaty blinded and deceived the unwary and unsuspecting, and succeeded in planting the pernicious seeds of free trade in soil supposed to be congenial, and at a time and place, as they then hoped, propitious for a bountiful harvest.

No sooner is this compact secured in the West than an attempt is made to extend the same policy in another direction, so that articles which cannot be conveniently shipped by Great Britain free of duty to this country by way of the Sandwich Islands can come in through the Province of Canada on the same generous terms. I appeal to you, Mr. Chairman, and to this House to say if it is not time, when these woes follow so fast "that one doth step upon the other's heels," for the friends of protection and American industry to muster their forces and make one grand effort to stay this tide which threatens our laborers, producers, and manufacturers with destruction and our whole country with bankruptcy and ruin.

I have thus endeavored, Mr. Chairman, briefly and clearly as I could to bring to the attention of the House and the country some of the reasons which have controlled my own judgment in coming to the conclusion I have, and that is, not only to vote against such a scheme, but, in the present condition of our country, to oppose what is popularly known as commercial reciprocity and free trade in all forms and under all circumstances. And having, as I honestly believe, performed my duty to my constituents and my country, I now, in perfect confidence of a sure victory over what I conceive to be a serious error and grievous wrong, leave the decision of the question to the good sense, the honest judgment, and the sound discretion of the members of this House.

NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a copy of to-day's New York Tribune, from which I desire to extract the following paragraph:

When Congressman Chittenden draws his pay, with its 10 per cent. of silver, he leaves it in the Treasury as a deposit. A Washington letter says that he has several hundred dollars there, and that he intends to let it accumulate until the pile is as big as a wheelbarrow load, when he declares that he will wheel it into the House of Representatives to show what a nuisance silver money is.

Now, I suggest that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHITTENDEN] should introduce that yoke of oxen to which he has referred, if it has not gone to the butcher's shambles, to pull that load in here, together with the elephant and the mule of which to-day he gave us such a vivid description. [Laughter].

But, sir, after witnessing the highly dramatic scene upon this floor this morning of the irrepressible conflict between the two distinguished gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber, I desire to call the attention of the House and of the country to the subject of national banks. I regard it as one of grave importance, one deeply affecting the integrity of the Government and the rights of every citizen, however humble he may be.

Before proceeding with my remarks I ask the Clerk to read a bill which I had the honor to present early in the session for the consideration of this House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MYERS, by unanimous consent, introduced the following bill:

A bill to retire national-bank circulation and to substitute therefor United States Treasury notes.

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act, all notes of national banks which may be received by the Treasury Department, or by any officer thereof, shall be retained and forwarded to the Secretary of the Treasury at Washington, who shall retain the same, and shall not pay them out again for any purpose whatever; but shall assort them, and whenever the notes of any one bank shall be received to the amount of $1,000, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to immediately notify the officers of such bank and require them to come forward and lift the bonds of the United States pledged for the redemption of said notes, to an amount equal to the said national-bank notes so held, which notes, so redeemed, shall be immediately canceled and destroyed by the Secretary, in accordance with the provision of existing laws.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, whenever the notes of any national bank to the amount of $1,000 or more shall be canceled and destroyed under the provisions of this act, to cause to be printed and made ready for use an amount of Treasury notes, under the form provided in the law of 1862 and subsequent acts authorizing the issue of Treasury notes, exactly equal to the amount of national-bank notes so canceled and destroyed; which said Treasury notes shall be issued and paid out for any and all demands against the Government of the United States, as fast as may be by law authorized and permitted, and when so issued they shall be held and esteemed a legal-tender for all purposes not otherwise previously provided or forbidden by law.

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, whenever the amount of Treasury notes issued, as provided for in the foregoing section, shall accumulate to the amount of $100,000, to expend the same in the purchase of any of the interest-bearing bonds of the United States in the mode and under the form provided by existing laws.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby prohibited, from and after the passage of this act, from receiving on deposit any bonds of the United States as a pledge or security for any further issue of national-bank notes to circulate as currency or money.

SEC. 5. All laws or parts of laws not consistent with this act, or in conflict with it, are hereby repealed.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Chairman, if the sentiment of the American people is united in favor of any one proposition more than another, it is that of opposition to monopolies and chartered corporations, upon which exclusive privileges are conferred, enabling them, under the immunities afforded them, to defy public sentiment and to perpetrate and perpetuate outrages upon the people from which there is no escape. That these monopolies have sprung up within the last sixteen years, hydra-headed, all over the land, and have been fostered by acts of Congress, which have been lavished upon them on all occasions with the most liberal but inconsiderate hand, must be patent to all. But if any there be so obtuse of vision as to fail to see it, they have but to turn their ears in the direction of the public voice to discern the wide-mouthed curses and deep damnations uttered by indignant freemen.

Among these favored and petted corporations, perhaps none in the history of American politics have ever received such favors, privileges, and powers as the national banks; and while it ought not to be a matter of surprise that the disgusted and indignant people now call for their demolition, by the repeal of their charters, the wonder should rather be that they have so long borne with patient endurance an iniquity so grievous; but a high regard for law is so ingrafted on the minds of our people that, rather than violate vested rights, they have with unexampled fortitude borne the most onerous and unrighteous burdens. That the national banks, having their birth in an hour of trying emergencies, when every power of the National Government was exercised to its fullest extent to save the life of the nation, should have received at the hands of the Government extraordinary powers and privileges, ought not to be a matter of surprise. It was not a time for cool deliberation and careful analysis of measures and laws; for the highest of all laws, that of self-preservation, was pressing upon the constant attention of those at the helm of state; nor do I mean now to assail the wisdom and, above all, the patriotism of those who aided in fastening upon us this pernicious system of banking. It had its origin in the necessities of state; but its mission having been fulfilled, its race should now be ended.

And now, in a time of profound peace, when prosperity and plenty prevail throughout the land, we should address ourselves to the work of curing the evils inflicted upon us by the dire necessities of war, and to amend or repeal such laws as were enacted under the pressure of the circumstances I have named. I do not propose to invade or violate the rights guaranteed to these banks by their charters; and, in the bill now before us, I have been careful, I think, to keep within the law, and have confined myself to the single effort to have their circulation exchanged for that of Treasury notes. This, I believe, we have a right to do; nor can it be claimed as an act of hostility or one not justified by their charters.

The whole object and intent of this bill is to restore to the National Government the exclusive right to coin, make, or ordain its own money—a right which the people alone hold in their capacity as sovereigns, and which they may at any time exercise through their representatives in Congress. This right, which is inherent in the people as sovereigns, not having been conferred by them upon any other body, as found in the Constitution of the United States, is retained by the people, and may be exercised by them at any time to make, ordain, or establish money of such material, substance, or quality as they in their wisdom may choose. That every government possesses powers of sovereignty I presume none will deny.

In England it is vested in a king or queen; in Germany and Russia, an emperor. In the two former the sovereign power is partially divided with representative bodies called parliaments. But in the United States all sovereign power not expressly conferred by the Constitution on the Federal Government is vested in the people; and its exercise, when not prohibited by that instrument, cannot be trammeled or prevented by fictions of law or technical theories of abstruse statesmanship, nor silenced by the clamor of political tyros, who for selfish or partisan purposes seek to defeat the sovereign will of the people under the specious cry of "unconstitutional." But the people's representatives, acting not under the authority of the Constitution (for I believe that instrument confers no such power) but in the name of their sovereignty, have delegated this power of making money to the national banks on certain conditions contained in their charters.

And it is very certain that if Congress had not itself the power of making money, it could not confer such a power on the national banks. But this unlimited power always in the hands of the people—and, I trust in God, always to remain there—may, it is said, be abused by leading to such inflation of the circulating medium as to destroy all proportion between intrinsic and fictitious values. To all such carpers and fault-finders I have to say that I believe that in ten, twenty, or fifty years from now there will be Representatives occupying these seats who will be as careful to guard the honor and credit of the Government and as watchful of the interests of their constituents and of the people as we are. I am not of those who believe that all the wisdom, patriotism, and honesty left in this world is now confined within the narrow walls of this Capitol, nor can I believe that when the little handful of us assembled here shall have ceased to exist all these great human attributes will have fled the world.

Let us act well and faithfully our part and fulfill as best we may the duties of the present hour, leaving to those who follow us to meet the demands of the unknown future, never doubting that their duties will be performed with vigilance, wisdom, and patriotism equal if not superior to our own. That any Congress will ever assemble here so ignorant, besotted, or corrupt as to run riot with the credit and honor of the country, and forget so far their high calling as to pursue a course of such madness in the excessive inflation of the money issue of the country as to endanger alike the credit of the Government and prove the utter destruction of healthy business, involving in one common ruin their families, neighbors, and friends, I can never believe; but if I am mistaken it will only prove that self-government is a myth and the destruction of republican institutions is at hand. But, sir, I look to the future with the brightest hopes and most cheerful confidence; and if we now fully discharge our own duties with fidelity and some degree of wisdom we may anticipate, in the happiness conferred on our constituents and people, a rich reward for our labors, leaving the future to take care of itself, as we have taken care of ourselves.

But this sovereign power of the people should be at all times retained in the hands of their immediate representatives, and never under any circumstances donated or delegated to any bank, corporation, or individual, but should be kept under the control of the people, so that if abuses creep in or errors be committed the remedy may be readily applied; and I cannot conceive the possibility of either, with the remedy in our hands. If the people cannot trust themselves they surely gain nothing by trusting to a favored few the exercise of a power so potent for good or evil; and, above all, experience has shown that incorporated banks have been the most mischievous and dangerous instruments, both in our political and business relations, which have gained a footing in our system of government.

Mr. Jefferson, in a letter to John W. Epps, of June 24, 1813, says:

And so the nation may continue to issue its bills as far as its wants require and the limits of its circulation will admit. Those limits are understood to extend with us at present to $200,000,000. But this, the only resource which the Government could command with certainty, the States have unfortunately fooled away, nay, completely alienated to swindlers and sharpers, under the cover of private banks, say too, as an additional evil, that the disposal funds of individuals to this great amount have thus been withdrawn from improvement and useful enterprise, and employed in the useless, usurious, and demoralizing practices of bank directors and their accomplices.

In a letter of December 7, of the same year, he says:

Bank paper must be suppressed and the circulating medium restored to the nation to whom it belongs. It is the only fund upon which they can rely for favors; it is the only source which can never fail them, and it is an abundant one for every necessary purpose. Treasury notes bottomed on taxes, bearing or not bearing interest, as may be found necessary, thrown into circulation will take the place of so much gold and silver, which last, when crowded, will find an efflux into other countries and thus keep the quantum of medium at its salutary level. Let banks continue if they please, but let them discount for cash alone or for Treasury notes.

Mr. Madison, in his message to Congress, December 15, 1815, says:

It is, however, essential to every modification of the finances that the benefits of a uniform national currency should be restored to the community. The absence of the precious metals will, it is believed, be a temporary evil, but until they can again be rendered the general medium of exchange it devolves on the wisdom of Congress to provide a substitute which shall equally enjoy the confidence and accommodate the wants of the citizens throughout the Union. If the operations of the State banks cannot produce this result the probable co-operation of a national bank will merit consideration, and if neither of these expedients be deemed effectual, it may be necessary to ascertain the terms upon which the notes of the Government shall be issued, upon motives of general policy as a common medium.

In his message of December, 1817, he says:

But for the interests of the community at large as well as for the purposes of the Treasury, it is essential that the nation should possess a currency of equal value, credit, and use wherever it may circulate. The Constitution has intrusted Congress exclusively with the power of creating and regulating a currency of that description.

President Jackson, in his veto message, July 10, 1832, says:

If they (Congress) have other power to regulate the currency it was careful to be exercised by themselves and not to be transferred to a corporation.

Again he says, in 1833:

In this point of the case the question is distinctly presented whether the people of the United States are to govern through representatives chosen by their unbiased suffrage, or whether the power and money of a great corporation are to be secretly exerted to influence their judgment and control their decisions. It must now be determined whether the bank is to have its candidates for all offices in the country from the highest to the lowest, or whether candidates on both sides of political questions shall be brought forward as heretofore and supported by the usual means.

Mr. Calhoun, in a speech delivered in the United States Senate in 1837, said:

It is, then, my impression that in the present condition of the world a paper currency in some form is almost indispensable in financial and commercial operations of civilized and extensive communities. In many respects it has a vast superiority over a metallic currency, especially in great and extended transactions, by its greater cheapness, lightness, and the facility of determining the amount. No one can doubt that the Government credit is better than that of any bank; more reliable, more safe. Why should it mix up with the less perfect credit of those institutions? Why not use its own credit to the amount of its own transactions? Why should it not be safe in its own hands, while it shall be considered safe in the hands of eight hundred private institutions scattered all over the country, and which have no other object but their own private profit, to increase which they extend their business to the most dangerous extremes? And why should the community be compelled to give 6 per cent. discount for the Government credit, blended with that of the bank, when the superior credit of the Government could be furnished separately without discount, to the mutual advantage of the Government and the community? But whatever may be the amount that can be circulated, I hold it clear that to that amount it would be as stable in value as gold and silver itself, provided the Government be bound to receive it exclusively with those metals in all its dues, and that it be left perfectly optional with those who have claims on the Government to receive it or not. We are told the form I suggest is but a repetition of the "old Continental money," a ghost that is ever conjured up by all who wish to give the banks an exclusive monopoly of Government credit. The assertion is not true. There is not the least analogy between them. The one is a promise to pay when there was no revenue, and the other a promise to receive in the dues of the Government when there is abundant revenue. We are told that there is no instance of Government paper that did not depreciate. In reply, I affirm that there is none assuming that form I propose that will depreciate. Whenever a paper receivable in dues of Government had anything like a fair trial it has succeeded. Bank paper is cheap to those who make it, but dear, very dear to those who use it, fully as much as gold and silver. It is the little cost of its manufacture and the dear rates at which it is furnished to the community which gives the great profit to those who have a monopoly of the article. Some idea may be formed of the extent of the profit, by the splendid palaces which we see under the name of banking houses, and the vast fortunes which have been accumulated in this branch of business; all of which must ultimately be derived from the productive powers of the community, and of course adds so much to the cost of production. On the other hand, the credit of the Government while it would greatly facilitate its financial operations, would cost nothing or next to nothing, both to it and to the people, and of course would add nothing to the cost of production, which would give to every branch of industry, agriculture, commerce, and manufactures, as far as circultaion might extend, great advantage both at home and abroad.

Sir, I undertake to affirm positively and without the least fear that I can be answered—what heretofore I have but suggested—that a paper issued by the Government with the simple promise to receive in all dues, leaving its creditors to take it or gold and silver, at their option, would, to the extent to which it would circulate, form a perfect paper circulation which could not be abused by the Government, that would be as steady and uniform as the metals themselves.

I shall not go into the discussion now, but on a suitable occasion I shall be able to make good every word I have uttered. I will be able to do more—to prove that it is within the constitutional power of Congress to use such a paper in the management of its finances, according to the most rigid rule of construing the Constitution, and that those at least who think that Congress can authorize the notes of private corporations to be received in the public dues are estopped from denying its right to receive its own paper.

Mr. Benton, in a speech in the Senate in 1838, said:

The Government ought not to delegate this power if it could. It is too great a power to be trusted to any banking company whatever or to any authority but the highest and most responsible which was known to our form of government.

The Government itself ceases to be independent; it ceases to be safe when the national currency is at the will of a company. The Government can undertake no great enterprise, neither of war nor peace, without the consent or co-operation of that company. It cannot count its revenue for six months ahead without referring to the action of that company—its friendship or its enmity, its concurrence or opposition—to see how far that company will permit money to be scarce or to be plenty; how far it will let the money system go on regularly or throw it into disorder; how far it will suit the interest or policy of that company to create a tempest or suffer a calm in the moneyed ocean. The people are not safe when such a company has such a power. The temptation is too great, the opportunity too easy, to put up and put down prices, to make and break fortunes, to bring the whole community upon its knees to the Neptunes who preside over the flux and reflux of paper. All property is at their mercy. The price of real estate, of every growing crop, of every staple article in the market, is at their command. Stocks are their playthings, their theater, on which they gamble daily with as little secrecy and as little morality and far more mischief to fortunes than common gamblers carry in their operations.

To the opinions of these illustrious statesmen I would like to add those of Benjamin Franklin, Gallatin, Hamilton, Campbell, and a host of others, but time forbids. But those quoted established beyond doubt, not only the power of the National Government to ordain and issue a currency of a uniform value throughout the whole country, and equal to all demands of its extended and increasing commerce and industries, but condemn, in the most absolute and unqualified manner, the policy of farming out or otherwise transferring this vast power to national banks or other corporations or individuals.

Let gentlemen but refer to the history of banks and the banking institutions of this country, including national, State, private, and free banks, and they will find a legalized system of fraud, robbery, and general corruption unequaled by any other institutions on the face of the globe. The contemplation of the frauds practiced upon the people under the free-banking laws of Michigan, Indiana, and Illinois, and the Brandon and other banks chartered by the State of Mississippi, to which we might add a multitude in other States, affords a picture so sickening in its details that but few have the courage to encounter the task of searching into the mysteries of the rotten, reeking, stinking mass. It is no wonder that the stern old hero, Jackson, thundered his anathemas against such villainy, and that Benton should spit out his bitterest invectives, while the more calm and philosophic Calhoun should point out the remedy for the horrible malady. Nor can we expect better results from the present system of national banks. A glance at them for the past seventeen years will convince any fair-minded, unbiased man that they are worse than barnacles fastened on the tax-ridden producers of this country. The fact is, that during the first sixteen years of their existence they made a profit of 25 per cent. per annum on their capital stock, which averaged annually $400,000,000. To state it in the aggregate, $400,000,000 produced a net profit in sixteen years of $1,600,000,000. This is no fancy sketch or idle picture, but is evidenced by the sworn reports of the officers of those institutions, as reported and compiled in the statistics prepared by Mr. Spofford, the Librarian of Congress.

Are such profits as these legitimate? I say, no! They are simply robbery, legalized robbery, from the perpetuation of which the people of this country demand relief.

But, sir, from mercenary motives some defenders of what they are pleased to term the "best banking system the world ever saw" will ask, "Are not the holders of the notes of these banks secure?" I answer, yes; but are they better secured than are the holders of the Government Treasury notes, commonly called greenbacks—the currency that was good enough to carry on the war and suppress the rebellion—the currency that was good enough to purchase the Government bonds upon which interest in gold is paid? Are not these notes now good enough to carry on the business of the country and pay off these identical bonds? If not, why not? The facts are, we already hear the plaintive cry from every portion of the land of the mischievous influence and interference in political contests of these national banks; and even on this floor it is believed their potent influence has had its effect. The zeal with which the interests of these chartered monopolies have been advocated in this House has not passed without comment by the country; and the number of gentlemen directly interested in them who occupy seats in this Chamber have been carefully noted by the people who have been less fortunate in finding such high positions of honor and trust.

The considerations I have suggested should admonish us of the stern necessity of withholding from all corporations a power which should never be exercised except by those directly responsible to the people, and whose conduct is at all times within the reach of their revision and restraint. The country must have but one money, and though the material of that money may be of gold, silver, nickel, copper, or paper, it must all be issued directly by the National Government. This is what the people are now clamoring for and what they intend to have; and they also mean to have it in quantity sufficient to answer fully all the wants of wholesome trade; and whether this amount shall be measured by population or the standard of value is not material. If we take the former we find an estimated value of between forty and fifty thousand millions of dollars, or, if equally divided, about $1,000 per capita to every man, woman, and child, while the entire money of the country, gold, silver, and paper, all told, would, if equally divided, give but $15 to each. This disparity calls loudly for a remedy at our hands; and in deciding so important a question it may be profitable to consult the experience of other nations, and foremost among these we find France the most prosperous and wealthy, with less of pauperism and of wretchedness than any other country on the globe, having a circulation of nearly $60 per capita; England, with $27 per capita; Germany, with $33 per capita; while we, with nearly as much national wealth as either, and resources greater than all together, have a circulation of only $15 per capita.

If that stern old patriot, Andrew Jackson, who denounced, with such fierce defiance, as a monster of corruption and iniquity the old national bank, were living to-day, what language would he find sufficient to express his horror of a whole brood of national banks, such as are now flourishing and fattening on the toil and sweat of the American people—fostered and pampered by acts of the people's representatives, some of whom now bid us keep silent, or to speak with bated breath, lest the sovereign people should learn something of the manner in which their demands are baffled, or altogether set at defiance, under the hypocritical pretense that the interests of party will be jeopardized? Or if Thomas Jefferson, the great apostle of American democracy, who warned his countrymen against the danger of intrusting "to a multitude of banks scattered all over the country," whose managers he denounced as "swindlers and shavers," the control of the currency of the country, which he said should remain in and be exercised by the National Government alone, could cast off the cerements of death and behold this host of blood-sucking institutions, unequaled in rapacity since the days of the pestiferous and destructive cloud of locusts in the sorely afflicted land of Egypt, he would no doubt cry, with Simeon of old, "Lord, let now thy servant depart in peace, for I have seen the suffering of my people."

But, sir, I cannot persuade myself to believe that the interests of any party desiring success can ever be endangered by a full and free discussion of questions in which the welfare and prosperity, nay, I believe even the vital interests of the whole people, are so deeply involved. And gentlemen will, if I mistake not, sooner or later learn that the voice of an intelligent people cannot be hushed at the mere diction of men who assume to be their leaders; nor can responsibility be evaded by a sham and a fraud. And if the boldness of my humble words give offense to any one here, I can only say to such that I am but fulfilling a solemn pledge I made to those who sent me here, and whose servant and mouth-piece I am, that I would spare no exertion to procure the passage of a bill such as we now have under consideration to substitute notes of the national Treasury, commonly called greenbacks, for the notes of the national banks, and then restore to the National Government the exclusive right and duty of furnishing to the country a uniform currency resting on the sole responsibility of the nation. And I also positively know that many other gentlemen now before me hold their seats on this floor under similar pledges; and whatever may be their determination, or whatever their course, I shall not deviate from the line of duty which I believe honor and good faith require of me. Sir, I have not yet been long enough in public life to learn the cunning ways which may be deemed necessary for the accomplished politician; but in the school of homespun, country life, aided by the stern teachings of some army experience, I have become imbued with the belief that frank, open honesty is the best policy, and that no man will ever prosper who turns traitor to his God or to his country. Well has the great English scholar and writer, Bulwer, exclaimed: "What a coward a man becomes when he has lost his honor!" And if I should return to my constituents with the brand of "false to my pledge" engraved upon my forehead, I shall indeed feel that I have lost my honor, and deserve the loathsome name of coward.

I want gentlemen to have an opportunity of showing to the people and to the country what confidence may be reposed in the pledges of those seeking their trust and suffrages. And I hope the record in this case, when the yeas and nays are called, will present an exhibit of which none will be ashamed. "By their works shall ye know them." Then let them by their works prove their fidelity to those who have confided in them.

Mr. WISE addressed the committee on the subject of the Department of Agriculture. [His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. SHALLENBERGER moved the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. HENDERSON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. COVERT reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the Union generally, and had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. SHALLENBERGER, (at four o'clock and five minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

By Mr. ATKINS: The petition of citizens of Tennessee, against the passage of Senate bill No. 496, relating to pension claims—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRAGG: Memorial of the board of aldermen of the city of Manitowoc, Wisconsin, for an appropriation of $20,000 to dredge Manitowoc Harbor—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of Jasper N. Davis and 99 others, of Athens County, Ohio, for the better regulation of interstate commerce—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. FERNANDO WOOD: The petition of New York merchants, for a national bankrupt law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, February 16, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

LUCIUS Q. C. LAMAR, a Senator from the State of Mississippi, appeared in his seat to-day.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 2797) for the relief of certain citizens of Lynchburgh, Virginia, and refunding to them taxes improperly collected from them on manufactured tobacco;

A bill (H. R. No. 4439) to remove the political disabilities of Sergeant P. P. Powell, Sixth Regiment United States Cavalry;

A bill (H. R. No. 4432) making additional appropriations for the support of certain Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1880; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 186) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish States, for the use of agricultural colleges, one set of standard weights and measures, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3015) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. R. No. 75) to print the eulogies delivered in the two Houses of Congress upon the late Zachariah Chandler, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from Major C. R. Suter, Corps of Engineers, submitting a plan and estimates for the improvement of the Missouri River in the vicinity of Brownville, Nebraska; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, recommending an appropriation of $96,754.36 for the construction of quarters for officers at Omaha, Nebraska; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers and a report of Major William E. Merrill, Corps of Engineers, of an examination made in compliance with the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879, of the mouth of the Little Kanawha River, West Virginia, to ascertain the adaptability of that locality for an ice-harbor; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT STREET RAILROADS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, of the 9th instant, a statement in detail of the general and special taxes assessed against the several street-railroad corporations of the District of Columbia due and unpaid on January 1, 1880; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

INVITATION TO NORFOLK, VIRGINIA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communication; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table:

NORFOLK AND PORTSMOUTH MEXICAN VETERAN ASSOCIATION.
(ORGANIZED 1873.)
NORFOLK, VIRGINIA, February 12, 1880.

HONORABLE SIR: In accordance with resolution, I am directed by the Veteran Mexican Association of this city to respectfully extend an invitation to yourself, and through you to the honorable members of the body over which you preside, to be present at the ceremonies to be held in this city on the 23d instant in honor of Washington's birthday, the anniversary of the battle of Buena Vista, and the occasion of the national convention of the survivors of the Mexican war.

Respectfully and truly yours,

JAS. F. MILLIGAN,
Norfolk and Portsmouth Mexican Veteran Association.

Hon. W. A. WHEELER,
Vice-President, Washington, D. C.

EDWARD BRADEN AND J. W. ANGUS.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, before the regular morning business proceeds, I rise with a view of asking for the withdrawal of the motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill No. 56 was passed. I see the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. ROLLINS] is in his seat. I will state that the bill (S. No. 56) for the relief of Edward Braden and J. W. Angus was returned from the House at the request of the Senate on a motion filed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. ROLLINS] to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. That motion was not filed for the purpose of reopening the case upon its merits at all, but simply with a view of determining whether or not the reference was sufficient for the Court of Claims to reach the equitable claim of the claimants, an examination of the law——

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator allow me to ask him, would it not be agreeable to him to allow us to dispose of the morning business first?

Mr. MAXEY. This will only take about two minutes. My object is to have the motion withdrawn.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. MAXEY. An examination of the law conferring jurisdictional powers on the Court of Claims has satisfied me that where a claim is referred by Congress, whatever may be the nature of that claim, whether it be on the law side or equity side of the jurisdiction of the court, the reference itself confers upon the court jurisdiction to investigate the case. I have had no great experience with the Court of Claims, and not being well acquainted with its powers I desired only to examine that point. I am satisfied the reference would confer upon the court complete power to examine into the claim, whether it be legal or equitable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks leave to withdraw the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. No. 56) for the relief of Edward Braden and J. W. Angus was passed.

Mr. MAXEY. The motion was entered by the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. ROLLINS.]

Mr. ROLLINS. I entered the motion to reconsider, and I desire to withdraw the motion.

Mr. CONKLING. I rise not to make objection to the withdrawal of this motion; but, after what the Senator from Texas has said, as I know it is sometimes argued in courts that the debates in the two Houses ought to exert some influence upon questions of jurisdiction and construction, I rise only to say that I do not wish for one to be bound in any way by the view of the jurisdiction of the court which any Senator may take. Although I tried to hear every word that the Senator from Texas said, some of his words escaped me; and I simply take occasion to say that I suppose the bill will go, as other such resolutions of reference do, appealing to such jurisdiction of the Court of Claims as that court has by law. Doubtless the Senator means that, and nothing more.

Mr. MAXEY. What I said was, I think, in substance, that the reference itself by Congress to the Court of Claims gave to the court the power to investigate a claim according to the merits of the claim, whether it be a legal or an equitable claim; that whatever it is necessary to do to investigate the claim, the reference carries that power. That is my view.

Mr. CONKLING. And the point of my observation is only that the withdrawal of this motion and the consent of the Senate to its withdrawal, is not equivalent to any expression of opinion whatever but that the jurisdiction of the court is to be left upon the statutes as they stand; that is all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the motion to reconsider? The Chair hears none. The motion is withdrawn, and the bill will be transmitted to the House of Representatives.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CONKLING. I present a petition signed by the officers of the Board of Trade of Oswego, New York, praying for the passage of the bill called the Reagan bill. Accompanying the petition is also a paper, being a report of committees of the New England Shoe and Leather Association, the Boston Merchants' Association, and the Boston Grocers' Association, which seems to be a part of the petition. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I present also a memorial signed by a large number of citizens of New York who were soldiers, who remonstrate, for reasons which they assign, against the passage of the bill pending in the Senate, creating, as they express it, sixty pension districts and sixty pension courts. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I also present the petition of Hiram D. Wood and others, soldiers for the Union in the late war, remonstrating against the passage of the same bill. I move its reference also to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting the memorial of Captain R. H. Jackson and R. T. Frank, First Artillery, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 1008) for the relief of William A. Winder, and the bill (S. No. 390) to authorize the President to restore Dunbar R. Ransom to his former rank in the Army, attention being respectfully invited to the remarks of the General of the Army indorsed thereon.

Mr. HOAR. If the remarks of the General of the Army are very brief, I wish they might be read. If they are of any considerable length, I would not desire it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The indorsement will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, D. C., February 7, 1880.

Respectfully submitted to the honorable Secretary of War; approved and recommended that he transmit this petition to the proper committee of Congress.

Captain Winder resigned his commission in 1866, and Captain Ransom was dismissed after a fair trial in 1872. To restore these as captains and thus cut off from promotion good officers, faithful and true all the time, would be manifestly unjust.

W. T. SHERMAN, General.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the petition of the Colored Men's Protective Union of Savannah, Georgia, praying for the passage of a law authorizing the payment of the balances due depositors in the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company after the assets in the hands of the present commissioners have been properly distributed; which was referred to the Select Committee on the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company.

Mr. THURMAN presented the petition of Eusebia B. Meeks and others, citizens of Miami County, Ohio, praying for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States granting to women the right to vote; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JOHNSTON presented the petition of Orra Langhorne, of Lynchburgh, Virginia, and the petition of Mrs. Jeannie N. Bramhall and Mrs. R. H. Nicholas, of Abingdon, Washington County, Virginia, praying for an amendment to the Constitution granting to women the right to vote; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MORGAN. I present the memorial of William P. Adair, assistant principal chief, John L. Adair, chairman, R. M. Wolf and R. Bunch, Cherokee delegation; P. Porter, D. M. Hodge, Creek delegation; P. P. Pitchlynn, Choctaw delegation; J. M. Bryan, Old Settler, Cherokee commissioner; Charles Blue Jacket and Charles Tucker, Shawnee representatives, memorializing Congress against the passage of an act providing for the establishment of a United States territorial government over the Indian country. Inasmuch as this memorial seems to set out, at least in outline, the case of these various tribes of Indians, in opposition to the proposed legislation which is now pending in the Senate or before its committee, I ask that it be printed, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. GARLAND. The proposition to which the memorial is directed is now before the Committee on Territories, and I suppose it should go to that committee.

Mr. MORGAN. Very well; let it take that reference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Territories, and printed.

Mr. WITHERS. I present the petition of Davenport Morris and 16 other leading merchants, of Richmond, Virginia, praying for legislation on the part of Congress to protect the public against the use of deleterious compounds in the adulteration of foods. I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARLAND. I present the petition of William Roland and others, merchants of Little Rock, Arkansas, of like character to that presented by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS.] I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I present, by request, the petition of Mary E. Willman and others, citizens of Burke County, Georgia, praying for an amendment to the Constitution granting to women the right to vote. I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDOLPH presented the petition of Samuel C. Reeves and others, and the petition of Albert McKim and others, citizens of Burlington, New Jersey, praying for the passage of a law for the equalization of bounties; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the memorial of T. H. Hennesey and other inmates of the Soldiers' Home at Hampton, Virginia, and the memorial of R. G. Bloomingdale and others, citizens of New Jersey, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EATON presented the petition of Anna M. Middlebrook and others, citizens of Bridgeport, Fairfield County, Connecticut, praying for an amendment to the Constitution granting to women the right to vote; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PLUMB presented the petition of Emily J. Briggs, and the petition of Anna C. Wait, of Lincoln Centre, Lincoln County, Kansas, praying for an amendment to the Constitution granting to women the right to vote; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SAUNDERS presented the petition of the county officers of Knox County, Nebraska, praying for the removal of the Santee Indians from their present reserve; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ROLLINS presented the petition of B. L. Cilley and others, citizens of Exeter, Rockingham County, New Hampshire, praying for an appropriation of $35,000 for the purpose of deepening the channel of Exeter River from Great Bay to Exeter, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HAMLIN. I present the petition of Charles Perkins, who represents that he purchased at one time for his own use certain internal-revenue stamps for deeds and other legal instruments; that on the repeal of the law they were left upon his hands; that they were mislaid and could not be found at the time within which they should have been returned by law, and he asks for relief in that regard. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the petition of Lucy A. Snow and others, citizens of Knox County, Maine, praying for a sixteenth article of amendment to the Constitution extending the right of suffrage to all citizens without any distinction founded on sex; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of Samuel Gould and others, citizens of Massachusetts, who suffered damage by the acts of the so-called confederate cruisers, praying for such legislation as will insure a prompt distribution among the claimants of the proceeds of the Geneva award; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of J. H. Walker and others, citizens of Somerset, Bristol County, Massachusetts, praying for a sixteenth amendment to the Constitution insuring the exercise of the right of suffrage without regard to sex; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of S. Hopkins Emery, minister of Cedar street chapel, Taunton, Massachusetts, representing a meeting of citizens of Taunton, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the manufacture, sale, and use of alcoholic drinks; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VANCE presented the petition of P. L. Bridgers & Co. and others, merchants of Wilmington, North Carolina, praying for the passage of a law for the punishment of parties engaged in the use of deleterious compounds in the adulteration of food; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CARPENTER presented the memorial of the mayor and common council of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, in favor of the repeal and abolition of the compulsory legal-tender power of the Treasury notes of the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FERRY presented the petition of Elizabeth Chase and others, and the petition of Miss S. P. Abell and others, of Uniontown, District of Columbia, praying for an amendment to the Constitution granting to women the right to vote; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of D. P. Dobbins and others, superintendents of life-saving stations in the States of Michigan and New York, praying for the passage of a law granting them an increase of salary; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented the petition of Stephen Rossman and 94 others, citizens of Montcalm County, Michigan, praying for an amendment to the patent laws so as to make the manufacturer and vendor alone responsible for infringements; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented the petition of Stephen Rossman and 94 others, citizens of Montcalm County, Michigan, praying for the enactment of a law to prevent unjust discriminations in transportation charges; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MORRILL. I present the memorial of A. A. Niles and numerous Union soldiers of Lamoille County, Vermont, who served in the war of the rebellion, protesting against the passage of the sixty-surgeon bill, so called, now pending in Congress. They represent that it would be a great hardship as well as injustice to them if the bill should pass. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, presented the petition of William Hill and others, citizens of Washington, District of Columbia, praying for the passage of a law authorizing the extension of the improvements recently made on Madison street, in that city; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GARLAND. The Committee on the Judiciary have instructed me to report back the bill (S. No. 331) for the relief of L. A. Morris and recommend its indefinite postponement in view of the fact that there were no facts or information furnished, and after diligent search the committee were unable to get any.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. THURMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 280) for the relief of Anna Gregory, widow of Charles N. Gregory, deceased, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. THURMAN. I am also instructed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4412) to regulate practice in suits brought to recover damages for infringement of patent, to report it back and to say to the Senate that it is not a proper subject-matter for the consideration of the Judiciary Committee, but should go to the Committee on Patents. I therefore move that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from its further consideration, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Patents.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back a resolution of the Legislature of Missouri, in favor of an amendment to the Constitution so as to prevent the Federal courts from exercising or assuming jurisdiction in causes wherein any county or other subdivision of a State is or shall be a party, and to say that the resolution of the Legislature is not in the nature of a memorial to Congress or to the Senate, but is simply a resolution of instruction to her Senators and a request to her Representatives. Therefore the committee ask to be discharged from its further consideration and that the resolution lie on the table.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3992) for the relief of Cyrus B. Ingham, of the Territory of Dakota, Harvey Bryant and Guilford A. Wood, of Kansas, and Richard Parker, of Minnesota, have instructed me to report it back and to ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration. It is not a matter relating to private lands. It ought, perhaps, to go to the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on Private Land Claims will be discharged from its further consideration, and the bill referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2359) for the relief of William D. Oyler, have instructed me to report it back, and ask to be discharged from its further consideration. This is not a private land claim, but I think it ought to go to the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That change of reference will be made.

Mr. FARLEY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1020) for the relief of B. F. Rockefellow, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 983) for the relief of Horace A. W. Tabor, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 899) granting a pension to William O. Morgan, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 637) granting an increase of pension to Lucien Kilbourn, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of George Nichols and others, praying that arrears of pension be granted to Mrs. Fanny Newcome, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2518) for the relief of Nelson Lyon and Jeremiah S. James, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of citizens of Iowa, praying that a pension may be granted to Walter S. Handley, late a private of Company H, First Iowa Cavalry, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of John Davison, asking for a pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 848) granting a pension to Frederick R. Bruner, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 985) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Leggett, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT. The Committee on Pensions also instruct me to report in the matter of the petition of Jabez Matthews and others, of New York, praying for an appropriation to pay the certificates issued by the State of New York to soldiers in the war of 1812, that it does not come within the province of the Committee on Pensions; and to ask that they be discharged from its further consideration, and that the petition be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1148) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to issue twenty-year 5 per cent. bonds of the District of Columbia, to redeem certain funded indebtedness of said District," approved June 10, 1879, reported it with amendments.

Mr. SLATER, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 981) to authorize the Commissioner of Patents to hear and determine the application of Herman Miller for the extension of his patents, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CALL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1072) granting a pension to Arthur W. Irving, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 235) granting an increase of pension to Egbert Olcott, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

BILLS RECOMMITTED.

Mr. GARLAND. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to move that the bill (S. No. 1266) to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United State, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes, be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. The bill (S. No. 983) for the relief of Horace A. W. Tabor and the bill (S. No. 1020) for the relief of B. F. Rockefellow were reported adversely from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads this morning and postponed indefinitely. I move that the vote postponing them indefinitely be reconsidered, and that the bills be recommitted to that committee, as there is some additional evidence to go before the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to reconsidering the vote by which the bills were postponed indefinitely? The Chair hears none. The bills will be recommitted to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.
